After they reached the promised land the pillar of cloud and the pillar of fire were removed and only the Ark remained; but God, as if to remind them forcibly of his presence and leadership, sends the angel Jehovah, armed from head to foot, who revealed himself thus panoplied to Joshua and the hosts of Israel, near Jericho, just before the conquest of the land commenced. Here we have evidence that the Lord knew that his people had made some advance from their degraded condition when first delivered from Egyptian bondage. The Ark, which was the centre of worship, remained as a reminder of God's presence among the people; but during the conquest of Canaan God required them to remember the promise of his presence and leadership as given in the conversation between Joshua and the Captain of the Lord's hosts at Jericho. Thus early in the history of his people God was teaching them to walk in part by faith, and not wholly by sight. The visible evidences of God's presence and leadership continued, however, with opportunities for the increased development of faith throughout the Old Dispensation. Through all these centuries God was preparing his people for a spiritual kingdom and for his spiritual reign over the hearts and consciences of men. Even for some hundred years within the period of the New Dispensation God continued to use supernatural and visible means to strengthen the faith and confirm the hope of his people and to hasten the spreading of his kingdom. [illegible] visible miracles that [illegible] to the eyes of the people ceased, [illegible] kingdom has been growing [illegible] Lord is carrying on his work [illegible] and just as truly as in ancient times; but he is doing it through means that are spiritual, to a much more marked extent, than formerly. Let us not forget that the church of Christ is the church militant. The church is now fighting the battle of the Lord. She is conquering this world for her King, and each one that he has called from death unto life has some part in this holy warfare. Good old Bunyan was right in representing the christian as an armed soldier in the service of his king. We are not our own; we have been bought with a price. We owe service to the Captain of our Salvation. We are subject to the leadership of the Captain of the Lord's hosts. In this warfare some are needed as spiritual guides or leaders, and many are needed in the ranks. Some are needed at the bedside of the wounded, or at the cot of the sick, or in the hospital.

In this service, and in this spiritual warfare, men have their place and women theirs. God may not call the gentler sex to press to the very front of the conflict; he may not, and does not, call upon gentle woman to assume the leadership among his soldiers by rushing into the pulpit and letting her voice be heard in din of the conflict; but she can bind up the wounds of those that the Lord calls to the front, help furnish the sinews of warfare, and in a thousand channels make her influence felt, just as may be the case with the patriotic woman in time of secular warfare.

One special object we have in view in writing on this subject is to impress brethren, and sisters, too, with the fact that God now leads his people just as truly as he did of old in the wilderness. We are sure that one thing that causes even our preachers much trouble and perplexity in their work in different places, is to be satisfied that they are where the Lord has placed them, and hence, that he has work for them to do at such places. It is often the case that those who are not ordained preachers of the word are directed in God's providence, or by his leadership, to places or localities where he needs them, and where he has work for them to do. For instance, God may often direct an intelligent, gifted Baptist, to some town or community where our people are weak, where the church is composed mostly of poor, uninfluential men and women. If God has sent him there he expects, and the denomination expects, the Baptist to play the man. This he does when he at once, at whatever apparent cost of social recognition, or even worldly success, fully identifies himself with his humble brethren and sisters in Christ, and in his own person and work furnishes a kind of church helper and leader that such people may sadly need. But he does not do this when he, (alas, too often true), shows a want of moral courage, and dodges his duty by frequenting other places of worship, or perhaps places of amusement, and scarcely showing in any way his fellowship for his people. If God has placed you then, brother, where you see that you are needed, as a Sunday-school superintendent, clerk of church, or for any other important place in church work, or if you are needed only as a "high private" in the rear rank, be a man, be a true soldier of Jesus Christ, and discharge faithfully your duty. The true soldier will not refuse to go where he is needed; nor will he flinch when he reaches the post of duty. If the doctrines or principles held by your church or denomination of people are precious, and worth contending for in a place where they are already well established, they are doubly precious in another where they are struggling for a foothold and for life. All honor to men or women of social, intellectual and spiritual power, who locate in a community where the Baptist cause is weak, and who at once throw themselves into the scales with their people, and thus count for what they are worth in the establishment of the truth.

And it is all a mistake to suppose that they suffer for this course in the estimation of sensible christian people. If a man for any honest scriptural reason is dissatisfied with his church connection, then it is both manly in him and his duty, to change his church connection but while he claims to be a member of any particular denomination, he should always, regardless of time or place, range himself promptly with his people. Those who would proselyte him, not because they they think he is in error, but simply because they want him for his wealth and influence, in the end, respect him much more for being true to his people, and true to his convictions. For a man to be a mere creature of circumstance is to lose respecpect for himself, and when he is known, the respect of the community in which he lives.

"HIGHER CRITICISM" occupies a great deal of attention in our Northern religious newspapers and assemblies. If less attention were paid to "higher criticism" the Lord's kingdom would be benefitted and there would be fewer higher critics.

REV. A. W. PRICE DEAD.

Rev. L. Johnson of Rockingham sends us the following sad letter, dated May 27th:—

"A gloom has been cast over the little town of Wadesboro by the death of Rev. A. W. Price, which sad event occurred this morning. Funeral services will be held from the Baptist church this evening. The remains will be taken to his old home in Marion, S. C., for interment. For six weeks his precious life trembled in the balance. During that time his sufferings were great, but he bore them without a murmur. Several times he was heard to pray that he might depart and be with Jesus. His sufferings are over, his work is done. It was touching and beautiful to see with what untiring devotion this sorely stricken people ministered to their beloved pastor. All was done that loving hearts and willing hand could do. A more extended notice will be sent later."

Bro. Price was in the prime of manhood—a most exemplary young man and splendid preacher. We with thousands of others mourn his early death. God be merciful to the bereaved ones.

THE life of Spurgeon is a prolific theme for writers at this time. The number of books on the subject continues to increase. This is well. Spurgeon was the greatest preacher of this the best of the centuries. His life can be studied with profit by all christians from the time of his conversion to his death. His great work was accomplished by humble, implicit faith in God and his word. At this time too great stress cannot be placed upon such a life. We commend the subject—the life of Spurgeon—to all the sensational preachers and "higher critics." If each of these could be induced to write a book upon this subject perhaps the effect would be as was the case when a certain atheist undertook to read the Bible that he might be prepared to annihilate it, and by it was himself annihilated—he became an humble christian.

PERSONALS AND OTHER ITEMS.

....I have just heard that Rev. R. T. Bryan is on his way to this country, and that without the consent of the Board at Richmond. Our North Carolina boys seem to have heard of method of missions.—Dr. Pritchard, in Charity and Children.

....Bro. J. E. Peterson of Goldsboro called to see us last Wednesday. He reports considerable activity and progress in the Lord's work in and around Goldsboro. Bro. Peterson is one of the most earnest and efficient workers among the Baptist laymen of the State.

....Rev. J. L. Sproles of Shelby, N. C., wrote us last Wednesday the following good news: "We are in the midst of a gracious meeting. God is richly blessing us in the conversion of sinners and reviving of christians. The meeting is held as a straight out Baptist meeting. Will write you a full account next week."

....Mr. Elias Carr, the nominee of the Democratic party for Governor of North Carolina, was in the city last week, and called to see us. We have been friends for twenty years, but really never expected to see him Governor, though eminently fitted for the distinguished position. The office sought the man in his case.

....The North Missouri Institute of Salisbury, Mo., Prof. G. C. Briggs, formerly of North Carolina, President, will hold its annual commencement June 6th. Rev. J. P. Green, D. D., of St. Louis, will preach the annual sermon. The address before the literary societies will be delivered by Hon. Thos. T. Crittenden of Kansas City, Mo.

....At a meeting in Raleigh on January 26th, 1892, it was moved that the Executive Committee of the Board of Trustees of Wake Forest College meet at the College at 9 a. m. on Tuesday of commencement week "to hear reports of committees and prepare business for the meeting of the Board of Trustees in full session."—J. C. Scarborough.

....Rev. Dr. H. M. Wharton of Baltimore, who is to conduct a revival service in Tryon Street Baptist church, beginning Monday next, is now meeting with unusual success in Portsmouth in a revival there. Dr. Wharton is an able and eloquent speaker, and a rare treat is promised to all in hearing him next week.—Charlotte Observer, May 27.

....Rev. D. S. Williams of Texarkana, Ark., now eighty-three years, has moved to Allenaville, Ky. He was once president of our Convention. He writes: "The dear old paper has all the vigor and energy of its youth, and I do hope that it may ever be a blessing to the cause of the Master in the dear old State of my nativity. God bless you and the dear old RECORDER."

....The Baptists of Asheville with Rev. J. L. White and Rev. J. Q. Adams as their leaders, are keeping step with the advance of things about them. The First church is just finishing one of the finest houses in the State, and the French Broad church is doing a good work. Evangelist Simmons, with Professor and Mrs. Towner, is beginning a meeting with them.—Baltimore Baptist.

....Rev. A. B. Hunter writes: "Ten have joined the church of late—seven since Bro. Hutson came. He was here about one week. His work here was good. His preaching was sound and scriptural. We were very sorry that his mother's illness took him away in the midst of the meeting, as we had hoped he could continue at least two weeks. He and family have our sympathy in their affliction."

....A brother, in a State south of this, and who is unwilling his name should be mentioned, has promised to give $90.000 to the Centennial Missionary Fund, designating the same for special work under our Foreign Mission Board. This makes about $40.000 thus far secured on the $250.000 proposed. This is a good beginning, but it needs to be vigorously followed up.—Western Recorder.

....Dr. Parkhurst's sympathizers held a large and enthusiastic meeting, recently, in Cooper Union hall, New York City.

....For the commencement of Wake Forest College the Seaboard Air Line will sell reduced rates as follows: Charlotte, $6.95; Durham, $2.85; Forest City, $9.45; Henderson, $1.50; Lattimere, $8.95; Lincolnton, $7.90; Maxton, $5.75; Raleigh, 85c; Rutherfordton, $9.65; Sanford, $2.90; Shelby, $8.60; Weldon, $3.75; Wilmington, $7.30. Tickets to be sold June 4th to 7th inclusive; final limit June 11th.

....Rev. A. C. Dixon says in the Baltimore Baptist of May 26th the following: "Last Sunday I spent with my parents in Shelby, the home of my childhood. At 11 a. m. not less than 3,500 people gathered in the grove of the court house square and listened for more than one hour to a sermon on the text, "Come, for all things are now ready." Before me were hundreds whom I knew in childhood, and the tender memories of the past made preaching the gospel they love a pleasant task."

....A resolution was introduced by Rev. Dr. J. M. King of New York before the quadrennial conference of the Methodist Episcopal church in session at Omaha and adopted declaring "that the appropriation of money by the national government for ecclesiastical education was not in accordance with the principles of the constitution and that the churches should refuse to receive money from the government for the education of the Indians." This is good doctrine for any and all ecclesiastical bodies.

....On his return to Atlanta from Richmond, whither he had been on denominational business, Rev. I. T. Tichenor stopped over and spent Sunday last in Raleigh. In the absence of Rev. Dr. Carter at Chapel Hill, Dr. Tichenor kindly consented to preach in the morning for the First church of this city. The discourse was a stimulating one, and urged a more thorough consecration of the means and energies of Baptists in the propagation of the gospel of Christ. The sermon was based on Acts 4: 33–37.

....The Annual Meetings of the Baptist churches of England were held in London the first week in May. The report of the Council of the Baptist Union showed a slight growth in the denomination, the members having increased from 330,163 to 334,164. There has been a falling off in the number of pastors from 1,874 to 1,841, but an increase of 155 local preachers. The amalgamation of the "General" and "Particular" Baptists had been accomplished successfully during the year with satisfactory results.—Independent.

....Rev. Thos. Dixon, Jr., delivered the literary address before the Literary Society of Crozer Theological Seminary last week. Subject, "The Preacher of the Future." The New York Examiner says of the address: "The story is told that the late Dr. Magoon once said that the way to be eloquent is to get chock full of the subject, then pull out the bung and let nature caper. That, I should judge, is Mr. Dixon's plan." He was certainly full of the subject, and he as certainly spoke with great freedom and force. The preacher of the future, as he described him, is probably about such a preacher as he himself is. His stories were pat, and exceedingly well told, his manner was bold, nervous, and energetic, and his matter was weighty. He said nothing which his cooler judgment might not have approved, but even if he had much could be pardoned to one who speaks with so great rapidity and intensity. His address will be remembered and will do good."

....The San Francisco Chronicle, quoted by the Journal and Messenger, publishes an account of "The Wilson Baptismal Party." After telling of the elaborate decorations of Mr. Alexander W. Wilson's house, and of the guests assembled, the Chronicle says: The ceremony of baptism according to the Presbyterian creed was then performed, and the youngsters—Bernice Drucker Wilson and Alexander August Wilson—were received into the christian fold and placed under the guardianship of their respective sponsors. After the ceremony the guests amused themselves in dancing to excilent music furnished by Yanke's band until 12 o'clock, when the doors leading to the spacious dancing room were thrown open, revealing a most beautiful supper. Wine flowed freely, and mirth, joy and good wishes were enjoyed by all." The paper stated that "the ceremony of baptism" was performed by the "Rev. Dr. Mackenzie," but what were his relations to the dancing and the wine, the paper did not state. This whole performance may be taken as a sample of much of the fashionable religion of the day.—Western Recorder.

....Rev. W. C. Lindsay in the Baptist Courier, writing on the "dead line of forty" says: "I went to the Convention in Atlanta and, of course, heard the usual amount of talk about the dead line of forty. Let me explain to the uninitiated that this phrase expresses the idea entertained by some that the churches do not want as pastors ministers who are over forty years old. May I venture a suggestion to the brethren who think thus? First. Since the churches desire young men, be young. The churches are right about it. It is an inexcusable weakness to grow old now. Only lazy men can grow old. How can a live man grow old with new people, new ideas, new methods, new discoveries, all about him? It is impossible! What the churches want is a live man; and with present surroundings one can have, and ought to have, more life at sixty than at thirty. Stay young. Second. Since you are to be shelved at forty make yourself a home before that time. Take a field, or create a field, and make yourself necessary to it; so necessary to it that they can't let you go. Root yourself in the hearts of individuals and families. Get your grip and hold it. Frolic with the young and pray with the dying. Plant new crops and wear out books."

From Our Correspondent at Philadelphia.

Dear Recorder:—The Home Mission Society gave considerable emphasis to the work in the South among the colored people, and quite a number of colored brethren spoke, among them White of Georgia, Roberts of South Carolina, Toomer of Arkansas and others. Some of them spoke well, and all hopefully of their race. Dr. Wayland offered a set of resolutions setting forth the oppression of the colored people in the South, which was very much in keeping with his former utterances on that subject.

Dr. J. D. Fulton offered a set of resolutions concerning the World's Fair, with severe strictures on the Catholics.

Dr. H. L. Morehouse offered his resignation as Secretary of the Home Mission Board, which was reluctantly accepted. Complimentary resolutions were passed concerning him, and his salary was, by the vote of the Society, continued for twelve months.

Dr. C. R. Henderson of Detroit, Michigan, was elected to the Secretaryship.

On Friday night the session was held in Grace Temple church, Russell H. Conwell, D. D., pastor. The house is the largest church edifice in the city, has four thousand sittings, and fills the bill of a substantial, comfortable and spacious building. The anniversary sermons will all be preached in this building on Sunday.

On Friday night the subject was the "Celebration of Religious Liberty." Dr. Burrage had suffered an accident and could not be there, but sent his paper which was read by Dr. Cranfill. Dr. J. C. Long read a closely prepared paper. Rev. T. Edwin Brown read the memorial resolutions to Congress, and Dr. MacArthur of New York seconded them by a strong and enthusiastic speech, and the resolutions were passed by a rising vote.

Saturday afternoon the American Baptist Education Society held an inspiring meeting, both in the report of the Secretary and the addresses by the giants—Dr. Welling, President of Columbian University, Washington City, Dr. A. H. Strong of Rochester Theological Seminary, New York, Dr. Harper of the Chicago University, Dr. Morse of the same institution, and Dr. E. G. Robinson.

Another session will be held to-night at 7:30, to be addressed by Dr. Taylor of Vassar College, on Female Education, and Dr. F. H. Kerfoot of Louisville, Ky.

The spirit of the meetings seems to be good. But the contrast with the Southern Baptist Convention is striking in many respects.

The next meeting of the Anniversaries goes to Denver, Colorado. J. B. B.

Wake Forest Commencement.

The commencement will begin Monday, June 6th, with the Class day exercises of the Senior Class at 8:15 o'clock p. m. Orator—O. H. Dockery, Jr. Prophet—I Hardesty. Poet—W. A. Garland. Historian—J. P. Spence. W. B. Daniel is President, and Robert Lide (of S. C.) is Secretary.

The Executive Committee will meet Tuesday morning, and the Alumni Address will be delivered at night by Dr. Ramsay of Georgia.

On Wednesday the Trustees will meet. At 11 o'clock a. m., Hon. J. W. Bailey of Texas will address the Societies. His fame as an orator of great popular power, and as the youngest member of Congress will doubtless draw numbers to hear him. The Baccalaureate sermon will be preached at 8:15 p. m. by Rev. C. H. Jones of Tenn. A brief meeting of the Students' Aid Association will be held Wednesday night after the public exercises.

On Thursday at 11 o'clock a. m. will begin the exercises of Commencement day. Social reunion at 8:15 p. m. Marshal of the Philomathesian Society—D. M. Prince, F. P. Hobgood, W. A. Smith. Euzelian Society—Geo. W. Blanton, W. A. Jones, A. S. Joyner. Music by First Regiment Band, Virginia.

The N. C. Bap. Hist. Soc. adjourned at Goldsboro to meet at Wake Forest on Tuesday of Commencement week. This meeting will probably be at 4 p. m., Tuesday.

The R. & D. R. R. officials have agreed to sell return tickets at reduced rates to Raleigh from all their stations in the State from June 4–7, good until June 11th. The Seaboard Air Line will doubtless do the same, though I have not yet received a reply to my formal application. It is hoped that excursion trains will leave Raleigh on Wednesday and Thursday at 10 o'clock, returning after the exercises at night. Announcement will be made in the daily papers.

The Alumni meeting after the address on Tuesday night is likely to be of unusual importance and interest.

ANNUAL CATALOGUE.

The Annual Catalogue for '91–2 is published to-day. Copies will be sent to all old students whose addresses are known at the College. If you know of any young man who ought to receive one, please mention his address on a postal card. The work of the past session is nearly ended. Planning and work for the session of '92–3 has already begun. Now let all the friends of the College co-operate together to bring together at Wake Forest next September the Baptist young men of North Carolina who are prepared to receive Collegiate training and who really wish to secure it.

CHARLES E. TAYLOR.

Wake Forest, May 28, 1892.

Moneys Received for Endowment.

Please acknowledge as received for the Endowment under proposition of Mr. J. A. Bostwick, the following:

May 3d, 1892, Rev. C. B. Justice, $12.50; Miss Annie E. Justice, 12.50; May 24th, 1892, Mrs. James G. Burt, 25.00.

THOMAS H. BRIGGS,
Treasurer Wake Forest College.

Raleigh, May 25, 1892.

Ex-Gov. St. John in Raleigh.

Ex-Gov. St. John of Kansas, who was nominated on the Prohibition ticket for the Presidency, spoke in Raleigh on last Thursday to a large audience. The Governor is a man about fifty-five years of age, of medium size, gray eyes, hair and moustache, and weighs about 175 pounds. He has a good voice, well trained, strong, distinct and without a brogue. His points are well put, his humor bright and abundant, his anecdotes fresh and well told. His address was interesting and pleasing.

He paid his attentions to four political parties—the Democratic, Republican, Prohibition, and People's or Third party. He declared that the two old parties were unworthy of the support of patriots and christians. He commended Cleveland as the best President this country has had in our generation, and as a man far ahead of his own party. He declared himself against all tariff legislation and an out and out free-trader. He said the Prohibition party was the great party of the future. He spoke in eulogy of the Third party and in favor of nearly all the planks of its platform, though he was silent about the pension matter and woman's suffrage. It may be that he speaks in favor of these in other latitudes.

The Prohibition party, it is said, pays Gov. St. John's expenses for going over the country making speeches, but it is evident, after hearing him, that the Third party people ought to pay at least half of his expenses.

In many of his statements, the Governor was inaccurate. He stated that the consumption of intoxicating liquors, per capita in this country, had largely increased in the past thirty years. This may be true in the West where there is a large foreign population (though this is doubtful), but it is not true in North Carolina and in other parts of the South. It is manifest that the use of liquor, as a beverage in the South, has been on the decrease since the war. Before the war, it was almost impossible to have a large secular gathering of the people in the South where there was not an exhibition of more or less drunkenness, especially on muster days and during court week. There is also less private drinking among the Southern people now than before the war. Then it was thought the proper thing to set out the decanter to all visitors, and its daily use by members of the family was apt to be pretty general. Now it is hardly respectable in polite society to set out strong drink to visitors, and the milder drinks on social occasions are more under the ban than formerly.

Gov. St. John in his address made another mistake, but which is frequently made by prohibition speakers, in holding up to the contempt of the people the license system, State and National, required in the sale and manufacture of intoxicating liquors, claiming that the government is in partnership with the man to whom the license is granted. This is not true. The license system is a distinct advance in the temperance movement. Strike it down where it exists (and where prohibition has been voted down), and it will hurt the temperance cause to an incalculable extent.

Prohibition here among our people, divorced from politics, commends itself. It has and will succeed best as an independent proposition. While prohibitory laws may be evaded, still there is less intoxicating liquors used where prohibition prevails than under any other system. Prohibition of the sale of liquor as a beverage is an end to be sought for the highest good to all the people, yet the advance already made under existing laws ought not to be underrated. The political parties in this State, in their platforms a few years ago, demanded the abolition of the internal revenue laws of the United States. This doctrine should not be subscribed to. While the internal revenue laws ought to be properly and justly enforced, they ought not to be abolished. Their abolition would mean the free manufacture of intoxicating liquors; the free manufacture would mean the free use of intoxicating liquors; a copper-worm still would be upon many large plantations, and the people would be very much as they were in regard to intoxicating liquors before the war.

The license system, while not the best system, is a distinct advance in the temperance movement, whether State or National, and when a license is required for the sale or manufacture of liquor, the government is not in partnership with the man who gets the license. It is a police and repressive measure, and no man understands this better than the man who has to get the license.

There is too great a tendency apparent on all sides to decry that which exists as worthy only of contempt if there is something new to be proposed. This is not right nor wise. This is the main fault with Gov. St. John's speech here; while bright and entertaining, it is open to criticism along this line at several points. J.

Candor.

The closing exercises of the Candor Academy came off yesterday, the 25th. The exercises were seen by a large number of people, estimated at fifteen hundred or two thousand. The declamation by the young men, and the music rendered by the young ladies, were very good. They did credit to themselves, showing they possessed fine mental gifts.

Mr. J. W. Dixon is one of the students of Wake Forest College, and for the number of years he has been teaching, his school at Dover, Moore county, was one of success, and for the time he has been at Candor he has beyond all doubt shown that he has but few equals as a teacher.

Miss Mary Turner, the music teacher in the school, is well prepared to meet the demand of any young lady wishing to receive instruction in this department. She is also well up in the department of drawing, as has been shown by the drawings executed by one of her students in school.

I can heartily recommend Mr. Dixon and his school to all parents wishing to have their daughters and sons educated.

The annual address was delivered by Rev. J. W. Patton of Liberty, N. C. It was simple, plain and practical. He spoke in an easy way, and made his address very pleasant. It will do much good, as it was the very thing that was needed in this community.

The social gathering in the school building last evening was very large and was one of much pleasure to the students and young people.

Best wishes to Mr. Dixon for his future success as teacher. May he live long and do much good in his noble calling.

W. A. BARRETT.

Commencement of Salem Female Academy.

The commencement exercises of the ninetieth annual session of Salem Female Academy closed here at noon to day.

The ceremonies began last Sunday when Rev. Walter W. Moore of Hampden-Sidney, Virginia, delivered the Baccalaureate sermon in the Moravian church at 11:30 a. m., and Rt. Rev. Edward Rondthaler preached in the same place at 7:30 p. m. Both sermons were of a very high order.

Monday and Tuesday evenings were devoted to the reading of essays by the members of the graduating class.

On Wednesday there was a formal meeting of the Alumnæ of the institution in Academy chapel, which was followed by a social reunion.

In the evening a grand concert was given, the conspicuous feature of which was the rendition of Handell's oratorio, "The Messiah," under the directorship of Prof. Paul Schmolck. This was so well rendered that those competent to judge say its equal has never been produced outside the great musical conservatory of Germany. It was certainly worth the travel of a thousand miles to hear.

Thursday's exercises embraced the salutatory by Miss Emma Kapp of North Carolina, the class essay by Miss Blanch Wood of North Carolina, the annual address by Dr. Winston, President of the University of North Carolina, and the valedictory by Miss Ava Stroup of Texas. All of these were excellent. The salutatory was especially fine. Dr. Winston made a pleasing reference to the close relations existing between the State University and the Academy, in which he said that "in 1819 a young man graduated at the University, and in 1820 a young lady graduated at the Academy; that in 1822 these two were united in marriage, and in 1846 occupied the White House together." Many great men have delivered orations here on such occasions, but no one ever made a better impression than Dr. Winston. His address, which related to the educational interests of the State, was indeed admirable.

The following are the names of the graduating class:

North Carolina—Hattie Adams, Daisy Brooks, Edna Fisher, Agnes Fogle, Ella Hege, Emma Kapp, Frances Leach, Christiana McFadden, Blanche Morgan, Lizzie Patterson, Bessie Purnell, Annie Penn, Loni Siddall, Sadie Siceloff, Tilla Stockton, Onie Terrill, Florence Tise, Blanche Wood, Hessie Yancey, Lillie Yancey.

Florida—Annie Adams, Carrie Ollinger.

Georgia—Lillian Crenshaw, Mamie Lewis.

Tennessee—Ollie Fain, May Franklin, Alice Gillespie, Alice Rawlings.

South Carolina—Mary Clark, Ethel Morris, Mary Wood.

Texas—Cleora Hewson, Eldred Mallory, Fannie Pace, Ava Stroup.

Virginia—Annie May.

Alabama—Mary Stillwell.

The session just closed was one of the most prosperous in the history of the Academy. The total enrollment reached 327, representing twenty-one States and the Dominion of Canada. The graduating class numbered thirty-seven, and the degree of A. B. was conferred upon nineteen post graduate students. All this shows that Salem Female Academy maintains its old position among the foremost institutions of the country devoted to the higher education of women.

This institution has in its principal, Rev. John H. Clewell, one of the livest and best educators in the South.

Franklin's Essay on How to Keep a Full Purse.

The following essay, written by Dr. Benjamin Franklin, more than a hundred years ago, is of as much importance now as when written, and the advice, if followed, would work a great revolution in the financial condition of many people. D. M. L.

"THE WAY TO MAKE MONEY PLENTY IN EVERY MAN'S POCKET.

At this time, when the general complaint is that 'money is scarce,' it will be an act of kindness to inform the moneyless how they may reinforce their pockets. I will acquaint them with the true secret of money-catching, the certain way to fill empty purses, and how to keep them always full. Two simple rules, well observed, will do the business:

1st. Let honesty and industry be thy constant companions; and secondly, spend one penny less than thy clear gains.

Then shall thy hide-bound pocket soon begin to thrive, and will never again cry with an empty void; neither will creditors insult thee, nor want oppress, nor hunger bite, nor nakedness freeze them. The whole hemisphere will shine brighter, and pleasure spring up in every corner of the heart. Now, therefore, embrace these rules, and be happy. Banish the bleak winds of sorrow from thy mind, and live independent. Then shalt thou be a man, and not hide thy face at the approach of the rich, nor suffer the pain of feeling little when the sons of fortune walk at thy right hand; for independence, whether with little or much, is good fortune, and placeth thee on even ground with the proudest of the golden fleece.

Oh, then, be wise, and let industry walk with thee in the morning, and attend thee until thou reachest the evening hour for rest. Let honesty be as the breath of thy soul, and never forget to have a penny, when all thy expenses are enumerated and paid; then shalt thou reach the point of happiness, and independence shall by thy shield and buckler, thy helmet and crown; then shall thy soul walk upright, nor stoop to the silken wretch because he hath riches, nor pocket an abuse because the hand that offers it wears a ring set with diamonds."

Rev. C. W. Blanchard Vindicated.

WHEREAS, A difference has occurred between our brother and pastor, Rev. C. W. Blanchard, and Mr. R. L. Steed, in a settlement of a financial transaction, and there are many things being said derogatory to the christian fairness and integrity of Bro. Blanchard. We have carefully inquired into the whole affair and find that in our judgment Bro. Blanchard has intended nothing but that which is just and right between man and man and before God, as evidenced by his willingness and proposition to leave the case to referees and abide their decision, and also by the certificate of the Justices of the Peace who tried the case, stating that he acted in a spirit of fairness. Therefore,

Resolved, That we (the members of Pleasant Grove Baptist church), in conference assembled, do hereby express our unshaken confidence in our esteemed brother, Rev. C. W. Blanchard, as a citizen, christian and pastor, and request all lovers of truth and christianity to unite with us in defence of his character against any unjust assault. And that these resolutions be placed on our church record, and a copy sent to the BIBLICAL RECORDER for publication.

The above was unanimously adopted by the church and congregation assembled at Pleasant Grove Baptist church May 23d, 1892. H. W. NORRIS, Mod. pro tem.

Quarterly Statement.

During the past three months I have made 309 religious visits in and around Raleigh, and found eleven families without the Bible, thirty neglecting church, one of whom said he had not been to church in more than twenty-five years. I talked on religion with 879 persons, in which there seemed to be a proper appreciation of it. I gave over sixty thousand pages of excellent tracts, and in every case they were kindly received. With many the reading of these has quickened to a better christian life and work for others. Three weekly cottage prayer-meetings are being held, in which one was converted, and others are seeking the Lord. Forty-one dollars have been voluntarily sent to me or the committee to aid in my support, and help secure Bibles and tracts, and thirty dollars' worth of them have been carefully selected to meet the needs of all classes, which we hope to be able to get soon, and also more Bibles.

The need now is great for this house to house and face-to-face talking, just as Paul saw it, and says, "I ceased not to warn every one night and day with tears." Acts 20: 31. As evil is active to ruin souls, let the wise and good be more active with loving truth and prayer to save them. "Help us to help each other, Lord." I am willing to live sparingly myself, if need be, to do my part, if others will say and act as Paul said and done—"Without ceasing I have remembrance of thee in my prayers night and day." 2 Tim. 1: 3.

W. J. W. CROWDER, Colporter.

Ordination.

Pursuant to the call of Shelby Baptist church, a presbytery of brethren from the neighboring churches met on Sunday evening, the 22d, for examining and setting apart fully to the work of the gospel ministry our Bro. J. W. Suttle.

The examination was conducted by the pastor of the church after a most rigid order. His christian experience and call to the ministry proved highly satisfactory. He was found to be sound in the faith and orthodox as to church polity.

The ordination sermon was preached by the pastor, J. L. Sproles, at the request of the candidate, and Bible presented.

The ordination prayer was offered by Rev. G. W. Rollins, a co-laborer of Rev. Joseph Suttle, grandfather of the candidate.

The charge was delivered by Rev. J. M. Bridges, who had the pleasure of baptizing the said brother several years ago.

After laying on of hands by the presbytery, the congregation sang,

"On Christ the solid rock I stand,
All other ground is sinking sand."

The benediction was pronounced by the candidate.

Bro. Suttle is in charge of the 17th and Main Mission, Louisville, Ky. He will return to his work in a few days.

We thank God that he has called another one of of our young men into the ministry. We trust and have reason to believe that he is calling two more of our number into his work. J. L. SPROLES.

Sunday-school Associations.

The following are the times and places of meeting of Sunday-school Associations:

Elkin—Rock Creek ch., June 11, 12.
Robeson—Big Branch ch., Aug. 3, 4.
South Fork—Mt. Bethania ch., July 29–31.

Will not some of the brethren in the other Sunday-school Associations inform me at once of the time and place of meeting of their next Sunday-school Association, so that I may publish the same and make arrangements to be present if possible?

C. DURHAM, Cor. Sec.

The Convention Teacher this year is running three series of articles as follows: On "Missions," by F. M. Ellis, D. D.; on "Bible Character," by W. R. Hatcher, D. D.; on "Sunday-school Instruction," by John A. Broadus, D. D. The June number has the first of three articles from B. H. Carroll, D. D., on "My Infidelity and What Became of It?" and the second of four articles from Prof. J. R. Sampey, D. D., on the "Old Testament's Prophets." In July Dr. Hiden will begin a series of articles on "Great Themes in Simple Statement," and Dr. H. G. Weston a series on the "Acts of the Apostles." See advertisement in another column of this issue.

The commencement exercises of the Chowan Baptist Institute began on May 31st. Rev. R. VanDeventer of Henderson preached the Baccalaureate sermon.

The exercises in connection with the commencement occasion of Peace Institute, Raleigh, are in progress. Rev. C. M. Payne of Concord preached the sermon before the graduating class on Sunday morning last in the First Presbyterian church of Raleigh.

ST. ANNAS ASYLUM, New Orleans, La., Sept. 5th, 1891.

MR. CHAS. A. CONRAD.

Dear Sir:—A feeling of gratitude for my own recovery and a hope that others may benefit by my experience leads me to give you a history of my case of rheumatism and of the efforts made to cure or relieve me. I have suffered from rheumatism for nearly twenty years, which grew worse, until suffering and poverty drove me to the charity hospital, where I remained under treatment three months. I was then discharged, with the assurance that I could never walk again without crutches, as I was then doing, my rheumatism having grown worse while I was there—all the joints of my right leg swelled to more than double the natural size.

I was then offered a home in this institution which I accepted last April.

I am now sixty-one years of age, had always, until crippled by this disease led an active life, supporting myself comfortably, and became very unhappy living on charity. Hearing this, several ladies who were acquainted with me and what I had done during the war, wrote requesting the officers to treat me with the Electropoise, and I have now had eleven treatments of two hours a day, three times a week. After the third treatment all pains disappeared, I threw away my crutches and am now able to walk entirely without assistance. I feel sure that in a very short time I shall be able to leave the Asylum and make my own living. In addition to this my general health has been much improved and is as good as could be expected of any one my age.

Very respectfully,
MRS. MARY E. WILBERT.

The facts stated by Mrs. Wilbert in the proceeding communication, in so far as they relate to her residence in this city (St. Annas) asylum, her condition when she came here, for she could not walk without her crutch, and now she goes up and down stairs without assistance, induces me to give my testimony to the fact of her having derived great benefit from her treatment with the Electropoise. Her eyesight has also been wonderfully improved, for she could do nothing without glasses, and now she can thread a very fine needle without them.

Respectfully, M. E. ODDEN,
Matron of St. Annas Asylum.

For all information regarding the Electropoise, write to Atlantic Electropoise Co., Washington, D. C.

Talks About Land.—No. 1.

BY JUDGE R. W. WINSTON.

LAND OF THE FARM.

North Carolina is chiefly concerned with agriculture. Therefore my first talks will be about the land of the farm. In our Code this is called the landlord and tenant act.

Now we all know that when a man rents his land to another, all crops made on the land are deemed to be in the possession of the landlord until (1) all rents are paid, (2) the advances are paid, (3) all the stipulations of the renting are performed.

Some practical questions arise in this connection. Suppose that in May, 1892, a merchant sells the tenant two tons of fertilizer with which to make the crop; takes a chattel mortgage on the same, and has the mortgage registered. Suppose that, after May, 1892, the landlord advances meat and meal to the same tenant. At the end of the year there is not crop enough to pay both. Which loses, the merchant with his mortgage registered before the supplies were advanced, or the landlord? The statute provides that the lien of the landlord shall be ahead of all others, so he will be paid first.

Again, suppose that, near the end of the year, the tenant neglects the crop after it is made, suffers it to waste, and does not house it. What remedy has the landlord? As the statute provides that the land-owner has title to all crops, it would occur to anyone that he might seize the same at any time. But, in the above circumstances, our courts have held that the land-owner cannot seize the crop before the end of the year, if by agreement his rent is not due till then. But if no agreement is made as to when rents are due, in the circumstances above set forth, the landlord can seize the crops in November or December, or perhaps earlier. Quite an interesting little case occurred down in Edgecombe a few years ago.

F. M. Leigh owned a tract of land. Van Riddick became the cropper of Leigh. Van Riddick wanted some advances to make the crop, so he executed, in January, an agricultural lien to a merchant named Thigpen. In June the crop "got in the grass." So Van Riddick gave it up and left.

Mr. Leigh, the landlord, then said to Thigpen, "You had better have Riddick's crop made, or you will lose your debt." Thigpen replied, "You go ahead and cultivate the crop, pay yourself rent and advances and expenses, and pay me the balance." "If I do, you shall not have one cent." "We will see," says Thigpen.

Leigh, the landlord, did cultivate the crop, and after paying his rent and all the expenses, the sum of fifty dollars was left over. Now who was entitled to it?

The court held that the merchant got nothing. For, Thigpen had only the right to have his advances paid out of Riddick's share of the crop. But Riddick had no share, so Thigpen had nothing.

If the tenant removes any portion of the crop from the land without permission, without giving the land owner five days' notice, and not having paid the rent, he is liable to a criminal action. So also if the landlord unlawfully, wilfully, knowingly, without process of law and unjustly seizes the tenant's crop, when the tenant owns nothing, he may be indicted. Appealing to the criminal law is not, however, pleasant. Besides the land-owner has a still better remedy of which he is doubtless not aware. Let us see. Down in Pitt county, in 1879, a Mr. Belcher rented his land to one Butts. Belcher the landlord, and Butts the tenant, had the cotton ginned and baled. One bale was sold by consent of Belcher. The other bale Butts sold without Belcher's consent to a merchant named Grimsley. Now Mr. Grimsley did not know, when he bought and paid for the cotton, that Butts owed Belcher and that Belcher had any lien on the bale of cotton. Belcher demanded the cotton of Grimsley, and finally sued him. Mr. Grimsley said, "I bought the bale of cotton in the open market, just as I had bought hundreds of other bales. I did not know that Mr. Belcher had any lien on the cotton." It matters not, said the court. It is a question of title, and Belcher has the title. Caveat emptor, let the purchaser beware, applied with full force to that case.

In our tobacco counties much tobacco is sold by tenants, and sometimes without the landlord's consent. In all such cases the warehouseman or purchaser is responsible to the land-owner for all tobacco sold.

My next paper will speak of the reciprocal legal duties and responsibilities of the land-owner and his laborers, or "hands."

The Judiciary Committee of the House of Representatives has made a divided report with reference to the proposed amendment of the Constitution empowering Congress to make a uniform law of marriage and divorce. The majority of the committee opposes, and the minority favors, the amendment. It is to be hoped that the House will side with the minority. When the Constitution was shaped, there was substantial unanimity among the States regarding marriage and divorce, and the present clash of laws was unforeseen. The social and property complications that are possible under our existing laws almost pass belief when they are plainly stated. It is absurd to give to Congress power to legislate on a question like bankruptcy, for example, while denying to it power to legislate on the more fundamental and universally important question. It is true that a national law might be defective; it might approach nearer to the laxity of some States than to the stringency of others; but it would have this inestimable advantage: it would do away with the present [illegible] and settle the legal status of [illegible] and child. It would [illegible] facilities for travel, de[illegible] effectually and for[illegible]

Scattering Thoughts.

BY SCATTERHEAD.

"Zaccheus came down and received him joyfully."

There is a mighty coming down with the sinner before Christ comes to abide with him. Christ don't climb up after a sinner stuck up on a high "perch." The sinner may have to climb up over many obstacles to get a view of the Lord, and when he gets a good view of him, he is very willing to accept the invitation to "come down." A man who does not care enough for Christ to make an effort to see him, will certainly not have him for his guest. Christ don't want the sinner to do any tidying up in his house before he enters; but all he wants is for the poor fellow to see what an awful mess it is in, being filled with all kinds of loathsome objects. The sinner generally tries his hand towards fixing up his house, and make it nice for the Lord; but he always finds all his gilding and scouring don't add to the looks, but the more he works the worse it looks. Christ tells the sinner that he alone is able to cleanse it, and that he will make it fit for his presence when he enters. The sinner finds he makes a mighty sorry out towards house cleaning, and the simple creature has during all his fixing, and trying to fix, kept the blessed Lord outside. Heap of "old self" has been sticking to the sinner. Christ enters when the sinner views his undone condition and is made to cry out in the earnestness of his soul, "Come in, blessed Master, take full possession—none of self but all of thee." Christ steps in at once, the house is thoroughly cleansed by his blood, and he becomes a welcome friend.

Christ's entrance gives joy. There never was any joy in that house till Christ entered. Some people think religion is to make people wear monstrous long faces and look powerfully blue. I don't see how anybody can be joyful and wear a cloud of mourning. I think when joy gets on the right side of a man (the inside), it is powerful apt to show through on the outside. The poet had the right view of the matter when he wrote, "Religion was never designed to make our pleasures less." Christ gives life, joy, and everything that has any lasting pleasure in it. Christ don't want to see his people moping about and trying to appear as ugly as possible. It is unnatural for a true christian to act thus, for of all creatures he has the greatest reasons to be the happiest, since Christ is a guest at his house. Some blue brother might say, "How can I be happy when I feel so badly, and look so mean and ugly; for I took a peep at myself the other day in my dusty mirror and I got awfully scared, for seemed to me I looked like a fellow 'dodging the grave-digger.' Besides something tells me that I can't do anything for Christ, that he does not want the like of me working for him, as I am too unworthy to engage in his work. That something tells me, too, that the best thing for me to do, if I don't want to make a fool of myself, is just to hie to the shade of the trees, put on a beclouded face three feet long, and grumble and growl at the Lord's workers. I am putting in good time doing nothing but finding fault with others, especially with some who seem to be doing exceedingly awkward work for the Lord, but they appear happy, I don't see why, I am not happy, too." There are lots of christians just this way. Some want to be shouting happy all the time, and want to glide into heaven without a struggle.

Christians can suffer and be happy, too. I guess Paul and Silas suffered after they had been brutally beaten, but they got mighty happy a few hours afterwards, being in jail, too, yet they sang songs unto the Lord at a late hour. They had the best of company. Paul tells us to "Rejoice in the Lord always." The Sun of Righteousness always brings joy and gladness.

Joy beaming in the face of a christian advertises his Lord's business and shows to sinners there is something in religion, or that the person with whom Christ abides has something the world can not give. Gloomy brother, let the joy of the Lord flow into your soul, so that you may attract sinners to Christ, that they may see you "have been with Jesus." Joy is a very scarce article with the christian when his sins committed remain unconfessed and the communion is broken down between him and Christ. I read in the word that sinners are all saved by grace through faith. I find, too, that people, who possess a living faith, are right apt to show it by their works. I think that when Christ comes in to abide, that we are pretty apt not to keep back anything from him. We want him to have our houses, lands, money and all. If Christ is a guest, we are mighty liable not to forget to carry our purse to "meeting" on Sunday, and if we are have it, we are more likely to drop a dollar into the hat than a copper. I don't know much, and what I do know is mighty scattering, i. e., spread out thin. But I have found out from experience that the Lord is a splendid "paymaster." He pays us for all the work we do for him. Joy is the coin he pays his laborers. If we want joy, we must all the time keep in company with Christ, and do his work whatever he bids us, and he will shine upon us with his approving smile and gladden our hearts. We need not be praying and praying for joy, expecting it to come, when we are not willing to work. Prayer means action. When we are working for the Lord, we are very apt to forget self, and our thoughts are placed upon Christ, and before we know it our hearts are filled with his love. I think if we would look at Christ more, we would feel a good deal better, and I am inclined to think we would wear a bright countenance, in short, get to be better looking.

Boils, abscesses, tumors, and even cancers, are the result of a natural effort of the system to expel the poisons which the liver and kidneys have failed to remove. Ayer's Sarsaparilla stimulates all the organs to a proper performance of their functions.

Information to Ladies.

A load of rings destroys the symmetry of a beautiful hand. A single stone in a good setting adds much to a hand's elegance and beauty.

Jewelry should never be worn in the morning, nor much of it in the street. Diamonds have their place only with married ladies—then only on grand occasions—but in the street never at any time.

Young ladies have adopted pearls, and opals may be worn, unless the old superstition is against them. Youth needs no adornment; freshness and beauty are the greatest of all decorators, and simple dressing enhances all faces.

The use of cosmetics, perfumery in excess, penciling the eye-brows and bleaching the hair, do not assist nature in any way; but a good wash for the face once a day with corn meal gives lustre to the skin, tone to the flesh and color to the cheek.—Ex.

It is astonishing how soon the whole conscience begins to unravel if a single stitch is dropped; one little sin indulged makes a hole you could put your head through.—Charles Buxton.

POKINE.

I have used the within remedy (Pokine) with great success. JAMES H. LARSITER.

I have used the Pokine Remedy (prepared by W. T. Cheatham, Jr.) in case of Sciatica with the result of positive relief in a few hours, and believe if used as directed is will effect a permanent cure.
J. L. H. MISSILLIER.

MARCH 6, 1891.

For the benefit of the public, I unhesitatingly recommend Cheatham's wonderful remedy, "Pokine," to all sufferers of rheumatism. It has produced marvelous results in my case. I was a sufferer of the malady for five years, and after taking a few bottles was entirely cured.
Very respectfully,
W. W. DOWTIN.

MR. W. T. CHEATHAM:
Dear Sir—My wife was down in bed with rheumatism, and the Pokine I bought of you gave her relief after taking four doses. She has not been troubled since. It is the best medicine she ever took for rheumatism. Respectfully,
ZACK DAVIS.

MR. W. T. CHEATHAM, JR.:
Dear Sir—I have been afflicted with rheumatism time and again, for the past thirteen years. I have received more relief from Pokine than any medicine I ever took, and therefore take great pleasure in recommending it to all sufferers of rheumatism. Very respectfully,
P. G. MITCHELL.

JANUARY 19, 1891.
W. T. CHEATHAM, JR.:
Dear Sir—I desire to say that in January last I was down with rheumatism; my suffering was great, and I was completely prostrated. One bottle of your Pokine completely relieved me, and I have not had any rheumatism since. My son also was relieved of rheumatism by Pokine.
Yours truly,
CHARLES G. BURROUGHS.

MR. W. T. CHEATHAM, JR.:
Your rheumatic cure, Pokine, has completely cured me. L. M. GREEN.

MR. W. T. CHEATHAM, JR., Henderson, N. C.:
Dear Sir—Being asked my opinion of your rheumatic remedy, Pokine, will gladly state I deem it the only medicine of its kind on the market that will accomplish that which is exclusively claimed for it. Being a sufferer of rheumatism, I consequently tried many remedies, until finally relieved by Pokine. Very respectfully,
J. A. KELLY.

W. R. KYLE, Gen. Pass. Agt.
J. W. FRY, Gen. Manager.

An Appeal.

The Centenary Committee has recommended raising $250,000 as a special Centennial Fund; $125,000 for a church building fund for the Home Board, and $125,000 as a permanent fund for the Foreign Board, to be used for "Chapel Building, Scripture Translation, and other permanent investment." It is especially for this latter fund that I make an appeal.

We can reasonably and confidently appeal to the churches for a

BUILDING FUND:

(1) Because we wish only to help our converts to put up chapels. I do not believe in using foreign money to build chapels in the various towns and villages where we have members. When the number of believers in a place becomes too large to meet comfortably in a private house, they should endeavor to build or secure a house for themselves. But in China our converts are poor, and would often feel such an undertaking to be beyond their strength. If, however, we had a fund from which, for instance, we could appropriate $100 on condition that they would raise $200, it would be an incentive to the native christians to exert themselves to build. In the large cities ground is very high in price and a much larger proportion than one-third would generally be needed. Thus we should follow the plan pursued by the Education Society in the United States and make a small sum be the means of raising a larger one. This principle of help does not pauperize as a complete gift would tend to do, but would on the contrary be an incentive to develop the grace of giving among our converts.

(2) Because chapels for the heathen will be needed in larger towns and cities where foreign missionaries reside. We must distinguish between a church house and a preaching hall. The former should be built and owned by the native christians, while the latter is a part of missionary machinery. A building fund would be helpful in securing such chapels and halls for preaching to the unevangelized masses, and are needed in heathen lands even more than mission halls are required in destitute portions of our cities at home before a church is gathered in the neighborhood.

(3) Because our chapels are cheap. The money spent on putting a steeple on some of our churches at home would build several good, substantial chapels where the gospel could be proclaimed to the heathen and christians could gather on the Lord's day. Brethren who give to the fund may rest assured that none of their money would be lavished on costly church buildings or expensive adornments.

(4) Because our chapels are used six days in the week. Christians at home are so accustomed to seeing the churches, or at least the main audience room, opened on Sundays only, that they forget the loss of capital involved in leaving a large hall unoccupied for six days in the week. Here, on the contrary, we use our chapels every day except Saturday. Thus a sum contributed for a chapel goes six times as far toward accomplishing the end for which it is given as it would if put into a church building at home.

(5) Because missionary dwellings are needed as well as chapels. Experience has proved that it is the best economy to provide healthful, pleasant homes for missionaries. It is the heighth of extravagance to pay the passage and outfit of a family and their salary for two or three years and then have to pay their passage home before they accomplish any work, just because they have been living in an unhealthful house. A comfortable home is needed to enable most missionaries, and especially ladies, to stand a trying climate and to have vigor sufficient to carry on efficient work. I am not pleading for ease or self-indulgence, but simply for a business matter, a matter of dollars and cents. So I say nothing about the christian love which would lead those who are living in pleasant homes in America to furnish a comfortable shelter for those who are bearing the heat and burden of the day.

(6) Because stereotype plates of the Scriptures, printing presses and other "plant" for christian literature are needed. I need say nothing of the importance of a christian literature, especially among nations like China, India and Japan which have a heathen literature of their own. All know its importance. Mission money could not be more judiciously expended than in providing books and tracts and especially Scriptures for the people.

Let these few facts suffice to call attention to the importance of this "Permanent Fund." Christians, may we not count on your earnest, liberal help?

R. H. GRAVES.

Canton, China.

Your Dignity.

When your mate does something to annoy you, it wouldn't be strange if you made a move to pay him back. He has insulted you, you think; and it doesn't agree with you to be insulted. You don't like to have your dignity hurt. My little friend, did you ever think of it, what a shaky, rickety affair your dignity must be that it gets hurt so easily? If you have in your yard a flower that is weak and puny, hardly strong enough yet to be called a flower anyway, you put in stakes about it, or something of the kind, for its protection, so that nothing will injure it. When the flower gets grown to any respectable size, you pull up the sticks, and feel that it is sturdy enough now to take care of itself. It is a good deal so with your dignity, only if you have enough of it to make it worth talking about, it will probably be able to take care of itself and go without stakes; but if it is only a dumpy, puny thing, then is when you have to take care of it lest it get hurt. That is why boys and men fight, and girls, and once in awhile women talk when they are insulted, not because they have so much dignity, but as little, and that little not quite able to be depended upon. The boys have an admiration even for a dog that is composed and priately enough not to be fretted and made to show his teeth by the little barking cur that is trying to worry him. Even from your mastiff, my little friend, you and I can learn a lesson, and see that it is not because we are so great and so grand, but because we are so puny and silly, that we make such an ado when some one has spoken ill of us or done us a wrong. Worth is its own testimonial, and conscious strength dispenses with a revolver, and needs no dog.—Rev. C. H. Parkhurst, D. D.

Danger to the Vines.

While I was walking in the garden one bright morning, a breeze came through, and set all the flowers and leaves a-fluttering. Now that is the way flowers talk; so I listened.

Presently an elder tree said, "Flowers, shake off your caterpillars."

"Why!" said a dozen all together; for they were like some other children who always say "Why" when they are told to do anything. Bad children those!

The elder said, "If you don't, they'll gobble you up; trust me for that."

So the flowers set themselves a-shaking till the caterpillars were all shaken off.

In one of the middle beds there was a beautiful rose who shook off all but one; and she said to herself:

"Oh, that's a beauty. I'll keep that one."

The elder tree overheard her, and called out quite sharply:

"One caterpillar is enough to spoil your beauty."

"But," said the rose, "look at his brown and crimson fur, and his beautiful black eyes, and scores of little feet. I want to keep him. Surely one won't hurt me."

A few mornings after I passed the rose again. There was not a whole leaf on her; her beauty was gone. She was all but killed, and had only life enough left to weep over her folly, while the tears stood like dew-drops on her tattered leaves.

"Alas, I didn't think one caterpillar would ruin me."

One sin indulged has ruined many, as the one caterpillar spoiled the rose. Do not spare a sin because it is a pleasant sin, or you will come to grief.—S. S. Visitor.

Things Worth Knowing.

Save your cold tea; it is excellent for cleaning grained wood.

Wild mint scattered about the house will rid it of rats and mice.

Hot solution of salt and vinegar brightens copper and tinware, also bath-tubs.

Mirrors should not be hung where the light shines directly upon them.

Warm soap suds will keep the bugs from house-plants and make them grow very fast.

To remove finger-marks, putty stains, etc., from glass, put a little soda in the water with which you wash it.

New tins should be set over the fire with boiling water in them for several hours before food is put into them.

To remove rust from knives cover the blades with sweet oil for a day or two, and then rub with a lump of fresh lime.

To keep linen from turning yellow put it away rough dry after washing and bleaching well and rinsing in blue water.

Dish-towels and dish-cloths should be washed, scalded and thoroughly dried every day, or they soon become musty.

A broom may be kept in good condition for a long time if it is washed once a week in clean hot suds, and then hung to dry.

Never sun feather beds. Air them thoroughly on a windy day in a cool place. The sun draws the oil and gives the feathers a rancid smell.

If troubled with headache, try the simultaneous application of hot water to the feet and back of the head.

Help Asked for Maxton.

A little band of Baptists at Maxton, Robeson county, N. C., ask that you help them build a church. This is an important railroad junction, and it is desired to build a house of worship worthy of the goodness of the Lord, and commendable of the great Baptist brotherhood.

ROBESON BAPTIST ASSOCIATION,
January 19th, 1892.

We are acquainted with the membership of the First Baptist church at Maxton, N. C., and do cheerfully recommend them to the brethren as earnest and zealous workers, and request that their petition for aid in building a house of worship be liberally responded to. A. R. PITTMAN, Mod.

Rev. Sam Jones says: "My wife and daughter were cured of headache and catarrh by Germetuer."

The Sympathy of a Child.

A child's eyes! those clear wells of undecided thought—what on earth can be so beautiful? Full of hope, love and curiosity, they meet your own. In prayer, how earnest; in joy, how sparkling; in sympathy, how tender. The man who never tried the companionship of a little child has carelessly passed by one of the pleasures of life, as one passes a rare flower, without plucking it, or knowing its value. The child cannot understand you, you think; speak to it of the holy things of your religion, of your grief for the loss of a friend, of your love for some one you fear will not love in return, it will take it in true, no measure or soundings of your thought; it will not judge how much you should believe, whether your grief is rational in proportion to your loss, whether you are wrong or it to attract the love which you seek; but its whole soul will incline to yours and engraft itself, as it were, on the feeling which is your feeling for the hour.—Sel.

Good Manners.

Never try to outshine, but to please.

Never press a favor where it seems undesired.

Never intrude ill health, pains, losses or misfortune.

Never intentionally wound the feelings of a human being.

Never talk or laugh aloud in public places or upon the street.

Do not ask another to do what you would not do under similar circumstances.

Never omit to perform a kind act when it can be done with any reasonable amount of exertion.

Do not make witticisms at the expense of others which you would not wish to have made upon yourself.

Remember that good manners are thoughts filled with kindness and refinement and then translated into behavior.

Be rude to none; rudeness harms not even the humblest and poorest to whom it is directed, but it injures the exhibitors.—Ex.

The world, the flesh, and the Devil—what opposers to progress in the divine life! Which is the worst? Perhaps most would answer the Devil? But is he? Is not the flesh the greatest foe to man's spiritual interest? It is the instrument through which the world and the Devil work against both God and man. Read the dark catalogue of sins as recorded in the fifth chapter of Galatians—all the works of the flesh.

The readers of the RECORDER will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers, that they offer one hundred dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials. Address,

Study Topics.—Attitude of Japan towards christianity. Japan as a mission field. Its religions. S. B. C. missions and missionaries. Japanese customs. Yet much land to be possessed.

Japan.

Across our broad continent, and away beyond the rolling Pacific, there lies a group of islands, Jipangu. "The Land of the Sunrise" the Chinese call the empire which comprises this group.

For six hundred years the gates of the Island Empire were closed to all foreigners, and it is only since the year 1854 that anything definite has been known of a nation whose well-authenticated history reaches back to the captivity of the Jews. The Japanese are very proud of the history of their country, and boast that it has never been conquered by any other nation; and that despite its teeming treasures of gold, silver, and precious stones, it has held the world in abeyance for 2,500 years, and during that time has had but one civil war.

They are also extremely proud of their fine scenery, and justly so. Girt round by the ocean rolling in its restlessness, or sleeping in the sunlight, it reflects on its broad bosom the over-arching canopy and the azure mountains refulgent and glowing with the tints of an ever-varying sky. Peaceful rivers flow through the country, bringing life and moisture to the rice fields and tea plantations.

The religious history of Japan, so far as it relates to christianity, has been a singular one. The story of Commodore Perry's expedition is familiar to all and needs no further mention. It was in the year 1859 that the doors of the nation were slightly ajar and a missionary of the cross slipped in. But not until 1864 do we hear of a converts baptism in Japan. From that time until the present christianity has been making some progress, and now the number of professing christians is roughly estimated at twenty-eight thousand.

The government of Japan is under an Emperor, or as they call it the "Mikado." This nation has had 123 Mikados, nine of whom have been women; and the reigning Emperor can trace his descent directly from the first Mikado. This nation is now in a transitional state. She has placed ancient religions, customs and civilization in the balance against Western progress and christianity. Time will prove which will outweigh the other. The social position of women in Japan is more favorable than in other Asiatic nations. Female education is not neglected. In its moral and material advancement Japan is being influenced more directly, perhaps, by America than by any other nation. Grave responsibility rests upon us, and a glorious opportunity stands open before us. We must pray to God to give us grace to point these sons of the East who are knocking at our doors to the bright and morning star, and may they turn their faces to it, and see its heavenly light.

The Japanese have frequently been called the "children of the Orient" because of their playful, contented disposition. They smooth over hardships by a pleasant smile, and appear to us very happy. We cannot but feel drawn toward them, for are they not intelligent, lovable, and do they not possess many virtues which are to admired? But though so cleanly, refined and cultured, they are not christians; and for this reason alone we should feel deep interest in them, and strive to teach them of Jesus Christ, our loving Saviour. It is so sad to think that they have no love for the dear Saviour who died for them. As they now are many of them will live and die without faith in Jesus; and the Bible has told us "there is none other name under heaven given among men" whereby the sinner can be saved. To that country we must send more missionaries to tell the "good news" The Southern Baptists have only two brethren, with their wives, as missionaries in Japan, and they are asking for others to come over and help in the great work. Shall we not send them! Let us each and every one pray to our Heavenly Father to raise up men and women who will say, "Here am I, Lord, send me, send me." Then let us be willing to send them. May the time soon come when there will be not a few, but many, christians in the "land of the rising sun."

Japan—Its History.

For hundreds of years the gates of Japan were closed against all foreigners, and for thousands of years her records were unread by any except the chosen scholars of the land. It is less than forty years ago that anything at all definite was given to the world concerning a people whose well-authenticated history it is claimed antedates that of Greece or Rome. When the mighty Babylon was in its glory these people were laying the foundation of an empire that should witness the rise and fall of more than a score of the great eastern kingdoms.

Like that of other ancient nations, the history of Japan begins with a mythological period. According to the holy books of Shinto, the world, in the beginning, had no form, but resembled the inside of an egg. The white portion become heaven and the yellow portion became earth. A plant, resembling a reed, then appeared, and became a god, or Kami. This god was the first of a line of spiritual beings who ruled the universe for millions of years, ending in a god and goddess Izanagi and Izanami. From their union sprang the islands of Japan, the mountains, seas and all the natural objects of the empire. What pretends to be the authentic annals of the country begins about 660 B. C., though there is no native documentary proof of this. No Japanese writings antedate the seventh century.—Rev. H. A. Tupper, Jr.

The Help America has Given to Japan.

It was American diplomacy that, at great expense, peacefully secured the opening of Japan to the world; and the American conscience which refunded the sum of nearly $750,000 unfairly—in connection with England, France and Holland—taken in unjust indemnity; which example none of the other powers has followed. It was American private generosity that maintained Japanese students at school in this country during civil wars at their own home, an act which so deeply touched the Japanese heart that the Mikado's embassadors, in 1873, declared in writing, "it will do more to cement the friendly relations of the two countries than all other influences combined."—Rev. W. E. Griffis in Gospel in all Lands.

Japanese in San Francisco.

The Japanese christians in San Francisco have pledged $5,000 toward a church building and will raise it. They are contributing toward this sum by the month. Upward of twenty preachers have been sent out from this mission to Japan and the Sandwich Islands. The last month they have averaged above one convert per day. For two years there has been a continuous revival.—Missionary Review.

I CURE FITS!

When I say cure I do not mean merely to stop them for a time and then have them return again. I mean a radical cure. I have made the disease of FITS, EPILEPSY or FALLING SICKNESS a life-long study. I warrant my remedy to cure the worst cases. Because others have failed is no reason for not now receiving a cure. Send at once for a treatise and a Free Bottle of my infallible remedy. The eighteenth annual session of the North Carolina State Dental Association was held in Winston last week. The meeting was well attended. The next session of the Association will be held in Raleigh.

A wreck occurred on the Murphy branch of the W. N. C. Railroad near Bryson City on the 24th ult., instantly killing engineer J. A. Hunt, and injuring others. A broken rail caused the engine to leave the track and turn over, with the result stated.

The Wilmington Messenger says that the claims against the First National Bank of Wilmington, which suspended on 24th of November last, will aggregate $550,000 and this will probably be raised to $600,000 by including the cost of winding up the affairs of the bank which will probably be $50,000.

On May 21st a cyclone did great damage in the Cashie Neck district of Bertie county. Houses were blown down and away, trees three feet through were twisted from the ground. The eight year old daughter of Mr. J. W. Pritchard, was killed, her neck and legs both being broken. Her mother and brother were also injured. Damage was also done to stock, poultry, &c.

Our fellow-townsman, Mr. W. P. Gilmer, has invented one of the best things in the way of a corn-planter we have ever seen. It lays off the ground, drops the corn and covers it at the same time, and saves the labor of two men and one horse, and does the work of dropping the grain much butter than can possibly be done by hand. By a simple lever under the right handle of the plow you can control the supply of corn and drop it in hills any distance apart that may be desired.—Mt. Airy News.

The Rambler has received a good many ideas of late (and surely there is not one by whom ideas should be more cordially and enthusiastically welcomed). He had labored under the impression that, for getting a knowledge of the meaning of the Bible, it was a great advantage to be conversant with the original languages of the Scripture, and even to have studied the Bible in the tongues in which it was written, and that it was a further advantage to have acquainted one's self with what has been written by learned men, who have devoted their entire lives to the critical study of the Scriptures.

But the Rambler has been attending a number of meetings of clergymen, conferences and the like, and he has become satisfied that the only men who know nothing about the Bible, and whose judgment is hopelessly vitiated and worthless, are the men who have devoted their entire life to the study of the Bible. To say that a man is a scholar, that he is conversant with Greek, and Hebrew, and Syriac, is as much as to say that he knows nothing about the Bible, and that what he does know is erroneous. The Rambler has become convinced that the true way to become a qualified interpreter of the Bible is to have a warm heart, to be fluent in prayer meetings, to be a successful exhorter, and to have some slight knowledge of King James, without allowing one's self to be perplexed by any of the results of modern research, to be satisfied with "the plain Anglo Saxon of the Apostle Paul."

In these views the Rambler has been reinforced by reading in an eminent religious quarterly an article upon "Common Sense and the Higher Criticism," from which he gathers that if a person has common sense, to which perhaps should be added piety, he is fully equipped for the interpretation of the Scriptures and for the determining of all difficult points as to the several books of Scripture, their authorship, their date, their integrity. Common sense is all that is needed to assure us whether a certain epistle in the Scriptures is genuine and authentic, and whether a certain word of a certain verse, or a special reading in a disputed passage, has the best manuscript authority.

While all this is gratifying to the Rambler, yet there is a painful side to it. Surely it is a pity that we have invested $3,369,728 in the theological seminaries, in view of the fact that the professors in these institutions and their graduates are plunged in an abyss of ignorance and darkness as to the meaning of sacred Scriptures. Surely this money may have been better employed. The Rambler could suggest a dozen places in which this sum would have done more good.—Dr. Wayland, in National Baptist.

A GREAT REMEDY.

What Rev. Sam P. Jones Says About Dr. King's Royal Germetuer.

"I returned from Tyler, Texas, on March 12th. I find my wife has been taking Royal Germetuer two weeks to the great rebuilding of her physical system. She is now almost free from the distressing headaches with which she has suffered for twenty years. Surely it has done wonders for her. I wish every poor suffering wife had access to that medicine."

Later he writes:

"My wife who was an invalid from nervous sick headache has been entirely cured by six week's use of Dr. King's Royal Germetuer. Her health is perfect. In three weeks two of my children were cured completely of nasal catarrh. IT IS TRULY A GREAT REMEDY."

Rev. M. H. Wells, of Birmingham, writes "that daughter and I were cured of neuralgia and rheumatism by the use of Germetuer after all known medical and climatic remedies had been used.'

The Grand Old Warrior Endorses It.

"I have suffered for months from insomnia and indigestion, and failing of relief, was induced to try Dr. King's Royal Germetuer. I am now relieved, and I hope permanently so.

Yours, JAMES LONGSTREET."

What Dr. J. B. Hawthorne Says About Dr. King's Royal Germetuer.

"I am free from catarrh. I believe that I could get a certificate to this effect from any competent physician. I have used no medicine within the last six months except King's Royal Germetuer. My health is better than it has been in thirty years. I am in possession of information which warrants me in saying that the relief which I have experienced from the use of the medicine is not more certain and radical than that which it has brought to hundreds of persons in Georgia and other States.

"I feel it my duty to say also that the effects of this remedy upon my wife have been even more signal and wonderful. She has been almost an invalid from nervous headache, neuralgia and rheumatism. In a period of thirty years she has scarcely had a day's exemption from pain. She has been using Germetuer about two months. A more complete transformation I have never witnessed. Every symptom of disease has disappeared. She appears to be twenty years younger, and is as happy and playful as a healthy child. We have persuaded many of our friends to take the medicine, and the testimony of all of them is that it is a great remedy.

J. B. HAWTHORNE,
Pastor First Baptist Church."

General G. P. M. Turner, late attorney-general of Memphis, Tenn., writes of his wonderful cure of rheumatism: "I have entirely recovered my health. When I left Hot Springs I weighed 100 pounds. I now weigh 219 pounds. My skin is as clear as a crystal, and my kidneys are in perfect order, also my liver and bowels. My daughter has also been cured of dyspepsia. I am in perfect health, all owing to Royal Germetuer."

Gen. Turner has been a great sufferer for ten years—from rheumatism.

During that time he was treated by the most eminent physicians in Memphis and New York and spent several seasons at Hot Springs without benefit. Among the physicians who treated him was Dr. Agnew, of Philadelphia, President Garfield's able attendant.

We are endorsed by thousands of our best known people, and are authorized in saying that Germetuer will permanently cure Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Indigestion, Bowel and Liver Troubles, Female Diseases, Catarrh, Asthma, Bladder and Kidney diseases, Skin diseases, such as Scrofula, Eczema, etc., Paralysis, Epilepsy, Erysipelas, Insomnia and General Debility.

It purifies the blood, invigorates and tones up the general system and is as pleasant to take as a glass of lemonade.

N. C. Baptist Historical Society.

I trust we shall have a good representation of our brotherhood at the meeting of the North Carolina Baptist Historical Society to be held at Wake Forest College Tuesday of commencement week. It may be that despite sickness in his family we shall have the pleasure of hearing the eloquent Battle who was appointed to deliver the annual address. We confidently hope to receive instruction and impulse from Prof. Alderman of Reidsville, who, we are informed, has been making some special studies.

The atmosphere of culture will aid toward the success of the meeting. Let us begin to know our history that our denominational spirit may be rightly nourished and guided. It is time that we ourselves write this history. To this end trustworthy material must be prepared. The collection of the Society at Wake Forest begins to be useful. We must enrich it by well-attested contributions.

McCAIN—HAYWOOD—On May 22d, 1892, at the residence of Mr. J. A. Winston in Franklin county, N. C., by Rev. W. B. Royall, Mr. J. H. McCain of Asheboro, N. C., and Miss Mary E. Haywood of Franklin county.

DIED.

PHELPS—Departed this life near Rosemead, N. C., May 22d, 1892, Rosa L. Phelps, daughter of Charles and Fannie Phelps, aged ten years and nine months. Her father being dead, she had been living with her grandparents for sometime, who were much devoted to her. Grandpa and grandma can never see Rosa again in this world, but can meet her in the sweet by and by. A FRIEND.

TIMBERLAKE—On May 24th, 1892, at Youngsville, N. C., Mrs. Phœbe Timberlake, wife of Mr. George Timberlake, in the 31st year of her age. She was a faithful wife and mother, a pure-hearted christian woman. She was conscious to the last, and was not afraid when she came to the valley of the shadow of death, for Christ, the good Shepherd, was with her. She leaves behind with aching hearts a husband and three little children. The kind Father above look down in pity upon them.
R.

PATTERSON—On May 7th, 1892, at Youngsville, N. C., Mrs. G. C. Patterson, in the 27th year of her age. She was a member of the Youngsville Baptist church, and in all the relations of life was a model christian. From the day that she gave her heart to Christ she seemed to identify herself with every interest of his kingdom, and the sweet influence of her artless piety must linger long in the places of her earthly sojourning. God grant that this sore bereavement may be sanctified to the eternal good of the devoted husband.
R.

PEARCE—On Feb. 1st, 1892, at his residence near Rolesville, N. C., Bro. John Pearce, in the eighty-first year of his age. As a servant of God he was faithful to his obligations, so far as he understood them. In his dealings with his fellowmen, he was honest and kind. He enjoyed, therefore, a good share of their affection and confidence. The Rolesville Baptist church sustains a serious loss in this good man's death. His aged companion still lives. The Lord deal gently with her. R.

NEEDHAM—At the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Alex. B. Needham in Columbia, N. C., May 15th, 1892, Miss Jennie Needham. She was a consistent member of the Baptist church at Columbia, and although a mere girl, was loved by all who knew her for her peculiar beauty—physical, mental and spiritual. She died a victim of measles and la grippe, after an illness of just one week. All of beauty, joy and light seem gone out of our lives; but Divine grace through faith, directs us to mourn not our loss, but rather rejoice at her gain, and to prepare to meet her. With her latest breath she sang "Coronation," and now we think of her as one of the crowned saints in glory, and resignedly say, "Not our will, but thine, be done, O Father."
ONE WHO LOVED HER.

Tributes of Respect.

WILSON LODGE, No. 226, A. F. and A. M.

CASE—Whereas, it has pleased Almighty God, in his inscrutable providence, to remove from this terrestrial to the celestial Lodge our esteemed friend and brother, L. H. Case; therefore, be it

Resolved, That while we, the members of Wilson Lodge, deeply deplore his untimely decease, we submissively bow to his will who doeth all things well.

Resolved, That we extend our heartfelt sympathy to the bereaved family, believing that their loss is his eternal gain.

Resolved, That in his death we recognize the loss of an honest, honorable citizen, a social, genial gentleman and companion, and a loved and honored brother. We will ever cherish his memory as a sacred and pleasant trust, and hope that when life is done, that we may meet him in the holy Lodge above, where parting comes no more.

Resolved, That the usual badge of mourning be worn for thirty days, that these resolutions be spread on the minutes of our Lodge, and also that copies be sent to the bereaved family, and to the Landmark and BIBLICAL RECORDER with request to publish them.

GAY—The subject of this sketch was born in Northampton county, N. C., on Dec. 22d, 1822, and departed this life April 19th, 1892, having lived sixty-nine years, three months and twenty-seven days, nearly filling man's allotted time on earth, three score years and ten.

Thus passes away one of the purest and noblest men who ever lived in our community. Bro. Gay was known and respected by all the people of his neighborhood and county for the many admirable and christian qualities he possessed. He was a man of extensive influence among his countymen, often giving such pure and wholesome advice when called upon, and ever being ready to lend a helping hand to the needy and distressed. It always seemed to be his pleasure to relieve the distressed. He felt it a christian duty belonging to all who love their Saviour and desired to follow his commands, to always be ready to relieve the wants of those who were distressed and needy, and of such Bro. Gay was ever ready to respond.

Bro. Gay was elected deacon of the Mt. Carmel Baptist church in the year 1877, and filled that office with pride and punctuality as long as he lived. His walk was pious, his thoughts pure and his manner gentle; his advice always good and influence extensive and felt, especially among his brethren in the church.

It is well known that Bro. Gay was a Baptist—not an ordinary Baptist, but one of strong allegiance to his church, which could not be lessened or modified by any human surroundings. He never failed to let it be known even in the most worldly surroundings, yet with the modesty and gentleness of the true man, that he was a christian and that he belonged to a Baptist church. He always attended his church and generously aided in its support. His brethren and sisters will long remember his unselfish consecration and devotion to its highest and best interest. He will be sadly missed by his family and church and a multitude of friends. No worthy object of benevolence was ever presented to him in vain. His contributions extended to every good work. He leaves a large number of friends who will sincerely mourn his death, and a wife and family of grown-up children, nearly all settled in life, who, in honor, virtue and piety, are a monument worthy of such a husband and father.

May God our Father, who ever watches over his flock, be a husband to the widow, who so faithfully attended to the wants of her dear husband in time of his sickness, which was of a long duration, being by his bedside watching and tenderly nursing him through the weary months of his illness, and a Father to the children, who will so sadly miss the counsel and good advice of an indulgent father.

WILLIFORD—To the death-roll of Connaritsa Baptist church has been added the name of Bro. J. J. Williford, who departed this life at his home near Hexalena, Bertie county, N. C., March 26th, 1892, in the forty-fifth year of his age. His pastor and church, desiring to make some public expressions of his exemplary life, appointed a committee to draft resolutions, who reported the following at the May conference:

As a servant of God, Bro. Williford was an untiring worker, a sympathetic and devout christian, an affectionate husband and father, liberal hearted, kind to his neighbors, dutiful to his church, and faithful to his country.

At the age of fourteen Bro. Williford was received into the fellowship of the church at Connaritsa, and for thirty one years lived a consistent member, and being noted for his christian deportment, won for himself many friends. Having laid his remains in their last resting place, we want to say, that although his disease caused him intense suffering at times, yet he endured it patiently, and was ready when the summons bid him come home, to give additional evidences of his christian graces which characterized him through life, and that his brow was marked with that peace which surpasseth all understanding. As a church, we Resolved, 1st. To bow in humble submission to the will of our Heavenly Father.

2d. That this church will hold in her memory the vacant seat at the window, caused by the death of our brother for whom we cherish so much respect and brotherly love.

3d. That we extend to the bereaved family our condolence, praying that the protecting arms of a loving Saviour may ever be around them, and the hope of a happy reunion with husband and father may serve to console them through life.

4th. That a copy of this tribute be forwarded to the BIBLICAL RECORDER for publication, one spread on the church record, and one sent to the bereaved family.

BUFFALO LITHIA WATER

—AND—

Hot Springs, Arkansas,

TWIN REMEDIES IN URIC ACID DIATHESIS, GOUT, RHEUMATISM, &c.

Nerve Tonic Properties of the Buffalo Lithia Water---Its Value in Nervous Exhaustion, Bright's Disease, &c.

What the Hot Springs Physicians Say!

HOT SPRINGS MEDICAL AND SURGICAL INSTITUTE.

DR. JOHN A. BLAYDES, Pres. DR. R. O. BLAYDES, Sec'y.

STATEMENT OF THE DRS. BLAYDES:

"We have made use of BUFFALO LITHIA WATER with patients of this institution in many obstinate cases of Gout, Rheumatic Gout and Rheumatism with uniformly excellent results, and in diseases of Uric Acid Diathesis regard it as an invaluable remedy. Its action in this class of cases indicates certainly the possession of some extraordinary property."

The peculiar action of this water as a nervous tonic and exhilarant gives to it especial value as a restorative in all exhausted or enfeebled conditions of the nervous system.

As a remedy in Bright's Disease of the Kidneys, Renal Calculi, Stone in the Bladder, Chronic Inflammation of the Bladder, and other kindred diseases, it is safe to say that this water has no superior, if indeed it has any equal.

Dr. Algernon S. Garnett, Surgeon (retired) U. S. Navy, Resident Physician, Hot Springs, Ark.

"My experience with the use of BUFFALO LITHIA WATER is limited to the treatment of Gout, Rheumatism and that hybrid disease, 'Rheumatic Gout,' (so-called), which is in contradistinction to the Rheumatoid Arthritis of Garrod.

"I have had excellent results from this Water in these affections, both in my own person and in the treatment of patients for whom I have prescribed it. Of course, the remedial agent is its contained Alkalies and their solvent properties.

"Hence it is a prophylactic as well as a remedy in Nephritic Colic, and forming Calculi, when due to a redundancy of Lithic Acid."

The late Dr. Thomas P. Atkinson, Ex-President Medical Society of Virginia.

"My experience with the different waters has satisfied me that among sufferers from Gout, Rheumatic Gout, Rheumatism, and diseases generally dependent upon a Uric Acid Diathesis, a much larger percentage are relieved by the BUFFALO LITHIA WATER than by any of the Hot Waters. Experience has shown this Water to be a powerful agent for the removal of Vesical Calculi. It has proved equally efficient in effecting the solution and preventing the deposition of the Phosphatic and the Uric Acid Sediment.

"When used at an early stage, while enough of the renal structure remains to answer the purpose of purifying the blood, it is of decided efficacy in Bright's Disease of the Kidneys, and, indeed, in some cases where the destruction of the Kidney has been greater, its use has resulted in partial restoration and prolongation of life."

The Home Circle.

"Be Ye Patient."

All day long in the Master's vineyard,
I had labored with heart and hand;
And by earnest and strong endeavor,
Had finished the labor planned.
But at nightfall my soul was a-weary,
With the cares of the long, long day;
For it seemed that my toil had been useless,
And my pearls had been cast away.

Then I thought of the rest eternal,
Where God, and the angels dwell;
And I prayed, "O tenderest Father,
Who loveth his children so well:—
All day with the cold and thankless,
I have labored as best I may;
But to-night, I am heart-sick and tired,
Now give me thy rest, I pray."

Then down on my spirit, was wafted
The breath of a limitless calm;
And I felt, all at once, thro' my weakness,
The strength of the infinite Arm;
And a voice said, "O toiler take courage!
No labor is useless and vain,
Tho' thorns spring where roses should brighten,
And weeds, where thou searchest for grain.

"Thy labor is Christ-like and holy,
If rendered with patience by thee;
And the love which thou bearest my weak ones,
I hold it as given to me."
Then I bowed me with humbler praying,
And "Father, forgive me," I said.
"I asked thee for rest, when I needed
But patience, my pathway to tread."

Then heaven, through the nightfall leaned nearer,
Till mine eyes caught its turrets of gold,
And earth in its splendid reflection
No longer looked thankless and cold
And patience, that hour was given me,
To follow the pathway he trod;
Which I know, at the last, winding upward,
Will lead me to heaven, and to God.

Lizzie's Rebellion.

This was the first of it: Four-year-old Dewey, in his long white night gown, was kneeling by mamma's knee, saying his prayers, and when to "Jesus, tender Shepherd, hear me," he added "God bless papa and mamma and little sister," Lizzie who was sitting on mamma's lap, like any other two-year old baby, piped up, to every one's surprise, "Not little sister; little sister take care her's se'f."

This Lizzie repeated every evening, and she grew so naughty and rebellious over it that grandma said: "It's only a baby freak, and it soon will be forgotton if we don't seem to take any notice of it.

So every night for some time Dewey waited until his little sister's blue eyes were fast asleep before his prayer was uttered. One morning, after several weeks had slipped by in this way, the two children were at play in the grain room at the barn.

"Don't leave little sister, Dewey," and "Don't climb baby," said mamma, as she left them and ran across the garden to a neighbor's.

Lizzie, who was as fond of climbing as if she had been made with claws like a kitten instead of with these plump, dimpled fingers and toes, paid no attention to her mamma's words, but scrambling upon a rickety chair, she soon gained the top of a high bench, and from there climbed upon a hogshead, over the open top of which was thrown a large piece of sacking, perhaps to keep the chickens out of it. Instead of the firm foundation she expected to find, there was nothing to hold her and down she went nearly to bottom, upon a few bushels of oats. But she was not hurt, and not very badly frightened.

"Oh, oh, Lizzie!" shrieked Dewey. "Are you dead? Are you dead, Lizzie?"

"No," came the smothered answer. "I'm awful s'prised."

Pretty soon she called again: "Are you crying, Dewey? What are you crying for."

"Oh, yes," sobbed the little boy; "I don't know what to do. I can't get you out, and I mustn't leave you to go to mamma. Oh, dear!"

"Why don't you pray?" said Lizzie, encouragingly. "Tell God Lizzie's tumbled into a hole where she can't take care her's se'f."

Just then the butcher appeared in his white frock, and seeing Dewey's grief, he inquired what the matter was. Then, as he reached down his long arms and lifted Lizzie by her upreached hands, she sobbed for the first time: "Oh, thank you, God, for coming down for me. I'll let Dewey ask you to take care of me every time now."

And she did. And that was the last of it. —The Sunlight.

How to Please.

"One great source of pleasing others lies in our wish to please them," said a father to his daughter, discoursing on the "small sweet courtesies of life." "I want to tell you a secret. The way to make yourself pleasant to others is to show them attention.

"The whole world is like the miller of Mansfield, who cared for nobody—no, not he—because nobody cared for him,' and the whole world would do so if you give them the cause.

"Let the people see that you care for them by showing them what Sterne so happily called the same courtesies, in which there is no parade, whose voice is too still to tease, and which manifest themselves by tender, affectionate looks, and the little acts of attention, giving others the preference in every little enjoyment, at the table, in the field, walking, sitting and standing.—Selected.

Bad Bowels.

The very expression implies suffering. Every mother knows the anxiety over this trouble, and every mother does not know that Dr. Biggers' Huckleberry Cordial will relieve all bowel troubles.

A Word to Boys on Making Noise.

Of course you must make it. Certainly you ought to make a great deal. Who would wish "a soaring, humane boy" to creep about on tiptoe, and talk under his breath? I, for one, would not give "tuppence" for a boy who could not shout loud enough to make me tremble lest the roof should fall.

But are there not occasions when, if unselfish, a boy would take thought for others? Suppose a headache is going on in the next room, might one not remember that heavy boots squeak and clatter, and that a loud voice makes pain unbearable? When there is illness in the house, "the word for your guidance is mum, mum, mum!"

There are boys whose lives are cast in a boarding-house—one of the drawbacks to which is that courtesy makes it but fair to the other boarders that each person should go through the halls and down the stairs less like a whirlwind than some of us would like.

And how about one's conduct during school hours? Probably the head master will take care of himself and of you when in the school-room. But how about the class room where a young woman teaches? Very often she is new at the business. Possibly she does not know everything about boys. You may have seen such a teacher.

Now any one with half a brain—even an idiot—has wit enough to see how he may disturb that new teacher. It is absurdly easy to scrape one's feet on the floor. It takes but little skill to cluck in one's throat so deftly that it is hard to tell where the noise comes from. To talk half aloud to the next boy is neither witty nor wise. If you were to meet your teacher on the street you would take off your hat in a twinkling. You would step out into the mud if the sidewalk were too narrow for two. Why should you lay aside your chivalrous courtesy because she happens to teach you Geometry or Latin? You would deal sharply with any lad who undertook to annoy your mother or your sister. How, then, does it happen that you yourself worry a lady with unseemly noise, as if you were a boor and not a gentleman?

What of noise in a public assembly? Can anything be more ill-bred than to giggle and whisper when the business of the evening is to hear music or a lecture? It is by no means boys alone, nor girls either, for that matter, who sometimes disturb others in this fashion.

I remember a whole audience being once so annoyed by a number of persons laughing and talking while a prayer was going on, that a general burst of hissing made the displeasure known. Don't you think those chattering individuals must have wished the ground would open and swallow them? And the mortification served them right.

And if it is rude to thoughtlessly make a noise in a public hall, how much worse is it when the building is a church? And yet there are young folks who, coming into a pew, a part of them together, behave so irreverently, that one almost thinks them a parcel of—no, we don't insult the heathen, who, at least, bow before their idols' shrines awe-stricken.

One wonders what sort of parents permit their children to stray from one church to another with no older person as a guardian. But since there are boys and girls who have this undesirable liberty, might they not do well to remember the words, "The Lord is in his holy temple, let all the earth keep silence before him!—Harper's Young People.

Sleeping in Lighted Rooms

Among the most pernicious habits of foolishly tender mothers is that of keeping a light in the room in which little children are supposed to be trying to go to sleep for the night. It is true that there may be now and then an abnormally timid or nervous child, for whom a light at such a time is a necessity, but the vast majority of infants are readily accustomed to going to sleep in the dark; and the habit once formed need not be broken over, unless illness intervenes to overthrow all rules and routine.

The arguments against the burning of gas, a kerosene lamp or candle, in the room where a child is trying to sleep are manifold. In the first place, most oculists are agreed that the eyes are better off in the natural twilight of a sleeping apartment at night than one lighted even faintly by artificial means; secondly, lights attract insects during the larger part of the year in these latitudes; thirdly, they heat the air and use up its oxygen, vitiating it for the helpless sleeper; fourthly, the habit once acquired is almost impossible to break, and is often inconvenient to indulge while traveling or visiting.

On the other side it is urged that the child likes it—which in Solomon's time would surely have been thought a plea of little weight—and that it is convenient to have a light in the room in case anything is needed there. A sick child requires, of course, different care from a well one, but there would be fewer sick children if the practice of keeping lights burning in their sleeping rooms during a whole or a part of the night were to be abolished.—Selected.

How to Start a Balky Horse.

A correspondent says that the way to start a balky horse is to take up one of his fore feet and strike the shoe a few times with a stone. He claims to have started several horses in this way which have stubbornly resisted more violent efforts to make them move. He also says that he has never known this simple method to fail.—Our Dumb Animals.

The nominal christian life that costs nothing is not worthy of the name. There must be self-restraint, discipline, severe schooling. There must be struggle, the agonizing effort. If you are to reach the goal and win the prize, you must put every energy of your life into the race. There must be sacrifice of indolence and self-will and personal ease. Too much pampering spoils many an earnest christian. Every noble life is a struggle from beginning to end. Only those who resist and fight and overcome are successful in life. This is true in every sphere—in business, in study, in professional life and in spiritual life. Are we resisting sin, overcoming temptation, living victoriously in trial? If not, we are not living worthily.—Bits of Pasture.

He that is habituated to deceptions and artificialties in trifles, will try in vain to be true in matters of importance: for truth is a thing of habit, rather than of will. You cannot, in any given case, by any sudden and single effort, will to be true, if the habit of your life has been insincere—F. W. Robertson.

Dr. M. T. Yates on Native Agency.

IS NATIVE AGENCY, AS IT IS GENERALLY EMPLOYED BY MISSIONS IN CHINA, SCRIPTURAL? AND AS A METHOD OF MISSION WORK IS IT CALCULATED TO ADVANCE THE BEST INTEREST OF EVANGELIZATION AMONG THE CHINESE?

Native agency, as a method of mission work, is an important factor for good, or for almost irreparable evil, according as the agents are true or false, i. e. work for the salvation of men as for wages. This method has, to some missions to a large, and with others to a smaller extent, been common to all, from the time they began to have disciples, more than thirty-five years ago. A hasty glance at the history of its introduction, development and perpetuation, may assist us in the study of this question.

Its introduction was the most natural thing in the world. When missionaries first commenced the study of Chinese, having no books to assist them in the spoken language, they naturally found much difficulty in presenting their views of religious truth, and ardently desired native helpers whom they hoped would be able to command the necessary language. For this much needed help they worked and prayed. In process of time, after frequent calls and sundry inquiries about the new religion, what a man should believe, and what was necessary to join the church, etc., there were some—many of them doubtless having an eye to business—who were willing to adopt the new religion; and who at once had the courage to talk to their countrymen about it, too. "It was a good thing, for it taught morality, and Confucius did that." The unsophisticated missionaries naturally rejoiced over this long desired accession, and urged the new disciples to speak to the people about the love of God, and Jesus Christ, the Saviour of men. This they did in the presence of the missionaries, denouncing with great volubility the dumb idols in the temples, and urging the people to forsake these false gods and turn to the worship of the true and living God, of whom they themselves evidently had a very imperfect knowledge. Such fluency and devotion, however, charmed the missionaries beyond measure, and they desired to see it displayed daily. Nothing could please the new disciples better; "but they did not have much time to devote to it, for they had to work to support their families," etc. The jubilant missionaries thought that the little matter of a few dollars per month for a support should not be allowed to stand in the way of securing the services of helpful native assistants. And when they learned that it would require but eight or ten dollars per month to support a man and his family—which was no more than they paid their heathen teacher of the language—they were in a state of mind to be generous; and cheerfully engaged them at the higher figure; for the amount seemed small, and they wished their assistants to be comfortable and presentable.

Thus, at an early stage of our work, men were, unwittingly, employed as assistants in mission work, just as other employees were engaged, and their wages fixed at eight or ten dollars per month.

By the jubilant missionaries, these accessions—some of whom promised to become fair preachers—were regarded as evident tokens of the Divine favor, but by their Chinese friends, all of whom estimate the value of an acquisition by its capacity to render material aid in this life, they were regarded as extremely fortunate men. But neither they nor their envious friends had any idea of consecration to God, nor of the true nature of the service required at their hands. They simply held themselves ready to obey orders; in a word, to render a perfunctory service for a consideration. This method of work has been handed down, and is to-day the bane of native agency. For the agents have developed but little or no taste or heart for spontaneous religious work among their own people, and have but little sympathy with their own churches. They served their employer and not their Lord and Master. They walked by sight; for with them it was a sure thing at the end of the month, while the missionary walked by faith. And, from the earlier days till now, he has ardently hoped and prayed for a manifestation of the spiritual power in the hearts of his native agents. But alas, it is not in Chinese human nature to place as high an estimate on the things not seen as upon the things that are seen. Who could have supposed that the small allowance for this anomalous class of so-called christian workers would have engrossed their affections and excited the cupidity of unworthy applicants for church membership! The sequel shows, when too late, that it did, and that the amount was more than double what many of them were earning before.

ITS DEVELOPMENT (BY THE NATIVES.)

In course of time, these early assistants, if they proved to have ability and energy, were promoted, and in due time were ordained to the full work of the ministry, and put in charge, as pastors of churches or out stations, and in most cases their allowance was increased. From the time they were entrusted with responsibility they were, by virtue of their position, the ushers of the church, and practically, so far as the natives were concerned, in full command of the mission and churches.

The good fortune of these men soon became a subject of remark and their position an object of desire. And very naturally others turned their attention to this line of business—called by the natives, Keaw Mung-Sang-e—church business—for much of their time was their own for other business, the pay was not only good but sure at the end of each month and the work to be done was not of a laborious character, only a little talking. [Just here, in brackets, allow me to say that I know of no vocation in which a man, native or foreigner, who is destitute of energy and true consecration, can, if so disposed, live a more limpid, languid, lazy and comfortable life, than in that of a so-called worker among the heathen.]

At this stage, if the missionary could command the means, and was disposed to heed the suggestions and blandishments of his native preachers, in regard to extending his work, the process of development was, and still is, simplicity itself. Persons who wished to enter the foreign religion applied to the native pastor or assistant, and expressed a wish to become a christian, and asked for instruction. He taught them generally, and especially what they were to believe; and what was necessary to join the church, etc. When they were supposed to be sufficiently advanced in the knowledge of these things, they were brought to the missionary, who finding them endorsed by his trusted native preacher, and able to stand a very creditable examination, gladly received them into the church. If they were diligent in the study of the Scriptures and were attentive to their religious duties, it was only a matter of time when many of them on the recommendation of the native preacher, were employed as preachers, colporters, chapel keepers, bible-women, boatmen, house servants, or in some other capacity in the mission.

It has always been difficult to resist the plausible argument that when native disciples are employed by the mission, they are better able to keep the Sabbath, and have more time to attend to their religious duties. Moreover, it is more seemly to have christians rather than heathen in the employ of the mission and church. Thus some missions acting in concert with the suggestions of their native brethren—whose recommendation is prima facie evidence that the applicant is worthy—have a large portion of their more intelligent members in the pay of the mission. And if they have not a supply of suitable men in their own churches to meet their demand for native agents, they do not object to receive applicants from the churches of other missions. This fact verifies the result of my own investigations, that all our missions have been prospected by would-be native agents, to find where men and money are freely used, and where the highest pay is given, just as a gold field is prospected for rich deposits. To check this roving spirit on the part of native disciples, was the object of the resolutions which were adopted at one of our monthly conferences more than a year ago, and good results have followed.

Thus the development of this method is seen to be simple, adroit and effective. Its natural tendency is towards a co-operative society for the good of the interested parties.

The sanguine missionary, who has not had the time, or who will not take the trouble to study the character of the people, and the motives by which they are actuated, sees, or thinks he sees, the wisdom of this method in its results which are attested by larger accessions, and consequently by a more lively interest in every department of work. He sees that numbers incite emulation, and he is so favorably impressed with the importance of the system, from its results, that he deems schools of a high grade, from its results, that he deems schools of a high grade, from which to secure a class of better educated agents, an absolute necessity. And schools are inaugurated. Thus, in his co-operative system, each new scheme that involves the expenditure of money in the building of houses, and the employment of men, adds eclat to the mission and the working of the method of mission work by native agency.

This is doubtless a certain kind of success. But judging from its results, when rightly interpretated, is it religious success? Is it a work of grace? Does it make honest, earnest, and God-fearing men? (men who are zealous for the christianization of their own people.) If not, then it is a success not in the direction in which we are trying to move, and calls loudly for serious consideration and re-adjustment. The less sanguine missionary has all along had grave doubts about the expediency, and even of the sanity of the method that can receive into the sacred office of a religious teacher, inexperienced young men just out of school, and men from any class of society who have been but a short time professing christians. He has looked in vain for what he would regard as good results from such a class of anomalous christian (?) workers. The evil results are manifest. He has abundant proof that the whole system from the temptation it presents to all church members to seek and expect employment, or some temporal good from their connection with the church is disorganizing and destructive of all honest efforts to secure anything like discipline and voluntary work in his own mission where this method is not freely used. Of late years I have been giving special attention to this matter of native agency, and by the signs of the times around me, and by my own experience with the three or four whose work I have attempted to direct, as well as by inquiries I have received, verbal and written, from missionaries far or near, as to the best method of infusing more of the life and power of religion into their native assistants and church members; I am more and more confirmed in the opinion that the connection of the large and increasing staff of native assistants, with the missions in China, is with a very large proportion of them, a business relation—an easy way of making a comfortable living—and that the influence of a very large proportion of them is, for the want of consecration, against the introduction of the pure religion of our Lord Jesus among the Chinese. For they, in common with all Chinese, are so extremely mercenary, that all who join the churches, where their influence, so far as the natives are concerned, is paramount, cannot but be influenced by their manner of life. Even those who come in from the purest of motives, will, in their ignorance, soon fall into line with those who have preceded them. For "a little leaven leaveneth the whole lump." It has taken a generation to develop the true animus of this method, and show us that the whole membership of our churches, male and female—except an honorable minority—are expectants for some temporal good from their connection with the churches; and it must be evident to all who will give this subject serious consideration, that it is only a matter of time, and not a long time either, when this system will, not covertly, but openly, have the control of all our work among the Chinese, and leave us with nothing but the outline of our respective church systems to contemplate.

This has been as natural as its introduction by the early missionaries, and development by native assistants. Reinforcements from home naturally adopted the methods of their seniors on the field, which had been virtually adopted by their respective mission boards or committees. They were not in a position to investigate anything. And most of all, they naturally took it for granted that the preachers and other assistants were all right; in fact, they learned of them, and when, from various causes, they were left in charge of the mission—perhaps in many cases long before they had much experience or knowledge of the language—their whole time and attention were directed mainly to keeping the machinery of a large staff going. And perhaps they were too much enraptured with their method or busy work, to consider the effect of all this rush and whirl of business, upon the spiritual growth of young churches taken from among the heathen, who had had no previous religious knowledge. And very few missionaries live long enough on the field to witness the development and matured fruit of any method or system of work that was inaugurated in their term of service. Hence, the results of the last thirty-five years' experiment are, to use the mildest terms, spiritual apathy to the fact that men, with an eye to business, have been imported into the mission work, and that the business faculty has been cultivated to the neglect of the spiritual element.

Now it is no derogation of the integrity of the missionaries who introduced and perpetuated this method of employing native assistants, to say that some of those assistants who were active during the process of development, and who were trusted to an almost unlimited extent, have proved to be knaves and hypocrites; with some of whom gain or pleasure was godliness, nor to say that others who are now actively employed, whose moral idiosyncracies have not been detected—a thing difficult to do among a people who under all circumstances, will shield each other—are doubtless equally guilty. The extent of the malady with which the churches in China have been inoculated during the years of development, cannot be estimated. The evil is probably most virulent in missions where its presence is least suspected. The Chinese are very plausible and adroit in concealing such matters, even under the closest surveillance.

One serious error that has been unwittingly committed, has been such a free use of money in the employment of native assistants, as to make it, rather than the gospel, the attracting power. The missionaries are not alone responsible for the existing state of things. A certain amount of responsibility must be charged to the account of the home churches and foreign mission boards, who must have results, or prospective schemes of work, programs, commendable methods, or something else sensational, to excite and keep up the interest at home. But in all this, the missionaries, who are at the same time the bellows and the trip hammer, are responsible. If there are no results, and the interest at home declines, they are the persons who have failed to meet expectations.

But the grand mistake that has entailed the evils described, and that by the schemes to which some are inextricably committed, is destined to be handed down, is this: the large numbers of native assistants now in the employ of the different missions—some having over a hundred—have been called and put into the ministry, or put into the place of a religious teacher, by the missionaries themselves, and not by the Lord of the harvest. The necessary qualification of heart and spirit—consecration—seems to have been ignored. The Scripture teaches that "it is not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord." Again, "Except the Lord build the house, they labor in vain that build it."

Therefore, having for many years closely watched the developments of the methods and systems now in general use; and scrutinized the few assistants in my connection, most of whom are paid by the native church, and observed that none of them, after much teaching and training, have improved much in preaching power since they commenced, and that none within the range of my acquaintance have developed into able and reliable ministers of the New Testament—to whom a church or mission station could be safely intrusted without oversight—I have, after patient and prayerful consideration of the whole subject, come to the conclusion that the free use of foreign money in connection with mission work, in the employment of native agents, and in schemes for the education of heathen young men and women in English and the sciences, and in Chinese classical literature, in order that they may be better prepared for the work of native agency, if they become christians while in school, is the bane, yea, the dry-rot of modern missions.

The history of the past justifies me in the use of this strong language; for it is a lamentable fact that most of those who join the church while in school, and from whom so much was expected, have, after they left school, utterly failed to meet expectations. All their aggressive religious enthusiasm evaporated; and they were left without any heart to work for a change in the religious condition of their countrymen

These schemes, etc., read well at home; for they are consonant with home ideas and home methods; but as evangelizing agencies, they are not sound in China, where the ballast of previous religious knowledge is wanting. Being destitute of a true moral sense, the Chinese are another people. And we can not safely entrust to a native the responsible work of converting his countrymen to Christ without manifest evidence of true consecration. Hence, in my judgment, it will require many more years in the wilderness, before the Chinese can be trusted with sacred things, for with the ordinary assistant, a good living, with light work, is the inspiration. A little observation, and the slightest test, in the way of a reduction of wages for want of fidelity, will prove it. With the young men in the schools, places of emolument in government or corporation employ is the goal to which most of them aspire. If they fail of this they have the position of compradore in a foreign firm; or, as a last resort, native agency to fall back upon. As in the past so in the present, and so it will be in the future. Many of them will join the church while in the school; but when they go out into the busy and wicked world, and partake of the spirit of their new companions, and are fortunate, or unfortunate enough to secure lucrative employment, most of them, following the national instincts, fall into the Chinese slough of iniquity—polygamy, or something worse. This is the history of a large proportion of this class who could secure the means, in the past. They may become men of great influence in public positions, and be of great service in developing the resources of the country, and some of them may not worship idols again; but they can not, it seems, live moral lives and maintain their position among their fellows.

In this hasty sketch, I have endeavored to set forth the truth, according to my experience and observation for thirty-six years, in regard to the introduction, development and perpetuation of the method of mission work for the evangelization of the Chinese by means of paid native agency.

Is this method, as now employed, Scriptural? When we consider the character of many of the agents who have been employed for years; their manifest want of spiritual power in their ministrations; and their general apathy in regard to the spiritual interest of their own friends and countrymen; a negative answer almost goes without saying, for there is neither precept nor example in the New Testament, nor practice in the churches, with which we are severally connected at home, for such an anomalous class of religious teachers. There, no man is employed to preach who does not, by his interest in spiritual things, give credible evidence that he is called of God. Do our native assistants, as a rule, show more spiritual interest in the religious condition of those about them, than is required to attend to the routine work assigned them? "Lay hands suddenly on no man" was an Apostolic injunction. Have we not violated this injunction by putting men—not against their wishes—into the ministry before they had time to develop a spirit of consecration? They did not have time to decide whether or not they would be able to withstand the temptations of a sinful world. This experience they had to learn in the employ of the mission. Hence, we have no reasonable grounds to be surprised at lamentable failures. Now if these things be so, this method is not spiritual. "Moreover, it is required in stewards that a man be found faithful." Do we act as though we considered our assistants faithful? If so, why keep them under surveillance? Some of them are really good men, but not effective preachers. They have grown in the knowledge of the Scriptures—for they have been carefully taught—but they have not grown in grace, in love to God and the souls of men as we had reason to expect. Theirs is a kind of negative goodness that is neutralized by the combined influence of the majority; for the mass of them confine themselves to the routine work assigned them, and show no spontaneous desire and effort for the spiritual good of others. They are too easily satisfied with a service that will secure to them their monthly wages. Now, do not these considerations, and much more that might be adduced, go to show that the employment of such men as preachers of our holy religion is not Scriptural?

Again. As a method of work, is native agency, as now employed, calculated to advance the best interest of evangelization among the Chinese? What is your experience in this matter? I am persuaded that if we had the courage of our convictions, many, for reasons already assigned, would unhesitatingly say, No. For one, I am now thoroughly convinced that the system as a whole—for want of consecration on the part of a large majority of the agents—is damaging our cause with the Chinese people. For, as it is generally known that they are called or employed and supervised by the missionary; that they are paid out of the mission and not by the native church, they are looked upon as foreign employes, as hirelings, in a depreciative guise. And as they are generally regarded as the exponents of our holy religion, we have no reason to be surprised that their spirit and manner of presenting it in the first instance, are not calculated to recommend it. No better scheme could be devised for secularizing our religion and for destroying all cordial christian sympathy between the employed and unemployed portions of our churches. Jealousies there are, and will be, but no christian love.

Therefore, native agency in mission work, as it is now generally employed by missions in China, is not calculated to promote the best interest of evangelization among the Chinese.

What then? Dispense with native assistants altogether? By no means. Native assistants, under certain Scriptural conditions, will become indispensable factors in the evangelization of the Chinese, but after an experiment of thirty years, it is manifest that they not only will not, but can not, attain to the conditions required, under the present methods. To secure the native ministry that will do the work required, we must reconstruct our whole system of work, and commence anew, and on the basis of voluntary workers. And to do this effectively, it will be necessary to cut off absolutely and forever not only all claims of the natives upon the foreign treasury, but all expectations of temporal aid from the missions. Christ says, "I am the true vine, and my Father is the husbandman. Every branch in me that beareth not fruit he taketh away, and every branch that beareth fruit, he purgeth it, that it may bring forth more fruit." Now we know that parasites do not bear fruit. The plant may be thriving and look well, and so the parasite that draws his nourishment from our missions, may be very promising; but if either of them fail to bring forth the fruit of the true vine, then let us purge it and be rid of parasitism that is directly and indirectly sapping the very life of the vine we are laboring to plant in this vineyard; for it is manifest that many of them do not bring forth the fruit of the Spirit.

To find voluntary workers, the men whom God has called to teach and preach the gospel, let the churches, in class, be thoroughly trained in the Scriptures, till they know God, and Jesus Christ whom he has sent; know his condescending love to them and to all men, in revealing himself to a lost world; know his promises, and the glorious reward that awaits the faithful and active in his service; know and realize the obligation under which they are placed to do all that is in their power to make known the great love of God as displayed in the gift and dying love of Jesus Christ. All these points should be taught till they are not only known intellectually, but till they are apprehended in the mind and heart; till the members of the class can see and realize that christianity is something more than the mortality of their time-honored systems, that morality is only a test of christianity, but it is not christianity; that a man may be, to all appearances, a strictly moral man, and yet be spiritually dead, a mere parasite—in a word, that a true christian is distinguished by a personal and voluntary [illegible] toward Christ and his cause and [illegible] without which the individual is [illegible] dead, and has no right to [illegible] things, and draw his support from [illegible] or church.

Again during this period of voluntary [illegible]

REV. C. T. BAILEY, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.
J. C. CADDELL, AGENT AND CORRESPONDENT.

THE NORTH CAROLINA BAPTIST HISTORICAL SOCIETY.

This Society was organized at Reidsville, N. C., in 1885, during the session of the Baptist State Convention, which met at that place. Rev. J. S. Purefoy was its first President, and continued as such until the temporary suspension of the Society in 1889. During the four years that elapsed between these dates the proceedings of the Society were not regularly kept, or if so, have been lost. The latest recorded meeting before that held at Goldsboro of last year was that held at Durham, N. C., Nov. 26th, 1887. At this latter meeting Dr. T. Hume delivered the annual address.

The Society was reorganized during the session of the Baptist State Convention at Goldsboro last November. Dr. T. Hume was elected President, J. C. Caddell, Secretary, and Prof. W. L. Poteat, Treasurer. Tuesday of the Wake Forest commencement week was set as the time for the next meeting of the Society. Rev. H. W. Battle is expected to deliver the annual address. Rev. J. T. Alderman, who is in possession of important historical facts bearing especially upon North Carolina Baptist history, will also make an address on that occasion.

The meeting at Goldsboro was a spirited one. The Society was not only re-organized, but its special work was resumed, with a determination to push it to success. The selection of officers was a wise one. We are satisfied, however, that the old officers did the best they could under the circumstances and under the peculiar difficulties with which they had to contend. Our people are continually making history, but they have been slow to record it so as to be reached by the generations that follow. There are those again who do not see the importance of preserving State denominational history, considering it unimportant when placed by the side of more general denominational history, forgetting the importance of State documents in preparing general histories. It is to be remembered, too, that it has only been since the overthrow of the Establishment in America that our people have found a land and a country in which they enjoy real civil and religious liberty, and hence immunity from persecution. It has been then within the last fifty years that Baptist historians have given special attention to Baptist history, and the result is that we have several works, more or less exhaustive, which contain such a record of the past struggles and triumphs of our people, as well as the present prospects and possibilities that are before us, as to fill our hearts with gratitude to him who has led us through the wilderness of trial and given us in these latter days a goodly heritage.

In the Wake Forest library is a place for the books and documents of the Society. A more suitable place for the collection and preservation of such documents could not be found. We are informed that there are already some valuable documents collected there. It is well to have the records of our denominational history, both State and general, collected and preserved at our leading State institution, where they will be easily accessible to the young men who, under God, will have much to do with moulding the future civil and religious history of the State. We are sure that the wide awake President of Wake Forest College would only be the happier to place in the hands of his students books and documents that furnish the strongest evidence that they are identified with a people who, by God's blessing, have been a mighty factor in developing the civil and religious history of the world. It is a fact that none can deny that many of our young men, otherwise bright and intelligent, are not well informed in Baptist history. If the truth were known, some who have drifted into other folds that they imagined had more ecclesiastical and historical prestige than the Baptists, have done so partly from ignorance of the great people who have a history of which they are not ashamed; a people who have ever been the stern and uncompromising foes to civil and ecclesiastical tyranny, and friends to freedom of conscience and worship; a people who, though they do not assume lordly airs as they point to their historical record, yet claim truthfully that their hands have never been [illegible] with the blood of persecution.

[illegible] important do we deem the subject of [illegible] history, and so important is it that [illegible] especially should be better [illegible] that we think it should be made a specialty in the course of instruction in our Seminary at Louisville, and in our Baptist theological schools in other sections of our great country. This suggestion is made with no intention whatever to question the wisdom of the Board of Trustees, or the competent president and professors who control the course of instruction at our noble Seminary. President Broadus, and his able assistants, are fully abreast with the theological progress of the age; and yet, we know these men well enough to risk saying that they do not object to kindly suggestions from the brotherhood at large. Of course Baptist history is taught to some extent in our Seminary, under the general head of "Church History;" but it is a well known fact that the standard church histories of the day, such as Mosheim's, Neander's, &c., are by Pedobaptist authors, and while these authors were men of undoubted ability and average fairness, yet it is asking more than human nature usually grants to expect these men, and others like them, to do full justice to our people. The most charitable reader of Mosheim can but notice that he was not careful to distinguish between the many pious men and women whom Rome anathematized because they would not practice her baptism and accept her doctrines, and whom she called Anabaptists, and those filled with the fanaticism of Carlostadt, or even the mad men of Munster. It should not be forgotten also that American, and other translators of standard histories, are quite prone, by translation and copious foot-notes, to insinuate thrusts, here and there, at a people on whom the author did not intend the record to reflect, and who really may not have been in his mind when he wrote. It is indeed a contemptible piece of ecclesiastical charletanry to attempt to hold a great denomination responsible for the folly or fanaticism of any body of men who figured in past civil commotions, because of some possible similarity of name or doctrine. Baptist history has, we verily believe, never been fully written; we need not expect to find it in the writings of Pedobaptist authors; it is a big theme; it should be written by a competent hand, and its study should be a specialty in the course at our Seminary, and the book containing it should be in our libraries. Benedict's, Cramp's, Armitage's histories of the Baptists, while containing much valuable matter, are not entirely satisfactory as histories. If we were called upon to lay our hand on the man among us best prepared to give us the work we need, and one that should be included in the course of the Seminary in which he is an honored professor, we would select Dr. W. H. Whitsitt of Louisville, Ky.

But we have wandered from our subject. This is a right, however, often exercised by preachers and editors, even if it is rather reluctantly admitted by the people. We are glad to know, then, that the North Carolina Baptist Historical Society is reorganized. We bid it God-speed in rescuing from oblivion documents and records that throw light upon our past history in North Carolina and in other States. Those who heard Dr. Whitsitt at our State Convention at Henderson, and those who have read the articles contributed by our State historian, Jno. W. Moore, for the RECORDER, must be impressed with the fact that there is much even of North Carolina Baptist history not yet written.

Let all of our people, then, cheerfully aid the Society in their important work. This can be done by sending the Secretary old church records, scraps of history, bits of old manuscripts, recollections of older brethren committed to writing, etc., etc. A hearty sympathy and co-operation on the part of our people will tell materially in the accomplishment of the Society's plans.

FROM OUR TRAVELLING AGENT.

PILOT MOUNTAIN S. S. ASSOCIATION.

This Association closed a pleasant session at Mt. Airy Sunday night. The program was a good one, suggesting a discussion of the specific and legitimate work of the Sunday-school. More thought as to the "fitness of things" ought to be exercised in making programs than we sometimes find for our public meetings. Many speakers who are careful about what they say are often hampered and fail to say what they wish to say, and what ought to be said, because of the inappropriateness of the subject to the occasion.

I was glad to meet Dr. T. H. Pritchard at Greensboro on his way to the Association to make a speech on Foreign Missions. We practically had charge of the train till at Walnut Cove we were heavily reinforced by brethren Brown, Broughton, Conrad and Martin of Winston, Bro. D. F. King of Leaksville, and some other good laymen whose names I do not now recall.

We reached Mt. Airy at eleven p. m. and found the brethren in force at the depot ready to send us to homes for the session. It was found on organization that nearly all the schools were represented—most of them by delegates and only a few by letter.

The body was permanently organized by electing Rev. L. G. Broughton president, and Bro. Martin secretary and treasurer.

Bro. Broughton made a good presiding officer, giving as he did zest to the discussions, which, without this quality in the moderator, would often drag and be uninteresting.

Bro. Martin protested strongly against being made secretary, but the brethren knew best, and so they put it on him, then he behaved quite nicely and did his work admirably. Men who shrink from public duties are often the very best men for the positions. Men who are over anxious to speak are just the men whom very few want to hear.

Dr. Pritchard having to leave on Saturday morning, his speech was put on for Friday night. This was the Doctor's first visit to Mt. Airy, and while all enjoyed the excellent address, the many who had never heard him before were very profuse in praise of the effort. We were all benefitted, for a good speech at the beginning of a meeting like this carries with it a momentum which is felt in all subsequent exercises. At the close of the address Bro. Brown, with that spirit of manly unselfishness and noble magnanimity which characterizes all dealings, offered a resolution of thanks for the Association to Dr. Pritchard for his excellent address. Bro. Brown is in fine spirits, and seemed to enjoy all the exercises of the meeting—always in the rear and yet always in the lead. Speaking for myself, I can but feel some innocent, modest congratulations that "Old Virginy" did "get left" one time.

Bro. D. F. King made several interesting and practical talks on the Sunday-school work. He is at home on this subject, and is thoroughly in earnest about using the best means to carry forward the work. He is well posted on all denominational work, genial, kind in disposition, and is at all times careful of the feelings and respectful toward the opinions of his brethren, yet strong and aggressive in his convictions of what is right and expedient.

On Saturday night Bro. L. G. Broughton preached the introductory sermon from the text, "Thy word is a lamp unto my feet and a light unto my pathway." The sermon was first class from beginning to end. Among its excellent features was the evidence of honest and careful preparation on the part of the speaker. His arrangement was natural and suggestive, and his presentation was strong and vigorous. Brother Broughton is giving himself to his work, and with the blessings of health he is destined to be one of the ablest and most useful men in the denomination.

Bro. S. F. Conrad never fails to meet with his brethren when there is work for the Master to be done in his Association. He is always ready to do his part of the work, and the sacrificing if necessary. I know of no man in the State who is more zealous for the success of the Baptist cause than Bro. Conrad. He preached an excellent sermon to a large audience in the Baptist church Sunday morning.

Dr. J. W. Conrad of Winston is the superintendent of the Sunday-school of the First church in Winston. His speech on "How to Teach the Lesson" was evidence of the wisdom of his people in putting him in the position he now holds.

The brethren gave Bro. Mills and the ten orphan children who are giving some entertainments at different churches, a hearty reception. Sunday night was given to Bro. Mills, and after his talk, which is always strong and effective, and some exercises on the part of the children, a collection was taken amounting to about sixty dollars for the Orphanage.

Every one seemed to have a good time, and the brethren and citizens of the town did everything possible for the comfort and pleasure of those who were present.

FORTY-FOURTH ANNUAL COMMENCEMENT OF CHOWAN INSTITUTE.

The large attendance of the members of the Board of Trustees was one of the encouraging features of the commencement. The conversations I had with different members of the Board were only so many reassurances of the great future which the Institute holds. An institution of learning has gone a long ways toward success when it possesses the real love and hearty co-operation of its friends and those who direct its course.

The annual sermon to the graduating class was preached on Tuesday night by Rev. R. VanDeventer of Henderson from the text, "That our daughters may be as corner stones, polished after the similitude of a palace." The appropriateness of the text was not more striking than were the strong and apt illustrations of the preacher. The sermon was one full of thought, and from beginning to end wore the most unmistakable evidences of careful painstaking labor. That portian of the discourse which defined how and in what the real strength of woman consists, her sphere of operation and nature of her work, would find a grateful response in every Southern audience.

WEDNESDAY MORNING.

This is commencement day, and a more perfect day could not be imagined. The beautiful campus, with its lovely flowers and songs of the birds, seem to be vieing with the music of the piano and the beauty of the girls in the college building.

At 10 o'clock the chapel was full to overflowing to listen to the following program:

Processional March—Marche Aux Flambeaux (four pianos) Clark, Misses Willis, Copeland, Garrett, Britton, P. Baker, M. Timberlake, B. Brewer, Joyner.

Celebre Minute de Mozart (two pianos) Arr. by Babbaerts, Misses Mamie and Jessie Brewer.

Chorus—Sunrise, White, by the school.

Inst. Solo—Nocturne, Op 48, No. 1 Chopin, Miss Salsbury.

Vocal Solo—Si Tu Savais, Romanza, Balfe, Miss Fannie Penny.

Essay—"A Life of Duty versus a Life of Pleasure," Miss Bettie Frank Brown, Murfreesboro, N. C.

Inst. Duo—Sonate in D Major (two pianos), Misses Norfleet and Cannady.

Vocal Solo—Ah! I've Sighed to Rest Me, from Il Trovatore, Miss Alma Penny.

Ints. Solo—Souvenird' Amerique, Josefly, Miss Briggs.

Vocal Duet—Over the Hawthorn Hedge, Glover, Misses Bullock and Cannedy.

Essay—"The New South," Miss Julia Hinton Nowell, Bertie county, N. C.

Inst. Solo—Ballade in A flat, Fr. Chopin, Miss Phelps.

Vocal Solo—Darling, Millard, Miss Maggie Ferrell.

Overture—Sarguio (four pianos), Arr. by Burchard, Misses Daughtrey, Speight, C. Timberlake, Bishop, A. and M. Ferrell, Bunn, F. Penny.

Vocal Quartet—Moonlight on the Lake, White, Misses A. and M. Ferrell, A. Penny, Bullock.

The diplomas were presented to Misses Bessie F. Brown, Murfreesboro, N. C., Julia H. Nowell, Bertie county, and William A. Phelps, Henderson, in some well chosen remarks by Rev. R. VanDeventer.

The report of President Brewer showed the session just closed the best the Institute ever had. The part of the report which related to the health and progress of the girls was particularly cheerful—not a single case of serious sickness in the school during the session. One of the interesting features of the occasion to me was to witness the healthful and vigorous appearance of the girls.

At 12 o'clock W. W. Kitchen, the orator of the occasion, was introduced by E. F. Aydlett of Elizabeth City in words which placed the speaker under large obligations to the audience. Some of us, however, who had known Mr. Kitchen before, and had heard him on other occasions, felt no sort of doubt that the speaker would fail to meet the highest expectations of his hearers. After some preliminaries well suited to the occasion, the speaker announced as his theme "The glory that is not man's." He had the good opinion of his audience, having last year performed some platform duties at Murfreesboro on a similar occasion. The position the speaker maintained was one which would be held by every true Southern man—not claiming for women a place along with reformers, statesmen, warriors and inventors, and yet recognizing that they have ever had a part in all the struggles in which men have engaged for liberty, reform, and for the advancement of the cause of christianity.

At the close of the address a basket of beautiful flowers were presented to the speaker by Judge B. B. Winbourn of Murfreesboro, N. C.

The following program for the concert Wednesday speaks for itself to lovers of music:

Processional March—Marche des Tambours (three pianos), Smith. Misses Johnson, J. Nowell, Fox, Bush, Heath, Majetti.

Salutatory—In French. Miss William A. Phelps, Henderson, N. C.

Chorus—Away, away, away, the morning freshly breaking, Masaniello. By the school.

Overture—Lalla Roukh (three pianos), arr. by Charles Pollet. Misses H. and M. Vann, K. and I. Newsome, Joyner, Dickerson.

Vocal dcett—Hear me, Norma, Bellini. Misses Garrett and Biggs.

Recitation—"Where's Annette?" Aden. Miss Virginia Green Joyner.

Vocal Quartet—Moonlight will come again, Will. L. Thompson. Misses B. Brewer, Montford, Ferrell, Phelps.

Inst. Solo—L'Africaine, Franz Bendel. Miss Brewer.

Vocal Solo—Queen of the night, Torry. Miss Alice Ferrell.

La Sonnambula, Op. 9 (three pianos), Fesca. Misses J. and B. Brewer, Biggs, Cannady, Norfleet, Daughtrey.

Vocal Solo—Bobolink, Bischoff. Miss Bullock.

Recitation—"The Confessional", W. W. Story. Miss Caroline Ferrell.

Grand Quartuor Concertant (four pianos), Gounod. Misses J. Brewer, Phelps, Salisbury, B. Brewer.

It is always some temptation to make special mention of some who do their part extraordinarily well, but the part of each one was so well done, reflecting great credit upon the capacity of the girls, as well as upon the competency and faithfulness of teachers, that it would appear out of place to mention specially the name of any individual.

At ten o'clock the exercises closed. Two hours were given by President Brewer in order that another program not written might be executed in the parlors and on the verandas, and as no one has given any authentic account of these last proceedings, my report must close here. J. C. C.

....Our brethren are now gathering at Wake Forest. This commencement is the completion of the most prosperous year in the history of the College. During the session 233 students have been enrolled. There are about thirty graduates—the largest class ever before graduated. Good work has been done by both faculty and students. The commencement exercises promise to be attractive and well attended.

....The Chicago University, it is published, will commence work in October next with seventy regular instructors, besides forty fellows, who may be employed in supplementing the teaching force. Each fellow receives from $300 to $500. Up to date fifteen hundred students have indicated their wish to enter the University in October. It is believed there will be at least one thousand students to commence with.

....Dr. Lorimer in his life of Spurgeon, calls attention to the great preacher's dislike of over-discussion after a worldly sort. "Lead us not into temptation" meant to him very much like keep us away from committee meetings. He reduced his large committee, formed for the erection of the Tabernacle, to smaller and smaller dimensions until at last he had about a half dozen loyal trusty souls who believe in the thing. With that cordial, faithful backing, he went ahead and achieved success.—Standard.

....The commencement exercises of the Theological Seminary took place on Thursday of last week in the Broadway church. There are seven full graduates, beside eclectic and English graduates—R. E. L. Robertson of South Carolina—three from South Carolina, two from Virginia, one from Kentucky and one from Alabama.

....The Methodist General Conference decided that hereafter laymen and ministers shall be seated separately, each constituting a separate house. The basis of representation is one minister and one laymen for each forty-five ministers. The arrangement of separate houses was made at the request of the laymen, who claimed that in a single house they were not so well known and not so readily recognized as the ministers, and therefore had less influence in the discussions. The new plan appears to be generally approved.—Journal and Messenger.

....The church at Dunn was dedicated on Sunday, May 29th, 1892. Rev. W. F. Watson, the popular pastor, made a statement about the beginning and progress of the work in that place. Dr. C. Durham preached the sermon and Bro. Wm. Bland lead in the closing prayer. This new church, of about one hundred members, has not only built and paid for in full for one of the best houses of worship in the State, but on the day of dedication showed their appreciation of the aid received through our Board of Missions by taking a collection for State Missions.

....The Churchmen in this hamlet are the influential population. They are not dissenters seeking for "society." They carry an ancestral Prayer-book. There is nothing finer of its sort than the seasoned, inherited Virginia Episcopalianism. And there is nothing so forbidden, repulsive, small as the parvenu "novi hominis" with pockets puffed with pelf, pushing into the pews of the grandees of the Colonial Period. The ex-negro traders and overseers fumbling to find Sexagesima Sunday is a sight to make an angel lose his morning meal of manna through his mouth.—Dr. Lafferty, in the Richmond Christian Advocate.

....The Presbyterian General Assembly has remanded the case of Dr. Briggs to the New York Presbytery for trial. When the case first came up in New York, the Presbytery voted not to proceed to trial, with the hope of avoiding difficulty. The instructions now require it to investigate the case and come to a decision one way or another, from which decission an appeal can be taken. The Assembly has declared Dr. Briggs' chair vacant de jure, since it refused last year to consent to his election. The friends of Dr. Briggs are seeking to take the seminary out of the denomination, and retain control of the property.—Journal and Messenger.

....Laziness and selfishness are twin brothers. Let us learn a lesson from the great school-house of nature. The heart, the most important organ in the body, is spent for the other members. The heart never gets any of the blood which passes through it. It is simply a medium through which to transmit life-giving power to the other members of the body, and the moment it stops to drink up its own blood, death comes to the entire body. Just so is the position of the christian. He is a medium through which God transmits his life-giving power to the church.—Rev. L. G. Broughton at S. S. Convention, Mt. Airy, N. C.

....Dr. Geo. C. Lorimer in speaking on "Baptist Missions the Sequence of Baptist Principles" before the Missionary Union at Philadelphia, May 24th, said: "A Baptist is compelled to engage in foreign missions because of his fundamental beliefs which are: 1. The supremacy of christianity among the religions of the world. 2. The supremacy of the Bible among the authorities of the world. 3. The supremacy of humanity among the warring races of the earth. We have no right to discuss the wisdom of foreign missions. God decided that before we were born. We only have to go, and if need be, die in preaching, as God has commanded."

....Last Sunday was observed as "Children's Day" in the First Baptist church of Raleigh. In the morning, Pastor Carter preached a forcible sermon on the "Duty of Parents to their Children," taking as his text the latter clause of Eph. 6: 4—"But bring them (the children) up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord." At 4 p. m. a large congregation assembled to witness the interesting exercises of the Infant Class and small scholars of the Sunday-school. Bro. W. H. Dodd conducted the exercises, aided by Sister Dodd at the piano. The children performed the program admirably, and showed the careful training given them by their teachers. The pulpit was beautifully festooned by flowers and evergreens. A mission collection was taken, and the large audience retired well pleased with the entertainment.

....Rev. Thomas Dixon, Jr., has made a gift to the Euzelian Society of Wake Forest College of his portrait by the noted New York artist Albert James Conant, one of the first portrait painters of America, and the same who painted the famous portrait of Henry Ward Beecher, which hangs in Plymouth church. Mr. Dixon's portrait is life size, and represents the young pulpit orator in the act of speaking. His face is turned slightly to the right, and he holds his notes in his left hand, while his right, according to his usual custom, is half thrust in his bosom. Mr. Conant has not many paintings, and this is one of his very finest. It is doubtful whether as a work of art the portrait is surpassed by any painting in the South, and the Euzelian Society showed its appreciation of the gift and giver by promptly insuring the painting for $1,000.—News and Observer.

Dr. Carter at Chapel Hill.

The Baccalaureate sermon at the University this week by Dr. J. W. Carter, Pastor of the First Baptist church in Raleigh, met all the demands of the great occasion, and gave high satisfaction to all who heard him. In fact, it was declared by many to be the very best commencement sermon they had ever heard; while others declared it, without any qualification whatever, the best they ever heard on any occasion.

The text was from Psalm 85: 11—"Truth shall spring out of the earth; and righteousness shall look down from heaven." Notwithstanding the morning was quite rainy, the chapel was well filled with an intelligent and critical audience, which testified its hearty appreciation of the sermon by giving unflagging attention to it during the hour and ten minutes the great preacher devoted to the discussion of the subject. It was understood that the Senior Class would ask a copy for publication.

At night, Bro. Carter preached again, notwithstanding the rain, to an appreciative congregation, an exceedingly interesting sermon on the death of Moses. Of course, the Baptists were delighted that the representative of their denomination acquitted himself so well; but the people and students generally will join with them in giving a hearty welcome to Dr. Carter whenever he can come to Chapel Hill again.

Union Meeting.

Dear Recorder:—We have just closed one of our old-time Unions. This body has had an honorable history. Organized fourteen years ago, it was the agency through which a large part of the remarkable progress in the Lord's work throughout this section was achieved. For some years, nearly every session witnessed the dedication of a new church. But latterly, the Union seems to have fallen into "innocuous desuetude." The recent meeting was an effort to revive its ancient spirit, and the result was most gratifying. Bro. A. C. Davis' fine introductory sermon set the tune for the whole meeting. There wasn't a dull session nor a dull speech, barring the writer's brief effort. The discussions were spirited and stimulating, and the sermons of Davis, Hunter, Dowell, Hufham and White were of a high order.

The Union went back to its old habit and started another church building, Bishop Hufham engineering the collection. It was a joy to see him in his old pulpit, among his old flock, and with the ease of nature raising money for the Lord's kingdom. We expect to dedicate another house of worship at our next session.

Arrangements were effected among our pastors for the Centennial campaign, which we hope to begin the middle of July.

R. T. VANN.

Among the Brethren.

On Tuesday, May 24th, we left home for the purpose of dedicating the Corinth church, situated near Elizabeth City, and took in a few interesting features on the way. It was our pleasure the same night to meet friends at the Baptist church in Franklin, Va. A more noble set of loyal Baptists can nowhere be found than are the brethren of this growing town, and to all true workers everywhere it may be said: "The saints of Franklin salute you." Their pastor, Bro. McCutcheon, has a firm hold upon his people, being cheered with the heartiest co operation of all his members. It is pleasant to recall such men as J. A. Gay, A. L. Gardener, I. W. Northfleet, and others like them. The Camp brothers, at least three of them, are here also and have found that religious liberality and business success work well together.

Leaving Franklin, the next day we were soon at Portsmouth with our friend, Rev. Geo. E. Truett. What a gem his new church is! How much it reminds us of the unflagging zeal of the pastor and the fidelity of his people. With Bro. Truett we attended H. M. Wharton's meeting at Bro. J. W. Daugherty's tabernacle. The building was crowded. It is superfluous for us to say that H. M. Wharton is one of the most successful evangelists of the present day. We never knew any person to object, either, to his preaching methods, or the results from his meetings. He is always safe, sound, earnest and skilful. It is no wonder that the calls are numerous and urgent which come to him for aid in revival work. We want him ourselves.

On the next day we started for Elizabeth City, reaching there in time to attend prayer-meeting. Rev. C. A. G. Thomas greeted us kindly, showing us many courtesies. It was our privilege to preach for him Sunday night, finding a full house, which is the kind of a house they always have there. Bro. Thomas has worked like a hero for his church, and although showing the effects of his arduous toils, his shadow does not grow less, while he is as strong and hopeful as ever for future service.

The next morning found us at the Berea church attending the Camden and Currituck Union Meeting. It was a great joy to greet once more the dear brethren of this Union Meeting. Rev. Dr. Overby seems to have renewed his youth and preached, and talked, and worked like a young man full of ardor and consecration. More than thirty years has he labored in this Union Meeting, foremost in every good word and work. Long may he be spared to bless those churches by his presence, counsel and example. Berea church is not the old dilapidated building we knew in recent years but a commodious and exceedingly tasteful house, an honor to the neighborhood, and a standing memorial of the prayers, tears and labors of their worthy pastor, Rev. Josiah Elliot. It has been remarked that God made but one Josiah Elliot, and all who come in contact with the man are impressed by the sweetness of his disposition, self forgetfulness, and his devout spirit. The Union Meeting has been strengthened greatly by the coming into it of the Rev. J. B. Harrell, of whom we shall speak presently. Bro. Thos. B. Boushall made an excellent presiding officer and the meetings were so largely attended that on the Saturday it looked more like a great Associational gathering than anything else. And well did the brethren and sisters of Berea church entertain all who came. Considerable interest was manifested in all the departments of denominational work. Bro. Harrell made an excellent speech on Foreign Missions. Bro. Stallings got in some words for the Orphanage. Many kind things were said of the BIBLICAL RECORDER and its editor. It was a pleasure to preach to the brethren and take a part in their discussions. Only they invited us to make too many speeches.

As we have before intimated, the object we had in view in making this trip was to dedicate the Corinth church. The Union Meeting adjourned on Saturday from the Berea church to assemble at the Corinth church Sunday morning. And such an assemblage! The vast crowd was estimated from twelve hundred to twenty-five hundred persons. Probably the more correct number will be found half-way between these figures. Of course, only a small part of this great gathering could find accommodation within the church building, which was not only packed to its utmost capacity, but the doors and the window openings were also crowded. Bro. Harrell is the beloved pastor of this new church. It was his invitation which led us to go and spend a little while in these parts. He has the love and prayers of the people in the churches where he ministers, and no man more thoroughly deserves the confidence and esteem of all his people than does he. We expect to hear great things of his work in the future. We shall long recall the personal attention which he and his excellent wife gave us. By the sight of the vast crowd the members and friends of Corinth church might have feared that their provisions might fail to meet the demand soon to be made upon them; but those long and well-laden tables stretching away in four different directions stood the test for more than two hours while the people gathered by turns around them, and all seemed to leave satisfied. In the evening Dr. Overby preached an exceedingly timely sermon on the duties of a deacon, and at the close of his sermon some four brethren were solemnly set apart to the office thereof.

Notwithstanding heavy rains had fallen and the weather was exceedingly threatening, we filled on Monday night a rather impromptu appointment made for us to speak at the Ramoth Gilead church. When leaving Elizabeth City for this little run some fifteen miles away we were assured it would be in vain, as nobody would come out in such weather; but they came, and remembering our fondness for flowers when in other days we preached to this dear people, we found the pulpit, the stands and the table occupied with some of the choicest boquets upon which our eyes ever feasted. While we talked to these friends, it was no small satisfaction to know that their love and prayers have followed us in our work.

Returning home, we attended prayer-meeting at Dr. Owen's church in Portsmouth. He was the first to welcome us to this great Southland. It was out on the water as we were coming from Washington we met strangers to each other, but have been friends ever since. May heaven's blessings continue to rest upon him, his home and his church!

Many personal incidents of the trip we can not enlarge upon, but one brother started to walk nine miles to see us and did walk six miles of that way. Some whom we once knew have fallen asleep and are awaiting the first resurrection.

Mrs. Hall accompanied us on this pleasant journey, and at the home of our dear friends, W. N. Gregory and wife, late of South Mills, now of Elizabeth City, we found hospitality and kindness never to be forgotten.

J. J. HALL.

Oxford Female Seminary.

Commencement exercises there began with the address at 8:30 p. m. before the Maggie Nutt Missionary Society at the Presbyterian church by Rev. D. W. Herring, missionary to China. It was most fitting that he should make this address; for about eight years ago, shortly after Miss Maggie Nutt had graduated at this school, he had sailed with her as his bride to far-off China, where they have since labored as missionaries.

The address was on China, her people, her condition morally, intellectually, religiously, closing with and earnest appeal for this benighted band. The address was excellent, full of vivid description; of instructiveness burning with a quenchless enthusiasm, and with love for China's perishing millions. We are sure that those who heard the address must feel a keener interes in the work in that land. One of the best passages in his address was the ridicule bestowed on the politicians who would pass the bill to prevent Chinese immigration. The Society owes Mr. Herring a debt of gratitude for his address.

THE CALLIOPEAN SOCIETY.

Tuesday evening was given to the entertainment furnished by this Society. The opera house was full to overflowing, with an attentive and appreciative audience. The exercises opened with prayer by Rev. Joseph Bialock. Then Misses Helen Cannady, Beatrice Harris, Willie Harris, and Ora Jones played a piano quartet.

Prof. F. P. Hobgood introduced the orator for the evening—Rev. T. J. Taylor of Warrenton, N. C. Mr. Taylor took as his subject "Woman, her history, qualities, sphere, duty and opportunities." It has rarely been my pleasure to listen to so admirable an address. No young lady could have listened carefully to such a speech without having a loftier conception of woman's mission on earth. When the address was over—Miss Eva Minor played beautifully. After which, the young ladies of the Society gave a calisthenic drill entitled "The charge of the Light Brigade." It is not too much to say that this was one of the finest calisthenic exhibitions I have ever witnessed, and one cannot too highly compliment the faithful teacher, Miss Mattie Roundtree, who trained them.

COMMENCEMENT DAY.

At 10:30 a. m. on Wednesday, the commencement exercises were opened with prayer by Rev. T. U. Faucette. Then followed a beautiful Overture, Eurganthe, Weber, played by Misses Eva Minor, Lou Long, Carrie Hobgood and Mary Currin.

There were five English graduates—Misses Cornie Petty, Susie Blalock, Willie Harris, Pattie Bass and Maggie Howard. Each read her essay as given below:

Essay—Music hath its Power. Cornie Petty.

Essay—Breaking Doors. Willie Harris.

Essay—The Theory of Life. Pattie Bass.

Class History. Susie Blalock.

Class Prophecy. Maggie Howard.

These essays were highly appreciated by the audience. The one on "Theory of Life" was particularly good.

The music of the morning was very fine. Miss Susie Blalock sang sweetly a production by Rossini. Miss Cornie Petty, besides playing a piano solo, sang beautifully Una Voce Poca Fa by Rossini. Then Miss Lonie Currin gave an exquisite rendition of Concerto in G Minor—Sec. piano accom. Mendelsson.

Miss Cornie Pettie graduated in both instrumental and vocal music, and Miss Lonie Currin in instrumental music.

The morning closed with the awarding of distinctions and diplomas. In awarding the diploman, Rev. C. A. Jenkens made a very humorous and appropriate speech.

THE CONCERT.

Wednesday evening the concert was given at the Opera House. The following young ladies took part in it: Misses Ora Jones, Alvado Green, Annie Cheatham, Susie Gooch, Ella Petty, Marie Dennis, Lizzie Outlaw, Florence Cullier, Willie Harris, Carrie Hobgood, Ruth Ferrebee, Cornie Pettie, Susie Blalock, Eva Carlton and Eva Minor.

The pieces were all well rendered, but the following were specially enjoyed:

Sonata—Op. 26, Beethoven. Marie Dennis.

Soiree et Bal.—Pattison. Carrie Hobgood.

Polacca Brilliante—Weber, Op. 72. Lizzie Outlaw.

Vocal Trio—Down in the Dewey Dell. Smart. Cornie Pettie, Susie Blalock, and Marrie Dennis.

Miss Marvin, the musical instructor, is one of the best that ever taught at the Seminary. Besides the instruction she received in this country, she spent two years at the Royal Conservatory of Berlin, and her work declares her faithfulness.

President Hobgood will introduce, next session, stenography and type-writing. Greater attention will also be given to physical culture than ever before. The teacher of physical culture will take a summer course in the North to perfect her knowledge in this line of work.

A class for Bible study will also be opened with Rev. C. A. Jenkens as teacher. This will insure to all the graduates of the Seminary a good degree of Bible knowledge, a thing for which College graduates are not always conspicuous.

The services of Mrs. M. Parham of Henderson, N. C., a most accomplished teacher, have been secured for next session as Lady Principal—a capital selection.

With a strong faculty, a beautiful and healthy location, in the midst of a cultured and moral community, Prof. Hobgood confidently hopes to carry on the school at Oxford to the highest prosperity, in which good work we all bid him God speed. He says the outlook is exceedingly hopeful.

Roxobel Academy.

The commencement exercises of the Roxobel Academy were held in Sandy Run church on the first of June, no other building in the town being sufficiently large for the purpose. The school stands in close association with the church. From 10 a. m. till half-fast eleven at night, with two intervals, the interest of the crowded house never flagged. The address was delivered in the morning by Prof. Carlyle of Wake Forest, and was a model of what such an address should be. The theme was "True Success in Life," the conditions of which, according to the Professor, are common sense, courage and character. It combined the ideal and the practical in such a way as to be deeply interesting and instructive, and the points were abundantly illustrated by historical and every-day examples. The people were greatly charmed with the substance of the address as well as with its spirited delivery.

The scholars acquitted themselves to the delight of everybody, the recitations and declamations being of a high order of merit, the older scholars especially surprising the adult portion of the assembly by their debate on "the silver question." The boys took hold of the subject in a masterly way, and put the salient points on both sides before the audience in a manner to make the older talkers of politics open their eyes.

The essays and the musical part of the exercises were given at night, the house being again crowded, and the country people staying till the close, though they could not reach home before midnight.

Rev. A. Cree, the Baptist minister, gave a brief closing address, and distributed the prizes to the successful competitors, with an appropriate word to each, one of his own little daughters bearing off a silver cup as a prize. Mr. Cree took occasion to remark on the obligation under which the community lay to such a worthy teacher as Bro. Kennedy, and also to Sister Kennedy who teaches the music class. He thought Bro. Kennedy showed the qualities desiderated by Prof. Carlyle in his address, and needed in the management and tuition of a school, no less than scholarship, for success, common sense, courage and character.

The result of the session's work shown throughout the day were of a high character, and promise well for the future prosperity of the school.

Next session begins in September.

Dinner was provided in the church grove by the ladies, and large though the crowd was, added one more testimony to the fact, that Sandy Run hospitality never fails.

A Revival at Shelby.

I commenced a meeting here on the third Sunday in May, which lasted twelve days. It seemed that everything one could imagine came up to detract and draw away from the interest in the meeting. But we determined to hold the meeting in spite of the "world, the flesh and the devil." The Lord was with us.

There were sixteen conversions. Twenty were added to the church—fourteen by baptism and six by letter. Others will join soon.

I buried with Christ by baptism these fourteen precious converts last Friday evening.

This was a straight out-and-out Baptist meeting, conducted by the pastor, with the assistance of Rev. J. W. Suttle, who was set apart during the meeting to the full work of the gospel ministry.

This meeting closed in the old Baptist fashion with a sermon on "Believer's baptism." Many christians of a different faith were impressed with their duty on this subject. We await results.

Yours sincerely, J. L. SPROLES.

Shelby, May 31, 1890.

Sunday-school Union.

The S. S. Union of the churches of the King's Mountain Association was held this fifth Sunday with Zoar Baptist church. It was largely attended, and great interest manifested in the discussions of queries and plans for Sunday-school work.

I succeeded in raising $25.00 for our Seminary (Student's Fund) and $15.59 for Associational Missions.

The next meeting will likely be held with the New Hope Baptist church.

Sincerely, J. L. SPROLES.

ing, let each church be required and encouraged to meet, at stated periods, for worship among themselves, without the restraint of a foreigner or non-church members, and talk freely about what they have learned about the true God, and of his Son Jesus Christ, the Saviour of the world, and of their obligations to their own people who are blinded by superstition. They will of course have to be led a few times, for it is not enough in religious matters to tell a Chinaman what to do; he must be shown how to do it. It will not be long before some of them, if they have the love of God in their hearts, will be moved with emotion, and come to the front as leaders; and soon they will be recognized and acknowledged as such. Thus we may hope to see grow up a unity and communion of spirit in the church, that would promise well for our future work. If this spirit of consecration does not show itself, then we must wait for native helpers till it is manifested. When these natural leaders, who manifest the spirit of true consecration, come to the front, and show a desire to devote a part or all of their time to persuading men to become christians; if they are men of good report from without, and are cordially endorsed by the native church; let the church, where they hold their membership consider and decide upon the amount of support they should receive, and raise the amount among its members. In this way there will be mutual sympathy, and the church will feel that it has a work. In process of time, if it is deemed desirable to place one of such consecrated and tried men over a small church at an out-station, if such church be unable to raise the amount required for his support, then such church might be assisted by other churches, or by the mission, till it is able to meet its own expenses. In this way we might hope to secure a native ministry on the voluntary basis, that would be an important factor in the evangelization of the Chinese. But, by relying on the long-tried method, there is no hope of attaining this result. The experiment of more than thirty years is enough to prove this to one and all. We can not raise the dead.

Literary.

"The Papal Controversy." Just from the press is the most remarkable book on Romanism in existence.

The proposition which reads, "Resolved: that the Roman Catholic church is the true church of God," was affirmed in the Church Progress for eighteen weeks, then it ignominiously retreated, though it had engaged for a six month's discussion. The Church Progress ranks among the ablest Roman Catholic papers on the Continent. Besides an able editorial staff, it has the endorsement of seven bishops and two archbishops of the Roman church. After the Church Progress retreated from the field of battle, in confusion; the American Baptist occupied the space slotted to both papers, in exposing the false claims of the Roman church, to the close of the twenty-six weeks agreed upon for the discussion. This thrilling work contains a vast number of quotations, from Roman Catholic authors showing the blasphemous claims of that Bloody Babylon. In addition to the regular discussion, the Book contains valuable Appendixes, filled with quotations from Papal Sources. Furthermore: The work contains a copious index to the arguments of both sides, as well as to the valuable quotations cited from Roman authorities. Also, it contains a Glossary, giving condensed definitions of Roman Catholic ordinances, ceremonies, holy days, priestly garments, etc. This Glossary is a very valuable addition to the book. The Papal Controversy contains 688 pages in clear type, on good paper, put up in three styles of binding. Terms—Nice English cloth, per copy, $2.50; Half American Morocco, per copy 3.00; Full American Morocco, per copy 3.50. The work is sold through canvassing agents, to whom it is sent on such liberal terms that an active agent can make excellent wages.

Outing for June is as pure and refreshing as the shades and breezes of the woods and waters it loves so well. It is pre-eminently a magazine for the home circle, and richly deserves its great success, for matured and growing minds are alike benefited by its honest teachings, which ever point the way to the safest of all earthly sanctuaries—nearest to Nature's heart. The number is superbly illustrated, the frontispiece (famous white-winged Gloriana) and many other engravings being artistic gems. The contents are as follows: "Through Muskoka Marvel-lands," by Ed. W. Sandys, illustrated; "Inter-city and International Cricket in America," by Thomas Wharton, illustrated; "Experiences in Amateur Photography;" "A. H.," by Wm. Hinckley; "Evolution of the Forty-six-footer" (concluded), by Geo. A. Stewart, illustrated; "By Wheel from Havre to Rouen" (concluded), by J. W. Fosdick, illustrated; "June Rides," by Jessie F. O'Donnell; "Harry's Career at Yale" (concluded), by John Seymour Wood, illustrated; "Sadie and Sentiment" (continued), by Wenona Gilman, illustrated; "The Maryland National Guard," by Hanson Hiss, illustrated; "From the German Ocean to the Black Sea" (continued), by Thomas Stevens, illustrated; "Nova Scotia as a Summer Resort," illustrated; "Miscellaneous Jumping," by Macolm W. Word, illustrated: and the usual editorials, poems, reports, etc.

The Fashion Journal. "La Mode de Paris" and "Album des Modes," so well-known as the publications giving the choicest fresh styles one month in advance of all other journals, appear to be growing just as fast as too popular. The demand for them is so unanimously that the publishers, A. Black & Co., 4 West 14 Street, New York, found it difficult to keep up with the increasing demand each month, and claim that the American ladies are now buying their journals to such an extent that most of the newsdealers are entirely out of them by the fifth of the month. As all of the plates are made in Paris by the best artists, the publishers claim that it requires considerable time to catch up with such an increased demand. We agree with our lady friends that these are superior fashion journals. We suggest to them to become regular subscribers, thus making sure of receiving their journal each month, and securing that valuable book, "Dressmaking Simplified," that is given as a premium to each subscriber paying $3.50 in advance for either "La Mode de Paris" or "Album des Modes" for one year. You may place the order through your news agent, or send direct to the publishers.

The Cosmopolitan for June, furnishes in variety of subject and popular treatment, an attractive standard. The magazine is leading a movement for the solution of the problem of Aerial Navigation, and Hiram S. Maxim, the inventor of the Maxim gun, one of the greatest American inventors, explains in this number how it is possible to build without further discussion a flying machine which will travel through the air at the rate of 100 miles per hour; this without the aid of any gas. Those interested in the labor problem will find in Carroll D. Wright's article some new and suggestive points.

The June California Illustrated Magazine will be exceptionally interesting. Among the articles with a summer flavor will be one on "The Region About Lake Tahoe"—beautifully illustrated; "The Excitement of Capturing the Famous Jew Fish, the Game Fish of California," by the editor of the Californian; the second on "The Glaciers of America, showing the wonders of the Malaspena Glacier. Mrs. Flesher will write on "Art in Japanese Swords" a richly illustrated paper showing some of the gems of the famous collections of the day. Other illustrated papers will be on "The Seal Fisheries," "The Pearl Fisheries of the Californian Gulf," "Thorwaldsen," etc. The Californian Illustrated Magazine Co., San Francisco, Cal.

Bro. Bailey:—Thinking you would be glad to hear from this part of the moral vineyard, I have concluded to send a note of the last meeting of the Robeson Union, which in attendance has grown to the proportions of an association.

This Union met Saturday, May 28th, with the church at Long Branch—Rev. M. A. Stevens is the pastor. Striking evidence of well directed zeal and christian activity is exhibited in the extension and improved appearance of their commodious building, and in the way they entertain a Union.

At 11 o'clock the introductory sermon was preached by Rev. Jas. A. Smith—subject, "The Holy Ghost,"—a sermon of great power, inspiring and consoling.

Recess of forty minutes to partake of the sumptuous repast spread by the members of the church. I cannot begin to enumerate, but if eating fish will make one a fisher of men, you will certainly hear from one Rev. some day "on this line," if his mouth don't get "filled with wind."

At 1 p. m. met. Rev. A. R. Pitman, moderator, Rev. W. A. Humphrey, clerk. Devotional exercises by the moderator. Next, report on ministerial education, offered and ably discussed by Rev. A. R. Pitman, followed by Rev. Jas. A. Smith, Bro. E. K. Proctor and Rev. F. H. Martin in able and eloquent addresses. This discussion certainly did good. Then the duty of church members as citizens and christians, with regard to the liquor traffic, was discussed by Rev. W. J. Fulford and brethren Proctor and Toon.

Then the needs of the State Mission Board was plainly put by Rev. F. H. Martin and a collection taken up. Result, six dollars. If Bro. Martin don't take up a collection, you may know there is no need.

Adjourned to meet at 9:30 a. m. Sunday morning in Sunday-school mass meeting. Benediction by Rev. R. A. Moore. There was great improvement in the amount of money sent up by the various churches. God is to be thanked that evidence of faithful preaching "the grace of giving" begins to bring in its rewards.

Sunday morning was cloudy and threatening, notwithstanding a large audience gathered to hear Bro. Frank Gough address the Sunday-school children and workers, which he did in an earnest and forcible manner.

Mass meeting dismissed by benediction by Rev. Mr. Hursey.

At 11 o'clock exercises opened by Rev. R. A. Moore, and missionary sermon was preached by Rev. W. J. Fulford. Those who have heard Bro. Fulford knows what we enjoyed. Collection taken for ministerial education—amount, $6.60. Singing, "Am I a Soldier of the Cross." Benediction by Bro. Martin. It was certainly a profitable season. Every one who was appointed on the program faithfully discharged his duty. Absenteeism is playing out in this Union.

It is the custom of the ministers of this Association to meet in ministers conference on Friday before the Union to discuss subjects pertaining to the good of the work, and confer with one another. This conference met Friday morning at 11 o'clock. Devotional exercises by Rev. A. R. Pitman. Reading 15th Psalm. Prayer by Rev. I. P. Hedgepeth. Minutes of previous conference read and approved.

Subjects taken up as per program.

1. The best financial system for churches. Opened by Rev. W. A. Humphrey, who gave a very instructive address on the subject, followed by Rev. F. H. Martin and Rev. R. A. Moore.

2. Perils of the church. Rev. I. P. Hedgepeth presented this subject very clearly, and laid especial stress on the influence of those in the church who were never converted.

3. The importance of the deaconship was plainly presented by Revs. A. R. Pittman, R. A. Moore and I. P. Hedgepeth.

4. The duty of ministers with reference to the popular vices of the day. Bro. F. H. Martin discussed this subject in a very interesting and profitable manner and from every standpoint. It was an impressively solemn scene when all the ministers present covenanted together to oppose more earnestly and vigorously every form of popular vice and sin. Benediction by Bro. Martin.

This meeting will long be remembered by all present. I verily believe the Holy Spirit was present in his power, and lasting good has been done.

Yours in Christ, T. F. TOON.

POKINE.

I have used the within remedy (Pokine) with great success. JAMES H. LASSITER.

I have used the Pokine Remedy (prepared by W. T. Cheatham, Jr.) in case of Sciatica with the result of positive relief in a few hours, and believe if used as directed is will effect a permanent cure. J. L. H. MISSILLIER.

MARCH 6, 1891.

For the benefit of the public, I unhesitatingly recommend Cheatham's wonderful remedy, "Pokine," to all sufferers of rheumatism. It has produced marvelous results in my case. I was a sufferer of the malady for five years, and after taking a few bottles was entirely cured.

Very respectfully, W. W. DOWTIN.

HENDERSON, N. C., March 7, '91.

MR. W. T. CHEATHAM:

Dear Sir—My wife was down in bed with rheumatism, and the Pokine I bought of you gave her relief after taking four doses. She has not been troubled since. It is the best medicine she ever took for rheumatism. Respectfully, ZACK DAVIS.

MR W. T. CHEATHAM, JR.:

Dear Sir—I have been afflicted with rheumatism time and again, for the past thirteen years. I have received more relief from Pokine than any medicine I ever took, and therefore take great pleasure in recommending it to all sufferers of rheumatism. Very respectfully, F. G. MITCHELL.

JANUARY 19, 1891.

W. T. CHEATHAM, JR.:

Dear Sir—I desire to say that in January last I was down with rheumatism; my suffering was great, and I was completely prostrated. One bottle of your Pokine completely relieved me, and I have not had any rheumatism since. My son also was relieved of rheumatism by Pokine.

Yours truly, CHARLES G. BURROUGHS.

HENDERSON, N. C., Sept. 16, '91.

MR. W. T. CHEATHAM, JR.:

Your rheumatic cure, Pokine, has completely cured me. I. M. GREEN.

MR. W. T. CHEATHAM, JR., Henderson, N. C.:

Dear Sir—Being asked my opinion of your rheumatic remedy, Pokine, will gladly state I deem it the only medicine of its kind on the market that will accomplish that which is exclusively claimed for it. Being a sufferer of rheumatism, I consequently tried many remedies, until finally relieved by Pokine. Very respectfully, J. A. KELLY.

Some Things the Bible Does Not Say.—No. 2.

There is so much that the advocates of "sprinkling for baptism" claim as Bible authority for the practice, (when there is not a shadow of it to be found in the Bible), that it is difficult to name or to refer to all the things that the blessed book does not say in regard to the subject of baptism.

This writer has never yet been able, among other absurdities claimed, to find in the statement of John's baptizing "in Enon, near to Salim," (John 3: 23) that he went there because he wanted to select a place for baptism where there was water enough "to furnish the beasts that the people rode" (!) as is vainly pretended by some. In fact, the record does not show that there were any beasts there at all; but it does say that John was "baptizing in Enon near to Salim, because there was much water there;" "many waters," (says the Rev. Ver.) and that "they," the people, "came and were"—not sprinkled—(as it is said they were by the despisers of the New Testament baptism,) but that "they came and were baptized," that is, "they came and were immersed." So say scores of Pedobaptist authors on the meaning of the word "baptize."

We have better authority, however, than these—even Paul the apostle. Hear him in Rom. 6: 4, 5, "Therefore we are buried with him by baptism," (Rev. Ver., "through baptism,") "into his death," &c. And in the next verse, "For if we have been planted together," (that is, buried,) "in the likeness of his death," (as we were when we were immersed in his name,) "we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection."

Tell me where is the likeness to a burial and a resurrection in the sprinkling of a few drops of water on the head of a baby, or on an adult, either? We may be sure that the great forerunner of Christ did nothing so foolish and absurd "at Enon near to Salim," nor at any other place in all the land of Judea where he baptized.

It is astonishing how utterly blind men can be when they are determined not to see that which would overthrow their prejudices and bigotry.

We once asked a learned Presbyterian minister, the Rev. Dr. Owen of this State, who had renounced his Pedobaptism and became a Baptist, why it was that for so many years he had failed to see the plain meaning of baptism as the Lord Jesus commanded it? Looking up from the book he held in his hand, and gazing thoughtfully into my face, with solemn voice, he replied, "The scales of prejudice were over my eyes like a veil for twenty-five years, and nothing but the grace of God, in answer to the prayers of my wife, and my own willingness at last to know the truth, removed them; and when removed, I saw—not 'men as trees walking,' but I saw that the baptism of the New Testament was one, and that the 'one baptism' was immersion, or a burial in water. Since then I preach Jesus and the resurrection as I never did before."

And so would all true preachers of Christ who are to day in the ranks of the "sprinklers" preach him if they would hear the voice of their Lord calling them and saying, (Rev. 18: 4,) "Come out of her, my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues."

Among the many other things the Bible does not say, but things that are taught by "the enemy," and the people of course deluded thereby, is this: The Bible does not say "there is one Lord, one faith," and three baptisms, nor three acts, each called baptism. Look in Eph. 4: 5, and see if it reads that way. If it reads "one baptism," how can there be three? especially when the three are all entirely distinct and different from each other? Sprinkling, pouring and immersion are certainly three acts. Can these all be the "one baptism" of the Bible? Is baptism a trinity? If it is, then why not put the trinity on the same candidate to be baptized, in order that he, she, or it, may get the una-triune baptism? If the individual is only sprinkled, then it goes without saying that he, she, or it, is only one-third baptized.

In order, however, to avoid this supreme piece of folly, the aforesaid advocates of sprinkling and wetting say another thing that the Bible does not say, namely, that sprinkling, pouring and immersion are "modes of baptism," and the right of choice is granted to the person to be baptized; but they don't say by whose authority.

Why not grant the same right to choose as to how one shall be saved, whether by faith, or by works, or by both faith and works? Why not? And why not give "the baby" the right to choose its own "mode of baptism" also? Will you people who say you believe in sprinkling for baptism say to this that the babe is not capable of exercising any choice in the matter?

Well, then, leave it at home and put it in the cradle and rock it to sleep, and wait till such time as it can choose Christ first, and then hinder it not to obey the truth in the "one baptism," as many are sinfully doing, even now, to-day, all over this land.

Again, the Bible does not say a solitary word, either "less or more," anywhere in all its chapters about "modes of baptism." There are no modes of baptism, in the sense in which that term is used. Baptism is immersion—a burying in water—one act, one thing. Can it possibly be imagined that sprinkling is a mode of immersion? Can one be immersed by sprinkling? If not, neither can one be baptized by sprinkling. Away, then, with all this froth and stuff about the "modes of baptism," so-called. Baptists know no "modes of baptism." With us, and with the Bible, baptism is one act—immersion only. The mode of that immersion is wholly unimportant—non essential. Baptists do not dispute or contend about "modes" of anything. We leave that to the advocates of the unscriptural and Popish dogma absurdly called "infant baptism."

Let the people have light; yes, let all the people have the light of God's word; and what the Bible does not say, or enjoin, or command, let no man, who would be approved of Christ in the great day, either hold or teach as an article of faith or practice. Cast it aside forever.

The people of God should be a unit—they must be. The apostolic doctrine of Eis Kurios, mia pistis, en baptisma, "one Lord, one faith, one baptism," is the grand slogan consecrated in the precious blood of saints and martyrs, unto which, as unto a holy battle-cry, "the sacramental hosts of God's elect" must rally as one man, that "the armies of the aliens may be put to flight," and Jesus, the Great Law-Giver, the Eternal King in Zion, be owned and crowned in earth and heaven "Lord of all," throughout the ages of the ages. Amen.

Interest in Bible Study.

It is a remarkable fact that what a recent writer has said should be so strictly true—namely, that the "mental energy of our day is directed mainly to the investigation of biblical questions." If the Bible had been like other books, interest in it might have been exhausted long ago. The only other instance of persistent hold upon studious inquiry which any one would just now think of comparing with the biblical books is that of the writings of Shakspeare; and in this case the parallelism fails as soon as a crtain critical and biographical interest in these writings has been named. Even this sort of interest is for the most part limited to a certain class. Upon the other hand, it may be said with truth that there is no class of intelligent people to whom questions outside of the mere commonplaces of practical life appeal at all upon what are termed "biblical questions" do not lay hold with commanding and persistent force. What we say is, indeed, most true of those who are most remarkable in point of intellectual eminence, and for whom scholarly research has most of fascination. It would be difficult to account for this solely from the strictly literary characteristics of the Bible. There is, indeed, always, and for a certain class of minds especially, something very attractive in an ancient literature, representing the thought and faith and life of peoples who have long ceased to have more than a mere name in history, whose monuments are seen in ruined cities, in buried libraries, in temples and palaces of which there remains scarcely one stone upon another. Yet interest in this kind of literature is limited to comparatively a few, while even with these the enthusiasm at first felt cools with familiarity. The Bible is in some respects such a literature. There may be passages in it which belong in date to the world before the flood. It represents conditions of human life long passed away. It tells of heroes and statesmen and poets and prophets contemporaneous with the most ancient of those with whom ordinary history deals. How men thought and felt and wrote thousands of years ago it records in a literature remarkable for its elevated tone and its perfection of form. But there are other such literatures. How comes it that the Egyptian, Assyrian, Grecian and Roman literatures fail utterly in commanding the sort of interest which even the Old Testament books excite, or in gaining, as these do, more and more of commanding eminence in the intellectual life of the world? There is no other witness for the Bible so wholly unimpeachable, so conclusive in its testimony, as the Bible itself. The voice of God in the world is known from all other voices, and men recognize it even while they refuse to confess it. "The Word of the Lord"—how much that phrase meant in the time of the old prophets; how much it means still. The thrilling echoes of it all the world's clamor fails to drown. The "still small voice" which proclaims a divine realty and presence, is heard over all the din of human life, and is for every soul of man a message or an admonition, a menace or a hope.—Chicago Standard.

Meeting in Bayboro.

We have had a good meeting in Bayboro. Rev. H. C. Moore of Morehead City did the preaching. Christians prayed earnestly and effectually. Bro. Moore preached the gospel with power. The Holy Ghost did his great and good work. Sinners believed and were saved.

I have baptized ten and think others will follow soon. God be praised for it all.

Bro. H. C. Moore is a good preacher. He is an exception for one of his age and experience. He has endeared himself very much to our people, and will be held in loving remembrance by us all.

God bless you and your paper.

Our Books Won't Last.

Experts are predicting that the books of to-day will fall to pieces before the middle of the next century. The paper in the books that have survived two or three centuries was made by hand, of honest rags, and without the use of strong chemicals, while the ink was made of nut-galls. To-day much of the paper for books is made, at least in part, of wood-pulp treated with powerful acids, while ink is a compound of various substances naturally at war with the flimsy paper upon which it is laid. The printing of two centuries ago has improved with age; that of to day, it is feared, will within fifty years have eaten its way through the pages upon which it is impressed. A heartless publisher who threw out this hint added the sardonic comment that the question was highly unimportant to the great majority of authors.—New York Sun.

A holy life rebuts scepticism.

Cheerful Christianity.

Cheerfulness becomes a christian. Gratitude for the great salvation should fill him with joy. With the assurance of Christ's great love for him and all the blessed hopes he has for this life and that which is to come, he ought to abound in joy. If there is no jubilant emotion in our souls, we need to examine ourselves. The absence of the joy of salvation comes from a lack of faith or because there is unrepented sin on the conscience.—Christian Inquirer.

Japanese Carpenters.

The Japanese carpenters do very neat work. At the Centennial Exhibition in Philadelphia, in 1875, there was a Japanese house put up by carpenters from Japan, and not a nail was used in building it. The pieces of wood were beautifully fitted together. Most of the houses in Japan are made of wood. The stone of the country is very hard. It is expensive to dress and transport it, and most of the people could not afford to have stone houses. The wooden buildings are best when an earthquake shakes things up, and earthquakes are quite common in Japan; but the wooden buildings are worst when a fire occurs. Sometimes the half of a great city in Japan has been burnt at one time. You may be sure that the carpenters have plenty to do then.

Is Japan Fickle?

"During the last thirty years no one country has been so ceaselessly under the public eye as has Japan. And yet very few people understand the Japanese. The first Mikado ascended the throne 660 years before Christ, and from that time to this there has remained an unbroken succession, though what may be called the war of the roses threatened at one time to break the direct line. Never has Japan been conquered. Never has any nation so nearly obliterated christianity within her borders as did Japan 200 years ago. Catherine de Medici, in the fearful massacre of St. Bartholomew's Eve, signally failed as compared with them.

"Quick to see the advantages that would accrue to them, they employed, in A. D. 287, Korean teachers to instruct them in Chinese literature and language, and to-day Chinese is the classical language of the people. From Korea also they learned the use of the Potter's wheel. The art of making Satsuma ware is a lost art in Korea, because when the Japanese conquered Korea they brought all who understood the art to Japan, and, planting a colony in the province of Satsuma, compelled the Koreans to make the china and to instruct the Japanese in its manufacture. Thus it is to day—electric lights and telegraph, foreign ships and war tactics, foreign postal and school systems, foreign dress and wines are readily adopted. And the world looks across the water in amazement, and exclaims, 'Behold, a miracle! A nation is changed in the twinkling of an eye from a state of semi-barbarianism to the full splendor of civilization!'

"But the nation has not changed. New clothes don't make a new man. Social life is just as impure, the marriage laws as loose, passions as unbridled, and their beautiful etiquette covers as many sins as of yore. The whitening of the outside of the sepulchre does not prove that it is not full of dead men's bones and all uncleanness."—Selected.

Japanese Fashions.

The Kimono or tea gown worn by the Japanese women is tight enough to hamper them seriously in active movements, for around it a piece of dressing material is wound several times so tightly that it is impossible for them to take any but very short and shuffling steps. This makes them almost as awkward and helpless as if they were Chinese women with crippled feet, and one can hardly wonder that, notwithstanding their natural conservatism they willingly followed the example of the Empress, when on Nov. 1, 1886, she appeared for the first time at a public entertainment in "foreign" costume. The consequences, however, were not what had been expected. It would be as easy for a leopard to change his spots as for a nation of women to suddenly discard a costume they have worn for countless generations and adopt another of an entirely different pattern, and wear it with ease and comfort; not to speak of grace. No caricature could do justice to the bad figures, the ill-fitting garments, the screeching colors, that have run riot in Japan during the last four years.—Gospel in all Lands.

Flowers in Japan.

At the approach of one of our own flowery seasons, it may be interesting to us to know something of the flora of Japan.

The Japanese roses are not to be compared with our own, but there are many flowers that are extremely beautiful. The azalea and the iris abound; the ditches along the roads are full of the white or the purple lotus; in the woods are to be found camellia trees thirty feet high and covered with flowers, white, red, pink, and variegated; one of the temples in Tokio is celebrated for its wistaria which there falls in clusters two feet or more in length; and no such chrysanthemums are to be found in the world. Of the chrysanthemum there are more than 200 varieties, and this is the flower chosen for the imperial crest. Above all other flowers, however, the Japanese admire their plum and cherry blossoms; every spring great crowds of people cross the river that flows through Tokio to visit Mukojima and walk under the over-arching branches of the cherry trees laden with lovely blossoms.—Selected.

Conference in Japan.

In the opinion of this conference, the supreme and consuming need of mission work in Japan at this very time is for more laborers to devote themselves to direct evangelization by coming into personal contact with the unevangelized masses, and through the medium of their own vernacular.

So say the Baptist missionaries in conference assembled in Japan. And ought not Southern Baptists to furnish a goodly number of these laborers? Are we to leave Brunson and McCollum there by themselves, contenting ourselves with merely having a mission in Japan? What say the young preachers who a few years ago were anxious to go? What say others? There will be men wanted during 1892 for this field. May God turn the hearts of some thitherward.—Foreign Mission Journal.

In all the Japan Protestant missions, the first of this year, there were reported 408 missionaries and 89,380 converts.

The Forward March.

Dear Recorder:—No doubt hundreds of brethren who attended our Convention at Atlanta, have returned to their homes resolved to do more for the Master in our great missionary work than ever before. After seeing and hearing our great preachers, they return with something of their zeal and inspiration, feeling indeed that, though they can never reach their sublime heights in oratory and persuasion, yet they, too, can "press forward to the mark of their high calling" in entering more earnestly into the great work of giving the gospel to all men, and letting the light shine into the darkest corners of the earth. They feel truly that "it is not a vain thing to serve the Lord," and, therefore, never more to "grow weary in well doing." They may not be able to give like the Levering brothers of Baltimore, $5,000 each for the spread of missions in this Centennial year, yet they can give willingly of their means, as they have ability, or, having but little of these, there are still ways and means, with little outlay, of accomplishing mighty things in the cause. Our loved leader, Dr. J. A. Broadus, in his great speech at the Convention, on "How best to utilize the Centennial," touches the key note in this forward march. He says: "First, special meetings, with visiting speakers. Second, circulate missionary biographies and books and periodicals. You, preacher, never make a sermon for the next twelve months, without one or more illustrations drawn from missions." Words from the great and good Dr. Broadus, who has stood in the "fore front" of the battle for so many years are worthy of all acceptation.

In this connection, a few more words in regard to the proposed second edition of the "Life of Rev. Daniel White" (the author having gathered much more concerning his great missionary work than he possessed when the book was written), enlarged and improved by sketches of the lives of his coworkers who wrought so gloriously with him for the spread of the gospel among the perishing, such as Rev. Luther Rice, Rev. R. T. Daniel, Rev. John Monroe, Rev. J. O. B. Dargan, Rev. Wm. Dossey, Hon. Alfred Dockery (who, despite the historian's unjust strictures, was a mighty man of God, great, and as good as he was great), besides others whose deeds tended to spread the light in that benighted time, with portraits when they can be had.

The proposition was to issue so soon as fifteen brethren or sisters subscribed ten dollars each, to be paid when the book was in the printer's hands. The name of each contributor with amount to appear on the frontispiece page of the book, and to reimburse them, fifty copies to be sent to each as soon as printed. Cheering words have already been received by the writer, from two of which he can not refrain from making a few extracts, more than anything else to show the "forward march" elements in the work and the good its spread among the people would do in this Centennial of Missions. Rev. Henry Sheets, among many other encouraging words, says in a letter of recent date:

"Dear Bro. McNeill: I have just read your proposition, made through the RECORDER, in reference to issuing an enlarged and otherwise improved edition of the Life of Rev. Daniel White. I do most earnestly and sincerely hope that you may get such encouragement as will give us the book. It is bound to do good. * * * I have to tell my churches about the help I derive from the work. I will be one to pay ten dollars when the work is issued, and feel like saying that I believe I can sell an additional fifty copies. I will help you all I can for the good I believe it will do."

Such expressions mollify the soul as with ointment.

Here, too, are a few extracts from a late letter from a brother I never saw, but an article from whose pen in the RECORDER I admired. The letter is dated Excelsior and signed W. S. Milliken. He says among many other good things:

"Bro. D. McNeill, Montpelier, N. C.: In the fall of 1887 I was presented with a copy of your Life of Rev. Daniel White. After these many years, I take the liberty to say to you, how much I thank God for this little book, and how I congratulate you as its author, for your faithful portrayal of the life and character of this noble, self-sacrificing pioneer Baptist, who, for the cause of the Redeemer endured persecutions and all along through life, demonstrated to the world, what might be accomplished for God by an entire consecration to his service. * * * What a blessing to christianity would a wider circulation of this little volume prove! How many who, for the lack of faith, can not put their whole trust in God, might be strengthened and built up in a more holy faith by the life of this grand old servant. I think I could sell fifty copies of your enlarged edition. God bless your efforts."

Such expressions cheer an author's heart. An enthusiastic brother says: "I feel sure our Association would gladly undertake to have the second edition issued."

Yet, while the brother and the Association would deserve commendation, it would hardly meet the end aimed at so effectually as to have it widely distributed by workers in a number of Associations, willing in the cause of missions to show their faith by their works. Still, if enough do not speedily respond to make out the amount named, then the Association's aid for the balance will be gladly accepted, for it is the author's desire to have a superb and large edition issued, costing fully that amount, and the printer to have the names of those ready to respond to his call as the work progresses. Eleven are yet needed to insure its issue. The writer would like to hear from any willing to aid, that he may decide whether another edition shall issue or not, and how much more additional to what is written and what has been gathered and is collecting concerning the other workers named above, he may inform.

Talks About Land.—No. 2.

BY JUDGE R. W. WINSTON.

THE LAND OF THE FARM.

Often, at the end of a bad crop year, the landlord, for compassion's sake or out of prudential considerations, will not collect all his rents and advances. To do so, would leave nothing for the tenant's family to "go on" during the next year. So a bargain is struck that the tenant may keep his corn and wheat and use the same to assist in making another crop.

Can the landlord hold this year's crop to pay last year's rent?

This is a question often arising and not settled until the year 1890. At that time a case arose from Edgecombe county involving this question, and our Court held that the landlord could hold this year's crop with which to pay last year's rent, if it was a part of the contract of renting for the new year.

Just at this time of the year farmers are likely to have much trouble with their "hands." The crop season is now well advanced. Wages are higher in May and June than they were in February and March. The "hand" who made a bargain to work all the year 1892 at nine dollars a month is dissatisfied now because day labor is in demand at fifty cents a day. Doubtless he forgets the cold weather, when he was warmed and housed and fed and paid, for doing little or nothing.

So the all-important agricultural question arises, "If the hand hires for the year at so much a month and leaves, without excuse, before the end of the year, can he recover for the work actually done"? Not to obscure the point, we will first answer the question, "Yes."

And now we proceed to trace the development of the legal principle out of which has grown the doctrine laid down above. By the old law, if a person, of his own volition, failed to complete a special contract, he could not recover for the part actually performed. Let us illustrate by an old and very familiar case.

On July 31st, 1793, a sailor named Cutter went on board a ship at Kingston bound for Liverpool. Powell, the captain, gave him a note for his services which read as follows: "Ten days after the ship, Gov. Parry, myself mate, arrives at Liverpool, I promise to pay to Mr. T. Cutter the sum of thirty guineas, provided he proceeds, continues and does his duty as second mate in the ship from hence to the port of Liverpool." Cutter performed his duty until the 20th of September, about one week before the ship arrived at Liverpool, when he died. The ship refused to pay his personal representative anything. Suit was brought. The Court held that the defendant was not liable, not even for the work done. Now this was a "hard case," but it did not prove a "quicksand."

About twenty years ago a case arose in Wilmington in which our Court said that the rigid rule of law expounded in Cutter against Powell ought to be relaxed, and that the party ought to pay such remuneration as the benefit conferred is really worth.

This idea having gained lodgment in the minds of our Court, has been often recognized since. Doubtless, a recollection that "rigorous law is often rigorous injusice" induced the departure.

Finally in 1886, this case came up from Hertford county. Mr. Baker employed Webster Chamblee, for the year 1885, at ten dollars a month. Webster left in September, 1885, without excuse. At that time he had been paid twenty dollars, and if he was entitled to recover at all, seventy dollars was the amount due him. Baker suffered no damage because Webster left. Our Court held that Webster was entitled to seventy dollars. "If," say the Court, "by the terms of the contract, certain sums are due on the performance of certain parts of the work, separate actions are maintainable for each. And though the contract and consideration be entire by the apparent terms of the agreement, yet such may be the circumstances as to entitle the plaintiff to a ratable compensation for part performance.

So the inference is that compensation is payable weekly or monthly, unless there is a clear and distinct understanding that compensation as a unity is demandable only at the expiration of the full period of service."

This principle is approved by the Court in another case of very recent date from Vance county.

So that the farmer can only protect himself against these hands who would leave him in the grass, by making a contract for the year and stipulate that "the wages are due and payable at the end of the year as a unity and not otherwise." And when he pays the hand anything during the year, he must take a written receipt "that the payment is not intended to change the terms of the bargain or to recognise the divisibility of the contract."

Much has been said about making it a misdemeanor for a hand, wilfully, unlawfully and without excuse, to leave his employer. Indeed, it was thought that Sec. 3119 of the Code did in effect so provide. But it plainly does not, as was held in State vs. Daniel in the year 1885. As to whether such an act, if passed, would be constitutional or even expedient, is a question for the Legislature.

MT. AIRY
White Sulphur Spring.

This celebrated summer resort will open June 15th. The hotel has been thoroughly renovated, new furniture placed in every room in the building. The Spring is at the foot of the Blue Ridge Mountains. In front is a beautiful park of meadow land covered with grass and flowers, and through this beautifully valley flows the Ararat River. Up this lovely valley blows from the mountain tops a grateful breeze, which makes cover on the beds necessary during the warmest summer nights.

The property has recently been purchased by a stock company with an abundance of capital. No pains or expense will be spared which can add to the comfort and pleasure of those who come to spend the summer in the most beautiful mountain region to be found in the world.

Guests will be met at Mt. Airy, the terminus of the C. F. & Y. V. R. R., and conveyed to the Spring without any stop-over at the hotel.

Special rates furnished by all railroads to persons coming to the Spring. Board, $30.00 per month. Children under 12 years, and servants, at half rates. Address

JORDAN & BROWN, Props.

In a private letter from Dr. L. G. Broughton appears the following: "After spending three weeks at the Mt. Airy White Sulphur Spring I was convinced of the untold value of the water, especially in the treatment of dyspeptic conditions of the lower bowels and in cronic liver and kidney troubles."

Teacher and Quarterly.

Prof. H. H. Harris, LL. D., of Richmond College, president of the Foreign Mission Board of the Southern Baptist Convention, will furnish for the last half of 1892 the Expository Notes and Hints to teachers in The Baptist Teacher, and will also prepare The Advanced Quarterly for the same period. The able, scholarly, and practical work of Prof. Harris in this line during several years past, is worthy of great praise, and has won for his many friends and earnest commendations from all parts of our country. His studies, travels in Palestine, and experience as a teacher serve to qualify him in an eminent degree to give acceptable treatment to the lessons in the Acts and the Epistles, which forms the course. The American Baptist Publication Society, Philadelphia, has done well to retain him in its editorial corps.

The Atlantic Union.

This Union met at Smyrna, Carteret co., May 27th. A fair delegation was present, who was greeted by good and at times overflowing audiences. The work reported was for the most part encouraging. Bro. Ford's discourse Friday night was good.

The meeting considered and emphasized the need of spirituality, colportage, religious newspapers, our Orphanage, Sunday-schools and State Missions. The addresses were short and to the point.

We made trial of the question box feature, which proved to be both interesting and instructive, not without a little amusement, however, as it was decided again who Melchisedec was not.

Bro. Whitty raised about twenty dollars for the orphans and Associational Missions.

The Smyrna people dispensed a generous and bountiful hospitality. Thanks to the A. R. R. Co. for rates, the Morehead City saints for two nights' entertainment in their christian homes, and free transportation going and returning on the Sharpie. Brethren Edwards, Stough and McLeod had sickness in their families. Bro. Leary was too feeble to go. The Lord's blessing upon them all.

Next session goes to Trenton.

A Travelling Man's Experience.

ATHENS ALA., April 4th, 1892.

Gentlemen:—After having chronic diarrœa for three years, terminating in ulceration of the bowels and abcess on my liver, and finally consumption of the bowels prostrating me, and causing me to be confined to my room or bed for three to four months at a time, and in addition to three troubles I had hemorrage, bleeding from a teaspoonful to a teacupful. All this time I had the best medical advice and attention. However, I continued loosing flesh and strength, getting down from 210 pounds to a mere skeleton of myself. On June 6th, 1890 I received a pocket Electropoise, discarded the use of all medicines and stimulants. Since that time I have used nothing else, eating anything I want and as much as I please. On September 15th last, I commenced following my regular vocation, i. e., that of a drummer. I have travelled every day when it was necessary losing no time from my business. I am now weighing 187 pounds and still improving, and by continuing the use, of the Electropoise I hope to fully regain my former health. I have also used the Electropoise in my family with great satisfaction and this is the first winter I have ever gone without a cold, all of which I attribute to the Electropoise.

Yours truely,
JOHN E. LOGWOOD.

For all information regarding the Electropoise, write to the Atlantic Electropoise Co., Washington, D. C.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Raleigh Affairs.

There are now forty veterans in the Soldiers Home.

At a meeting of the city Board of Aldermen last Friday night, a committee was raised to prepare plans for a new and suitable station house, an important sanitary measure relating to sewerage was adopted, and the name of Martin street was changed to Park Avenue. A resolution was also adopted and a committee appointed to arrange for a fourth of July celebration.

The Raleigh Male Academy closed its sixteenth year last Friday. There were 130 pupils enrolled and an average attendance of 111 during the session. A large number attended the closing exercises. Dr. G. W. Sanderlin, the orator of the day, delivered a fine address greatly pleasing the audience. Messrs Hugh A. Morson and C. B. Denson are the principals of this excellent school.

Mr. E. G. Clifton, son of our townsman, Mr. W. V. Clifton, has received the high honor of winning the position of House Surgeon to the New York Cancer Hospital. There were only two positions, and a large number of competitors, and the examination was quite rigid, several graduates from Harvard, Yale and Princeton competing. The hospital is one of the finest in New York City, and requires a very high degree of skill.

State News.

A Mrs. Ophelia Ridenhour, living about nine miles from Salisbury, killed herself recently by jumping into a well.

Mrs. Troy Phillips, living near Lumberton, while at a well last Thursday, was struck and instantly killed by lightning.

A correspondent of the Wilmington Star says that the report that Alex. Gilmore, colored, was killed by Miss Brunt is false.

A drunken negro man, after making a small negro boy drunk, attempted to drown him in a creek near Charlotte. He was arrested and tailed.

The flouring mill of B. T. Caplan, at Salisbury, was totally destroyed by fire Monday night of last week. Loss $8,000 to $10,000; insurance $2,700.

A severe wind storm did considerable damage at Yadkin College, and vicinity recently. The roofs of tobacco barns and other buildings were blown away and in some cases the buildings were almost entirely demolished. Much valuable timber was blown down.

Col. L. L. Polk, president of the National Farmers Alliance, and editor of the Progressive Farmer, has written a letter to Hon. S. B. Alexander, president of the executive board of North Carolina State Alliance; tendering the resignation of the Progressive Farmer as the official organ of the State Alliance of North Carolina. The cause of the resignation is that the executive board of the State Alliance at its recent session at Raleigh expressed its dissatisfaction at the attitude of the Progressive Farmer towards the Third Party. Col. Polk states that the paper in severing its official connection with the State Alliance in no measure abates its allegiance to the principles held by the Alliance order.

The commencement exercises at the State University last week were pleasant and successful. On Monday, the baccalaureate sermon was preached by Rev. Dr. J. W. Carter of Raleigh. On Tuesday Prof. Chas. D. McIver delivered the address to the alumni association. The principle event of that day was an eloquent and able address delivered by Hon. A. M. Waddell, of Wilmington, on the life and character of Hon. William L. Saunders. The address to the graduating class was delivered on Wednesday by Hon. Harris Taylor, of Mobile, Ala., Senator Carlisle being unable to attend. Mr. F. C. Mebane, of Madison, was the valedictorian of the class but delivered an oration instead of a valedictory address.

DIED.

HOGGARD—Departed this life April 27th, 1892, Mrs. H. E. Hoggard, aged sixty-five years and ten months. She was the daughter of Rev. Thomas Hoggard. She professed faith in Christ at the age of sixteen years, and connected herself with the Bethlehem Baptist church, Hertford county, N. C. She lived the life of an exemplary christian and she died triumphantly. She was a loving, devoted wife and mother, an exemplary, kind and devoted neighbor. She left eight children and several grandchildren to mourn her loss. May an Allwise Providence uphold, comfort and support the bereaved husband and children.

She is now reaping her reward for a well-spent life here. May this dispensatian of God redound the honor and glory of God and the salvation of souls. She cannot come to you, children, but you can go to her. Prepare to meet her in the land of the blest. May her life and character stimulate not only her family, but her friends and neighbors, to renewed efforts in advancing the cause of that Saviour whom she loved so dearly and served so faithfully. R. T. STEPHENSON.

DEVANE—Dr. J. Stewart Devane, who died at his home in Bladen county January 26th, was one of the best friends I had in this world, and I mourn his loss with a sorrow deep and tender. He was born in Sampson county April 28th, 1830; was baptized at Bear Marsh church, Duplin county, August, 1855; married a daughter of Dr. James Dickson in 1856, and graduated at the Charleston Medical College in 1857. My intimacy began with him at Wake Forest in 1853, where he was distinguished for his excellent literary taste and fine social qualities. He was assistant surgeon in the Confederate army during the late war, serving faithfully in that responsible position till he was honorably discharged on account of failing health. He was a man of wide reading on general subjects; an experienced and learned and very skilful physician, and a useful member of society. It was as a christian, however, that he was most distinguished, and so earnest and faithful was he as a church member that he was licensed to preach, and he often spoke, and with power, too, of the claims of the gospel upon his fellow men. As I dismounted from the train to attend his funeral, one of his neighbors said to me, "Well, doctor, we have lost our best man." And an intelligent colored man also said to me that he was the best friend his race had in all that section, and he believed he had gone to heaven. We laid him in a grave hard by the noble Cape Fear, the river he loved so much; and his loving pastor, the Rev. E. W. Wooten, and many faithful friends aided in this last act of affection to the memory of an excellent man.

T. H. PRITCHARD.

GUTHRIE—Departed this life in Germanton, N. C., Saturday morning, April 16, 1892, Sister Mary Guthrie, the beloved wife of Bro. J. Guthrie. Sister Guthrie died in her seventy-ninth year. She had been a member of the Baptist church for fifty years. Sister Guthrie had been in feeble health for over a year. During her entire sickness she submitted so cheerfully to the will of God that she was never heard to complain, and she gave her friends and loved ones as little trouble as possible in ministering to her wants. She passed away calmly, and lovingly trusting in her much-beloved and tender Saviour. The path by which our sister made the journey of life leaves no sad memorials that she has passed along it, and could we but penetrate the veil that conceals the abode of the blessed dead and catch a glimpse of that life beyond the grave, we would recognize Sister Guthrie among the ransomed spirits, who realized that to be absent from the body is to be present in the Lord. Sister Guthrie was an affectionate mother, a devoted wife, kind neighbor, a true christian, and trusting friend. She was devoted to her church, and the pleasure and great joy of her life was to have preachers visit her home. It was a home indeed, and many of the brethren who may read this will remember the home and her kindness to them. It was a sad day when we laid her in the tomb at Red Bank church, her spiritual home while living. In a sense she was the mother of this church, and it seemed that all the members realized that their mother in the Lord had been taken from their midst. The large concourse of people which followed her remains to their last resting place and the manifestation of universal sorrow at her funeral, is a higher tribute to her worth than any memorial from the pen. Her death was the peaceful sleep of God's beloved, and she has only gone home—sweet home—where she will greet us again by-and-by. May God in his mercy and tender compassion sustain the bereaved husband and loving children, and prepare them for a happy meeting beyond the grave. C. C. H.

The Leaksville Woolen Mills, Leaksville, N. C., need no introduction to the public in North Carolina and adjoining States. This is simply to remind you that they are still "in touch" with the people, working up their wool into various forms of finished product at satisfactory prices. A handsome catalogue containing samples of their new and attractive styles of Fancy Cassimeres and All-Wool Flannels, together with all other goods made by them, is sent to any address on application. Besides an interesting article on "Wool on How to Handle It," the catalogue contains full particulars in regard to shipping wool. If these details are carefully followed, we guarantee prompt return of goods.

Write to Hiram Foard, Sec'y, Leaksville, N. C., for catalogue, before disposing of your wool.

I Wonder Why.

I wonder why
The white clouds stay up in the sky.
The birds light low that fly so fast,
The downy thistle falls at last,
But the clouds are always high.
I wonder why.

I wonder how
The little bird clings to the bough!
Sometime at night when I awake
And hear the tree-tops moan and shake,
I think, "How sleep the birdies now?"
I wonder how.

I wonder why
We leave the fair earth for the sky!
I wish that we might always stay;
That the dear Lord might come some day,
And make it heaven! Yet we must die.
I wonder why.

Beautiful old Age.

We rarely hear old age referred to as beautiful. We speak of childhood as beautiful. A grace still more attractive is associated in our minds with youth. Even ripened manhood and womanhood have superior charms; but we gloomily anticipate age as the period of mental degeneracy and physical decay. The freshness of life is wasted; the bloom gone from the cheek, the light from the eye, the vigor from the step. Patient, quenchless love may retain its respect, and still perform the offices of kindness; it may even discern a spiritual beauty back of furrowed cheek and lusterless eye; yet, in the common estimation, old people are a burden to themselves, and, however much the faithful heart may revolt at confessing it, a burden to their friends. But is this estimate correct? On the contrary, we are convinced it is very far from true. Undoubtedly there are instances where old age is not only uninteresting, but positively repulsive. There is neither outward comeliness nor inward grace.

The unhappy subjects have lost all relish for life. Existence has grown to be a burden moodily borne, and yet is often convulsively clung to from spectral fears of the dying hour. Such an old age—impatient, exacting, unloving and unlovely—exhales no fragrance and exhibits no bloom. It is a sapless trunk, which spreads no grateful foliage and bears no luscious fruit. But such is by no means the universal experience.

Innumerable are the instances where the evening of life exhibits a richer radience than even its purpling morn—its declining sun suffusing the western sky with an almost supernal glow. Recurring to such instances, it is no extravagance to speak of old age as beautiful. It may be so richly adorned with rarest virtues as to prove surpassingly attractive. We know how the picture of home life is heightened in interest by the variety and even contrast of elements which it presents. We should certainly miss from it the face of blithesome childhood, but with no less regret the snowy locks of benignant age. Many a household is blessed with the lingering presence of an aged inmate who proves its very center of attraction and happy influence—and when that revered form is missed, at length, from the familiar place, and the arm-chair is vacant, there is an uprising of a sorrow as profound and real as sore bereavement can ever bring. But a beautiful old age is not adventitious. It is the outshining of a beautiful character. It springs from the harmonious assemblage of lovely traits—traits which are due to the patient, wholesome discipline of a life-time. Those who are younger cannot give too careful consideration to this fact. We shall reach old age sometime if God spares us. The frost of its stern winter will invest us sooner or later. But they need not quench the genial warmth within. Nor need they rob the outward life of its bloom and sweetness. A pure youth and a manly manhood will conduce to a refulgent old age.—Bishop W. X. Ninde.

Regularity of Habit.

One of the most difficult of all minor habits to acquire, says an able writer, is that of regularity. It ranks with that of order. The natural inclination of most persons is to defer until the last possible moment, or put it off to another time, where this can possibly be done. Yet habits of regularity contribute largely to the ease and comfort of life. A person can multiply his efficiency by it.

We know persons who have a multitude of duties, and who perform a vast deal of work daily, who set apart certain hours for given duties and are there at the moment and attend rightly to what is in hand. This done and other engagements are met, each in order, and a vast deal accomplished, not by strained exertion, but by regularity.

The mind can be so trained to this that at certain hours of the day it will turn to a particular line of duty, and at other hours to other and different labors. The very diversity is restful when attended to in regular order. But let these run together, and the duties mixed, and what before was easy is now annoying and oppressive, and the exact difference between many is at this point. There are those who confuse and rush, and attempt to do several things at once, and accomplish little, while another will quietly proceed from one duty to another, and easily accomplish a vast amount of work. The difference is not in the capacity of the two, but in the regular methods of the one as compared with the irregular and confused habits of the other.—Scientific American.

The Diamond Duke.

The squire was reading the newspaper in the chimney corner. In it was a paragraph stating that a nobleman had just died in Paris, who was spoken of as the "Diamond Duke." This eccentric nobleman had converted most of his wealth into diamonds and other equally useless property, and for years devoted most of his care and thought to guarding them.

He constructed a house like a fortress The most of his stones were kept in small iron chests in fireproof vaults in its cellars. The most valuable of the diamonds were placed in a small casket, in the wall at the head of his bed, and when he touched a button, descended into a well a hundred feet deep.

When he was younger it was said that the duke frequently appeared at the opera wearing his rarest diamonds, and guarded by a policeman. But in his later years he seldom took them from their hiding-places, and feared to trust even the police.

"He was mad!" said the squire, laying down his paper. "To invest all his money in shining stones that bring in no interest! And to spend his life in worrying lest they should be stolen! Now he's dead, and what good do his shiny stones do him, eh?"

The squire presently laid down his paper and left the room. His old neighbor, who had listened to his emphatic condemnation of the duke, shook his head as he looked after him.

"I don't see that the duke was madder than the squire. He has been saving and scrimping for years to buy land, hoping it will rise in value. He doesn't till it. It's of no use to anybody, and he spends his time watching the papers in hopes of a boom. He has neither chick nor child to leave it to, and some day he'll die, and it will go to some relation he never saw!"

Susy Hobbs, a bright eyed school girl, listened to her uncle but said nothing. If the squire was mad, what was her uncle? He had had for years a frantic ambition to hold office in the small city in which he lived. He wanted to be mayor, and he incessantly worked and schemed and neglected his business to gain that empty honor.

"And suppose he should die like the diamond duke?" thought Susy. "What would the office be worth to him then? How men do waste their money and strength!"

Meanwhile Susy, who had no money, but whose capital was healthy youth and time, spent all her mornings in making tidies and embroidery which nobody cared to keep and the rest of the day in reading vapid novels, or in sleep.

The madness of the diamond duke is not a rare ailment, nor confined to any country or class. It has its counterparts varied in degree and character, in almost every human life.—Youth's Companion.

Inappropriate Words.

Inappropriate words may convey the meaning unmistakably, but are not in accordance with the English idiom.

A Frenchman, while looking at a number of vessels, exclaimed, "See what a flock of ships!" He was told that a flock of ships was called a fleet, but that a fleet of sheep was called a flock. To assist him in mastering the intricacies of the English language, he was told that a flock of girls was called a bevy, that a bevy of wolves is called a pack, a pack of thieves is called a gang, and a gang of angels is called a host, while a host of porpoises is termed a shoal. He was told that a host of oxen is termed a herd, and a herd of children is called a troop, and a troop of partridges is termed a covey, and a covey of beauty is called a galaxy, and a galaxy of ruffians is called a horde, and a horde of rubbish is called a heap, and a heap of bullocks is called a drove, and a drove of blackguards is called a mob, and a mob of whales is called a school, and a school of worshipers is called a congregation, and a congregation of engineers is called a corps, and a corps of robbers is called a band, and a band of locusts is called a crowd, and a crowd of gentlefolks is called the elite. The last word being French, the scholar understood it and asked no more.—Ex.

Confess What you do not Know.

The late E. A. Freeman, England's masterly historian, said, with characteristic force:

"I never could understand why any man should be ashamed to confess his knowledge of what he does know or his ignorance of what he does not know."

And he never pretend to that besetting sin of some literary men, to seem to know something on every imaginable subject suggested in conversation.

What a sound maxim! For the man who never confesses ignorance cuts himself off from many opportunities of acquiring information; and he who pretends to know what he is really ignorant of, excites and deserves contempt. Prompt acknowledgment of a blunder, is the simplest way to avoid its consequences.

"However did a person of your intelligence come to make such a mistake?" asked a listener to one of our foremost speakers.

"Blank ignorance, sir," was his very sensible reply.—N. Y. Ledger.

Mrs. Harriet A. Marble, of Poughkeepsie, N. Y., was for years a martyr to headache, and never found anything to give her more than temporary relief until she began to take Ayer's Pills, since which she has been in the enjoyment of perfect health.

Elder, care for the flock; younger, be subject to the elder; and let all live humbly and watchfully.

Let not sin reign in your mortal bodies. It only ruins where it reigns. Do not allow yourself to be brought under its despotism.

Kissing Mother.

A father, talking to his careless daughter, said:

I want to speak to you of your mother. It may be that you have noticed a careworn look upon her face lately. Of course it has not been brought there by any act of yours, still it is your duty to chase it away. I want you to get up to-morrow morning and get breakfast; and when your mother comes and begins to express her surprise, go right up to her and kiss her on the mouth. You can't imagine how it will brighten her dear face.

Besides you owe her a kiss or two. Away back, when you were a little girl, she kissed you when no one else was tempted by your fever-tainted breath and swollen face. You were not as attractive then as you are now. And through those years of childish sunshine and shadows, she was always ready to cure, by the magic of a mother's kiss, the little, dirty, chubby hands whenever they were injured in those first skirmishes with the rough old world.

And then the midnight kisses with which she routed so many bad dreams as she leaned above your pillow, have all been on interest these long, long years.

Of course she is not so pretty and kissable as you are; but if you had done your share of work during the past ten years, the contrast would not be so marked.

Her face has more wrinkles than yours, and yet, if you were sick, that face would appear far more beautiful than an angel's as it hovered over you watching every opportunity to minister to your comfort, and every one of those wrinkles would seem to be bright wavelets of sunshine chasing each other over the dear old face.

She will leave you one of these days. These burdens, if not lifted from her shoulders, will break her down. Those rough, hard hands, that have done so many necessary things for you, will be crossed upon her lifeless breast.

Those neglected lips that gave you your first baby kiss will be forever closed, and those sad, tired eyes will have opened in eternity, and then you will appreciate your mother; but it will be too late!—Exchange.

Rothschild's Maxims.

The elder Baron Rothschild had the walls of his bank placarded with the following maxims:

Shun liquors.
Dare to go forward.
Never be discouraged.
Never tell business lies.
Be polite to everybody.
Employ your time well.
Be prompt in everything.
Pay your debts promptly.
Bear all troubles patiently.
Do not reckon upon chance.
Make no useless acquaintances.
Be brave in the struggle of life.
Maintain your integrity as a sacred thing.
Never appear something more than you are.
Take time to consider and then decide positively.
Carefully examine into every detail of your business.
Then work hard and you will be certain to succeed in life.—Exchange.

Duty of Deacons.

The official duties of deacons are not specified in the New Testament. In the sixth chapter of Acts a general law of service is given with a special application to the Grecian widows who "were neglected in the daily ministrations." Deacons are to prevent or remove all hindrances to the full and faithful preaching of the word of God by their pastor. It was important that these widows should not go hungry, but infinitely more important that the multitude should have the Bread of Life. For the apostles personally to have supplied the needs of the former, would have been to neglect the greater needs of the latter.

Good and eminent brethren have attempted to limit the service of deacons to three tables: the table of the Lord, of the pastor, and of the poor; and the only semblance of Scripture basis for it is the word "tables." There is no more authority in Scripture for the deacon's serving specifically any one of these tables than there is for any other member of the church.

A certain eminent minister of my knowing, feeling himself unsuited for pastoral visiting, and believing it should be done, has found comfort in deciding that it is "the business of the deacons." It is equally true that there is no Scripture authority for this as the special duty of deacons. What, then, you ask, are their special duties? This question the deacons are to decide, and if they be the wise and good men they should be, they will not tarry in doing so. Their duties are as varied and numerous as are those secular claims of their church, which must be met, but which if met by their pastor would take him from his sacred work of "preaching the word of God."

If the spiritual-eyed deacons watching with keen and loving interest the face of their pastor, finds there a shadow of care, let them delicately enquire the cause. If it is found to be a salary too meager for his support, then let them meet and promptly see that it be removed, lest he preach less powerfully "the word of God."

Few things are more calculated to render less joyous and forceful a refined pastors preaching than the consciousness of indebtedness he is unable to pay. The more consecrated a pastor is to his great work, the more sensitive he is to every secular influences which would bring him down. Let the deacons see to it that their pastors mind and heart are kept sweet, tender, and strong from the secular burdens of the church. The deacon's primary relation is to his pastor, and if he magnifies this relation, his relation to his church becomes all the more tender and efficient.

The offices of pastor and deacon are closely linked. In the same chapter Timothy writes what God wants both to be in character. As the deacon reads—as he should read—what God wishes his pastor to be, he will strive all the more earnestly to be what God would have him to be.

The office of deacon involves that nature of service which relieves the pastor of secular anxiety. He is to watch and see when a specific application of the general law laid down in Acts is to be made. We are now more able to apprehend and appreciate those weighty words in the sixth chapter of Acts: "Men full of wisdom and of the Holy Ghost."

Why such great enduement if their mission was simply that of serving "tables?" No; a higher and broader service is theirs, less in dignity only to that of the pastor. What an inestimable blessing to pastor and church are a body of truly wise, alert, thoughtful and godly deacons. They deserve everybody's help and love. The usual service done by a deacon I would not belittle. It may be well, by virtue of his prominence, for him to serve at the Lord's table, take the collections, &c., but his fullness of wisdom and of the Holy Ghost call for larger and more intricate service. It may become his duty to aid his pastor in the work of visitation, provided such work becomes overtaxing to the pastor's strength. Whatever may weaken or strengthen his pastor's influence and power as a preacher of the word should receive his first and loving care.

C. N. DONALDSON.

Norfolk, Va.

Begin the Day with God.

One hour of the morning is commonly worth two hours of the evening.

A man of average duration of life sees about ten thousand mornings in the course of his existence. He begins ten thousand days; and as the after conduct of the day depends so much upon a right start, it is vitally important to begin each day with God. Morning piety has much to do with the whole current of one's every-day religion.

The eyes which open after a night's slumber should turn heavenward. "In the morning will I direct my prayer unto thee, and will look up," exclaimed the devout Psalmist. He begins the day unwisely who leaves his chamber without a secret conference with Christ, upon whom he is to depend for strength. The true christian goes into his closet for his armor; he knows not what sudden assaults of temptation may be before him, so he puts on his panoply. He needs his spiritual "rations" also for the day's march. As the oriental traveler sets out for his sultry journey over the sands by loading up his camel with food under the palm tree, and by filling his water jars from the cool fountain at its roots, so doth the christian wayfarer draw his early supplies from the unexhausted spring.

Morning is the golden hour for devotion. The mind is fresh. The mercies of the night provoke to gratitude. A buoyant heart which is love with God makes its earliest flight, like the lark, toward the gates of heaven. Thankfulness, dependence, faith and humility all prompt to early and tender interviews with him who waits on his throne for our morning orisons. We all recall Bunyan's beautiful description of his pilgrim who "awoke and sang" in that "chamber of peace" which looked toward the sun-rising. If the Egyptian Memnon made music when the first rays of light kindled on his flinty brow, a living christian heart should not be mute when God causes the outgoings of his mornings to rejoice.

No pressure of household duties or of business should crowd out prayer. An eminent christian told me that it was his rule to get a good, quiet half hour in his chamber on his knees and over his Bible before he met his family, and then he went into his business, as Moses came down from the mount, with his face shining. Doctor Arnold of Rugby had a favorite morning hymn which opens with these stirring lines:

> "Come, my soul, thou must be waking;
> Now is breaking
> O'er the earth another day
> Come to him who made this splendor;
> See thou render
> All thy feeble powers can pay."

Closet devotions are the fit precursor to family worship. Family religion underlies both the church and the common wealth. No christian government, no healthy public conscience, no Bible philanthropies, no godly church life, can exist without God in the household. Let me be assured that a family altar stands in every home, and I care little what political party bears rule at the seat of government. The picture which Robert Burns drew of household worship tells us the secret of old Scotland's "grandeur that makes her loved at home and revered abroad." No prelude to the day is so powerful in its sacred influence as the union of loving hearts around the throne of grace. Family worship is a strong seam well stitched on the border of the day to keep it from raveling out into contention, confusion and ungodliness. Wise is that christian parent who hems every morning with the word of God and fervent prayer. When the inroads of wealth and fashion crowd out family devotions in the morning and the weekly prayer-meeting in the evening, there is but small hope of rearing such households in the nurture of the Lord. The "church in the house" is the best feeder of the church in the sanctuary; home religion is the sheet anchor of our nation's well-being.

When the early devotions of the morning have equipped us for the day's work, let us shoulder up the day's duties cheerfully. God will both direct the path and lighten the loads, if we trust him. The happiness of each day depends very much on a cheerful start. The man who leaves his home with a scowl on his brow, a tart word at his wife and a snap at his children, is not likely to be pleasant company for anybody during the day, and is apt to return at night with the acid flavor of a vinegar cruet. More than cheerfulness is required for many a day behind whose veil are concealed sudden shocks or powerful temptations. Unexpected trials may break on us ere the sun goes down. Little do we know what the day may have in store for us. Let us, then, make ready every morning by putting ourselves under the wing of that loving Lord and Saviour who promises, "Lo, I am with you alway." We can not tell when we shall see the last sunrise, nor how soon we may hear from our loved ones the last "Good morning." Begin every day as if it were end in eternity.—Dr. T. L. Cuyler.

It is our past which has made us what we are. We are the children of our own deeds. Conduct has created character; acts have grown into habits; each year has pressed us into a deeper moral print; the lives we have led have left us such as we are to-day.—Dr. Dykes.

Day-time religion is more abundant than night-time religion. The sick often needs help at night; do you give it?

Falling Away.

Assuming as correct the view held by some interpreters as to the originating motive of the epistle to the Hebrews, a clue is there found to some difficult passages in the epistle itself. This view is that the epistle was written not simply as a discussion in general of the relations of christianity with Judaism, but with especial and direct reference to a recognized disposition on the part of Jewish christians in certain quarters to look backward upon what they had left, instead of forward upon that for which they had a right to hope;—even, perhaps, to the extent of actual falling back into the old Judaic legalism. With what intensity the Jews clung to the old religion, and no less during the centuries since that time, is well known. It is easy to see what danger must have existed, in the case particularly of those yet immature in christian experience, and in view of the many powerful influences soliciting them to this kind of falling away, that the church should be forsaken for the synagogue.

In two ways the author of the epistle appears to meet this tendency with a view to some effectual check upon it. One of these is to show that Judaism and christianity, Moses and Christ, are not antagonisms, but that the true meaning of the one is found in the other. The better a christian the better a Jew. For a christian Jew to turn back was to go from the new dawn into the old twilight; to move, not toward the glad, bright future, but backward into the dim, groping past. What was more, it was to forsake that in which was the whole hope of salvation. The "sacrifice for sins" was not in the time-worn Judaic ritual, but in that act of redemption by the suffering Christ, which it was the one purpose of that ritual to shadow forth.

But another momentous truth in this connection is urged—the necessary effect of apostasy. Here the writer brings to view the operation of a principle in man's nature, and a danger of which human life is full of warning. "If they fall away it is impossible to renew them again unto repentance"—unto that "change of mind," all whose convictions and motives, and profoundest spiritual forces they have "trodden under foot." There may have been many instances of this quite within the power of the writer to name by way of example. In what he says, he intimates in language very striking what a terrible thing apostasy must be. And thousands and thousands of instances since his day confirm the truth of his words. It is not safe for men to trifle even with ordinary conviction; how much less with the results of that "enlightening" of the Spirit of God, which, even when it stops short of actual regeneration, nevertheless places the subject of it in a position from which to go back is to plunge into a darkness of soul and a hardness of heart, far more terrible than even that out of which there had been this seeming recovery.

The familiar passages in the epistle to which we here refer, are perhaps too often studied as mere proof-texts bearing upon doctrinal disputes. It may be doubted if the writer of the epistle had any such in view at all; if in the words used there is any designed anticipation of questions in theology to arise in later ages. He writes with reference to a condition of things under his own eyes, and in warnings which bore upon dangers then patent to the christian teacher. All the same, apostasy is always apostasy, and the same word of warning is good for every age, and for the tempted soul under all those conditions which so often involve issues of eternal destiny.—Standard.

He Stood the Test.

In a suburb of Boston there lives a certain German laborer. He has a wife and six children. They live in a little rented house, for he has never been able to save enough to purchase a home of his own. He leaves very early in the morning for his daily task in a large factory and returns to his home late each night. It is a home and not merely a stopping place, for our friend is an earnest christian, and with his wife, who thoroughly sympathizes with him in his religious life, brings into it all that he can of comfort and cheer. His children are a bright, contented little flock, thoroughly enjoying the humble comforts they have, and knowing little of those that wealth may bestow or rob them of.

Our friend has just passed through a trial and test of character which proves him honest and sterling. His employer at the factory came to him one day recently, and the following conversation ensued:

The manufacturer said: "It is your turn to work next Sunday, and I shall expect you to be here."

Our friend replied: "I cannot work on Sunday. I am a christian and a member of the church."

"I can't help that," was the answer. "You must work on Sunday; all the men in my shops have to take a turn at it."

"I cannot do it," was the quiet answer.

"Then you must call at the office and get your pay Saturday night and consider yourself dismissed," said the manufacturer, turning on his heel and walking away.

It was a week of great anxiety to this christian father. On the one hand, there was the family to be considered. How could he see them suffer! And yet they must suffer if he were dismissed from his position. He did not care much about himself. He could stand it, but how could he bring suffering upon his wife and children? But on the other hand, stood his christian obligation, the public covenant with the church, and, more than that, the secret soul-covenant with the Redeemer. He determined to remain loyal to his Lord and trust him for the result. Saturday afternoon came. His employer approached him again, urging him to reconsider his determination and take his turn at Sunday work. He still refused.

"Well, just take it for to-morrow and I will excuse you after that. You see I have said you must do it or leave, and it would break down the discipline of the factory if I did not keep my word. I will not compel you to do it again."

"No," said the sturdy christian, "I can not work even a single Sabbath, and so must leave to-night."

"What church are you a member of?" said the employer.

The workman told him.

"Have you any more of your sort of christians in that church?"

"I hope so," was the reply.

"I wish I had the factory full of them," said the employer. "You just stay right on. I won't bother you any more with Sunday work."

He stood the test.—Herald and Presbyter.

"What Led Me into the Ministry."

Rev. Dr. C. Durham, under the above heading says in the Baltimore Baptist of June 1st:

"After my conversion, which occurred when I was sixteen years old, the desire manifested itself that I should preach the gospel. The war had commenced, and with the enthusiasm that prevailed among the young men of the South, I enlisted in the Confederate Army. As we had no chaplain in our regiment, I conducted religious exercises for our men, and became a student of the New Testament. Without any one ever suggesting to me that I should preach, and simply from the study of God's book, I can recollect as if yesterday, the impression that Paul's words made upon me: "Woe unto me, if I preach not the gospel." After the civil war I returned home. I suppose because of the fact that three of my brothers were lawyers, the natural desire came to me that I should enter the legal profession. I then declined to take part in any religious service, refusing even to pray when called upon. One evening an old Baptist minister called upon me, and during the conversation, which ensued, said, "I always give this advice to young men who think of entering the ministry, stay out of it if you can be satisfied to do so." This was some comfort to me, howevere, for a while, but I found shortly that I could not be content. I found myself at one time thinking of a certain passage of Scripture, and before I knew it, I had a sermon in my mind. Went church on the following Sunday, and met the minister who was talking to some of the brethren on the outside of the building. He told me, as I passed, that he wanted me to preach for him that morning. Without answering him, I entered the church, and took my accustomed seat. As he passed up the aisle to the pulpit, he touched me on the shoulder, and said "come." I did and preached. I was absent on the next preaching day in another part of the country attending to some business for my mother, and the church met, and without any request of suggestion from me, licensed me to preach the gospel. I entered college and endeavored to carry out no doubt the desire instilled in me by my Creator."

Bad Books.

Never under any circumstances read a bad book; and never spend a serious hour in reading a second-rate book. No words can overstate the mischief of bad reading. A bad book will often haunt a man his whole life long. It is often remembered when much that is better is forgotten; it intrudes itself at the most solemn moments, and contaminates the best feeling and emotions. Reading trashy, second-rate books is a grievous waste of time also. In the first place, there are a great many more first-class books than you can master; and in the second place, you can not read an inferior book without giving up an opportunity of reading a first-rate book. Books, remember, are friends, books affect character; and you can as little neglect your duty, in respect to this as you can safely neglect any other moral duty that is cast upon them.—Old Homestead.

Sad disfigurements are possible in the attempts which people make at being religious. A picture of this is seen in the case of the scribes and Pharisees of Jerusalem: "This people draweth nigh unto me with their mouth, and honoreth me with their lips, but their heart is far from me." Put the picture on canvas and you see the disfigurement at once. Mouth pushed out towards the Master, and the heart turned away and far behind. The mouth and the heart must face toward the Master, and draw near him together to make a pleasing picture. Religion cannot go into a book or into words. It is only in a heart. A book or words may speak of it only, but can never possess it.—Christian Inquirer.

Look out for the Foxes.

In the "Song of Songs" is a touch of Hebrew poetry which sounds as if it were a verse from the ballard of a vine dresser. If translated literally, and put in rhythmical form, it would read:

> "Catch us the foxes,
> Foxes the little ones,
> Wasting our vineyards.
> When our vineyards are blossoming.

The mischievous foxes nibbled away the blossoms, or else devoured the tiny and tender grapes, so that the vintage was destroyed. This recalls the sad experience of the good people of Nebraska and Kansas, whose grainfields were devastated by so insignificant a creature as the grasshopper. Great mischief may be wrought by very small agents.

The real danger with the most people is not from enormous and heaven-defying sins. It is from what we call little sins, and often regard as mere faults, foibles, or infirmities.

Big sins frighten us; little ones steal in unobserved, like the insects that eat out the fiber of solid furniture in Cuba, and when the strain comes the timber maps, and fills the eye with dust. More than one minister has lost his place by little artifices that engendered a suspicion of his square, solid honesty. Thousands of christian parents destroy all their religious influence over their children by their ebullitions of bad temper. This is not a mere foible. Bad temper is an ugly, venomous sin—it is a sin against the central, cardinal christian grace of love. Look at the mischief that is often wrought in a congregation by a hurtful tongue of censoriousness that embroils a neighborhood and poisons the reputation of fellow-members of Christ's fold. Envy is often accounted a small sin; so is a pistol ball small, but if lodged in a human brain it is deadly. A very able and excellent minister once left a church because they had practiced on him a petty piece of stinginess; he rightly concluded that if they acted meanly in one act, they could not be trusted to deal fairly by him in other things. Foxes do not loom very large or make a loud noise, but they can strip the Lord's vineyard as clean as the weevils will strip a wheat field, if they are allowed to have full swing. How does spiritual declension began with a christian? It commonly begins with small offenses against the laws of absolute purity, or conscientiousness; it starts with occasional neglects of christian duty and occasional acts of self-indulgence. When robbers want to plunder a house, they hoist a small boy up into a window, and he unbolts the door for the gang. Let us look out for Satain's imps slipped in at the open windows of our hearts.—Theo. L. Cuyler.

The Christian Altruist.

The man who lives for self is to be pitied, the man who lives for others is to be praised, the man who lives for Christ is to be crowned.

Christ stands pre-eminent, not merely like Saul, head and shoulders above his fellows, but immeasurably above men of all centuries, in spiritual insight, moral outlook, power of sympathy; and ability, outlook, and sympathy to others.

Napoleon I. said, "The gospel possesses a secret virtue, a something which works powerfully, a warmth which both influences the understanding and penetrates the heart. The gospel is no mere book, but a living being with an agency, a power which conquers all that opposes it. Here lies the book of books upon the table; I do not tire of reading it, and do so daily with equal pleasure. The soul charmed with the beauty of the gospel is no longer its own possession; God possesses it entirely; it is he who directs its thoughts and faculties; it is his. What proof of the divinity of Jesus Christ. Yet in this absolute sovereignty he has but one aim; the spiritual perfection of the individual, the purification of his conscience, his union with what is true, the salvation of his soul. Men wonder at the conquests of Alexander. But here is a conqueror who draws all men to himself for their highest good; who unites to himself, incorporates into himself, not a nation, but the whole human race. What a miracle! The human soul with all its faculties, becomes an annex of the existence of Christ."

Egoism centers in self. Altruism pours self out upon others. Christian Altruism gives of self to others, but takes in of Christ. The first works for self in the dark. The second works for others in the dark. The third works for others in the light, and becoming better, is able to do better for others. The lowest type of character the world has ever seen is the Egoist. The highest is the christian Altruist. Work for humanity in the name, for the sake of Christ, broadens, deepens, enriches character. The higher the motive the nobler the life; the highest motive possible to us is, "In his name."—O. P. G., in Young People's Union.

The demand of the times is an increased supply of real, genuine men and women—helpers of humanity—burden-bearers; those who, like the good Samaritan, will aid a distressed fellow-being; who, like Job, will search out for those in need and supply their wants; who will visit and help the sick. How scarce such men and women

Life is worth living if you live for others as well as yourself.

DEATH OF COL. L. L. POLK.

The announcement of the death of Col. L. L. Polk, which occurred at Washington City last Saturday morning, will be received with deepest sorrow, not only here in North Carolina where he was so well known, but throughout the entire country. Perhaps no North Carolinian has even stood more prominently before the people of the United States or weilded a wider influence. His death came as a personal bereavement to thousands of homes in every section of the country.

Col. Polk was sick but a short time—about ten days—the cause of his death being blood-poisoning resulting from diuretic trouble of long standing.

The life of Col. Polk is an interesting one. He was born in Anson county April 24, 1837. His father, Andrew Polk of Irish extraction, died when his son Leonidas was fourteen years of age. His mother died when he was an infant. He received a fair academic education in the schools of his native county, and for one session was a student of Davidson College in this State. Thus equipped, and endowed with great natural ability, he started life and made his way to the front rank of the public men of the nation.

His public career commenced in 1860. In that year he was elected a member of the Convention which took North Carolina out of the Union. After the State had seceded, he entered the army of the Confederate States, enlisting in the 20th N. C. Regiment. He continued in the military service until 1864, when he was elected a member of the Legislature. After the war he edited a paper in Anson county, and was, we believe, elected to the Legislature two or three times prior to 1877. In that year he was made Commissioner of Agriculture. This office he resigned in 1880, and became associate editor of the News and Observer. In 1884 he established the Progressive Farmer, since which time the paper has attained a wide circulation and great influence, especially in this State.

Col. Polk was one of the leading spirits in the organization of the Farmers' Alliance in this State in 1887. Since then, he has been President of the order in this State for two terms. From that office he was elected President of the National Farmers' Alliance and Industrial Union of America, which position, by re election, he held at the time of his death. Besides his prominence in political life, he was also prominent in the councils of his denomination, and was twice elected President of the Baptist State Convention of North Carolina.

As will be seen, his life has been a busy, exciting one from the time he entered upon the duties of manhood in 1860 until its close. It is wonderful that his health did not give way before it did. Col. Polk was gifted with eloquent speech—was at home before an audience, and his enthusiastic, ardent Irish nature led him to undertake too much work wherever his affections were enlisted. The work he laid out for himself was more than his physical strength was equal to, and the consequence was, as is usual under such circumstances, a sudden breaking down and death.

While Col. Polk engaged in many hard contests, in which the feelings of men were aroused, yet on account of these we do not believe he carried malice in his heart towards any. In his intercourse with his fellows, there was the genial smile, the cheerful word, and hearty greeting, which marked the broad charity of the christian character, and these gave him a personal magnetism which attached men to him, and held them. Peace to his memory! In the grave all divisions are buried, and over his grave his friends and those who love him will mourn with deep sorrow.

Col. Polk's remains arrived in Raleigh from Washington City on Sunday afternoon last, and the funeral services were held at the First Baptist church at four o'clock. It was one of the largest funeral gatherings ever seen in Raleigh. Dr. J. W. Carter, aided by Drs. T. E. Skinner and J. J. Hall, conducted the services. The pall-bearers from a distance were: Senator Peffer of Kansas; Senator Irby of South Carolina; Dr. C. [illegible], Chairman Ex. Com. Nat. Farmers' Alliance; Congressman Baker of Kansas; Congressman Moses of Georgia; Congressman Alexander and Branch of North Carolina; Congressman Stackhouse of South Carolina; J. H. Turner, Secretary Nat. Ex. Com. Farmers Alliance; Congressman W. A. Keighan of Nebraska; O. M. Kem of Nebraska; and W. F. Gwynne of Tennessee. The local pall-bearers were: Messrs. J. M. Heck, G. M. Allen, W. J. Peele, S. O. Wilson, H. E. King, N. B. Broughton, A. J. Dalby, W. S. Barnes, G. W. Sanderlin and John E. Ray.

To the widow and children, our neighbors, we tender our sincere sympathy in this their great bereavement. May the God of the fatherless and widow guide and keep them.

PERSONALS AND OTHER ITEMS.

....Bro. A. R. Foushee of Roxboro called to see us on Wednesday last.

....Rev. Dr. J. W. Carter's sermon preached at the University is to be published in pamphlet form.

....Rev. Dr. C. F. James of Roanoke becomes President of the Roanoke Female College, Danville, Va.

....The North Carolina Teacher for May has a good picture of Hon. J. C. Scarborough, the future superintendent of public instruction.

....Prof. A. Poindexter Taylor, son of Rev. Dr. J. B. Taylor of Salem, Va., becomes President of the Jeter Female Institute, Bedford City, Va.

....Rev. Dr. J. W. North, of the Western North Carolina Conference, M. E. Church, South, died at his home in Cleveland county on May 29th, aged about sixty four years.

....Rev. L. A. Crandall, D. D., has offered his resignation as pastor of the Euclid Avenue church of Cleveland in order to accept a call to the Memorial Church of Chicago.

....We are in receipt of a number of orders for the Life of Spurgeon. Our first order has been exhausted. We are looking for a new supply every day, and the brethren will receive the book at once.

....Rev. J. B. Richardson of High Point, Rev. C. A. Woodson of Durham, Rev. M. A. Adams of Jonesboro, Tenn., E. S. Moore of Selma, J. S. Allen of Richmond, Va., J. A. Taylor of Dunn, called to see us last week.

....Bro. John E. Ray, President of the Institute for the Deaf and Blind at Colorado Springs, Colorado, attended commencement at Wake Forest College last week, and is spending a few days with his father and friends in Wake county.

....It is understood, we believe, that Dr. S. W. Duncan accepts the foreign secretaryship of the Missionary Union. The desire of his brethren has been toward him in this behalf since it became known that Dr. Murdock was to retire.—Standard.

... The church at Charleston, South Carolina, though with much regret, releases their pastor, Dr. E. C. Dargan, to become Associate Professor of Homiletics and Latin Theology in the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary.—Baptist and Reflector.

....Rev. W. A. Pearson of Front Royal, Va., who has accepted the call of the Rock Hill Baptist church, will arrive here this week and preach in his church next Sunday morning. Mr. Pearson will be accompanied by his wife and seven children.—Baptist Courier.

....Rev. Dr. C. Durham has received a letter from a North Carolinian now living in the "far west" saying, "If you would like to make a pilgrimage to the 'Holy Land' it would be a great pleasure to me to furnish the means for you to do so." Dr. Durham has replied that while for years he has desired to visit the "Holy Land," the pressure of work during this Centennial year of modern missions is too great for him to accept such a privilege.

... One act of the General Conference of the Methodist Protestant church at Westminister, recently, is significant. The discussion was on the report of the Committee on Ritual, and a minister moved that the word "obey" be stricken from the marriage service. He said he was willing to let it remain if it be put in twice so as to require the man to obey as well as to honor and comfort and keep their wives. By a vote of 35 to 26 the word was stricken out, and the women delegates voted with the majority. —Independent.

....W. W. Vass, Jr., the valedictorian of the '92 graduating class at Wake Forest College, a Raleigh boy—a son of W. W. Vass, Esq., Treasurer of the Seaboard Air Line—and the youngest member of his class. This honor was won in the largest and one of the ablest classes ever graduated from that institution, and this fact alone reflects double credit on the successful contestant. Mr. Vass was editor from the Eu. Society of the Wake Forest Student, and is one of the ablest young writers in the State; the diction of the address was elegant and the delivery graceful and effective. Mention has before been made of the election of J. W. Bailey, son of Dr. C. T. Bailey, as editor of the Student for '92 and '93. This election is always zealously contested for and only merit wins. It is an honor to young gentlemen to carry off this prize.—State Chronicle. The Graduating Class at Chapel Hill this year contains sixteen members, that of Wake Forest thirty-six, which is the largest class ever graduated there. Major Vass's son, Will, a grandson of Dr. James McDaniel, who was for many years the President of our State Convention, and who is only nineteen years old, takes the first honors and delivers the valedictory of his class, which is an unusual distinction considering the size of the class. —Dr. T. H. Pritchard, in Charity and Children.

....Rev. W. J. Sholar of Hamilton, N. Y., will graduate June 15th. He has been called to Brooklyn, N. Y., and accepted the call.

....Rev. J. O. Alderman of Concord reports the work progressing hopefully in his field. He has received four by letter recently.

....Rev. D. W. Herring has presented his resignation as a missionary to China to the Foreign Missionary Board, Richmond, Va., at its last meeting, and the same was accepted.

....Prof. W. L. Carmichael, who has been teaching at Fair Bluff, gave us a pleasant call last Saturday. He gave a good report of the work at that place. His present address is Royal.

....Prof. W. J. Ferrell, Principal of Wakefield Academy, and A. R. Foushee of Roxboro, were elected trustees at the meeting of the Board last week to fill the places made vacant by the death of brethren George W. Thompson and S. S. Lea.

....Rev. W. M. Kennedy, a much beloved, well known and useful minister of the word, died at the residence of his son, Dr. Kennedy, in Warsaw, Duplin county, on the 6th inst. He had been in declining health for about two years. His age was near sixty-seven years. An obituary of our deceased brother is in hand which, for want of room, we are compelled to defer till next week. We sympathize with the bereaved.

....Rev. W. C. Tyree of Durham, N. C., writes: "I arrived in Durham last Friday, and have entered upon my work, I hope, with very encouraging prospects. I preached Sunday to large and responsive congregations. My people here gave me a most cordial and affectionate welcome, and I feel assured of their earnest and prayerful co-operation. I have received several kind letters from brethren welcoming me to this State, which I appreciate very much. I trust the Lord may enable me to be an efficient pastor in this promising and important field, and I wish to identify myself heartily with our general State work." We extend a most hearty welcome, both for the RECORDER and the Baptist brotherhood of the State, to Bro. Tyree.

WAKE FOREST COMMENCEMENT.

There was a larger number of visitors to enjoy the "class day" exercises than have ever been present at this stage of commencement before.

Mr. O. H Dockery, the chosen orator for the class, made a fine impression on his audience both as regards the matter his speech contained as well as the admirable manner in which the speech was presented. Mr. Dockery's style is clear, argumentative, and carries with it a force that might be considered rare for one so young.

W. A. Garland, the poet of the class, read an original poem, which was listened to with interest by the audience.

Mr. J. E. Spence disclosed the history of the class of '92 in a way which was interesting and very characteristic of students at college.

Mr. Hardister, whom the class chose to prophesy as to the future career of its members, went about his work in somewhat of a unique way, but which was highly entertaining to all present. The young, beardless graduate placed himself thirty years into the future, and then found himself surrounded by a condition of things almost as startling as that in Bellamy's "Kooking Backward." In the place of the buildings we now have at Wake Forest the prophetic acumen of the speaker saw great granite buildings with electric lights and all other modern improvements, and in his address made in the twentieth century he congratulated his audience on the good fortune which had come to so many of his old class-mates of '92, placing them in the highest places in church and in State. The speech was well received, and showed real genius on the part of the speaker.

TUESDAY EVENING.

Dr. Ramsay of Georgia, who was to have delivered the alumni address, failing to come, the address was delivered by Prof. J. B. Carlyle, Professor of Latin in Wake Forest College. After being introduced in a spirited speech by Dr. J. B. Powers, President of the Alumni Association, the speaker announced as his subject, "The Mission of the College Man in North Carolina." The speaker declared that our State in point of education was far behind many of her sister States; that a large number of her citizens who by their votes were to decide the honor and prosperity the State should enjoy could not so much as read the ballots they cast on election day, and in view of this condition of things the college graduate ought to lead in the matter of perfecting as well as dignifying a first-class common school system.

The speaker dwelt with special emphasis upon the duty of educated men to lay hold upon the public economic questions, and discuss them for the good of the public from a scientific as well as a patriotic standpoint. That, too, it devolved upon our educated men to preserve for posterity the historic records of our State. We have the records of men whose lives have done honor to the State and to the world, and in many cases their labor and sacrifices are to pass away forever unless preserved by men who are being educated.

The speaker dwelt with enthusiasm upon the duty of our North Carolina college men to spend their lives in our own State, for there is none better, rather than go to the wild west, or in the already crowded and stagnated cities.

The speech was good from beginning to end, and the unstinted applause and hearty congratulations to the speaker left no suggestion that anybody felt any regrets at the failure of the speaker who was elected to perform this duty to be present.

At the close of the address a session of the alumni was held in Memorial Hall. After completing the routine work of the association, there was an interesting discussion by a number of gentlemen looking to the closer organization and more effective work of the alumni of the College.

On motion of Rev. W. R. Gwaltney, a banquet will be served in the dining halls of the Yarborough House in Raleigh at the annual meeting of the Baptist State Convention in Raleigh next December.

Mr. W. E. Daniel of the class of '78 was elected to deliver the alumni address before the association next June. If, however, he should fail to put in his appearance, which has come to be so frequent with men who accept these duties, the occasion will be saved by the alternate, Mr. W. W. Kitchen of Roxboro, N. C.

WEDNESDAY MORNING.

This is a typical commencement day. A light rain last night has done away with dust, and the air is fresh, and all things seem to be aiding to give visitors and students a pleasant time.

News came yesterday that sickness had prevented Congressman Bailey being here, as previously announced, to deliver the oration before the literary societies. Dr. Taylor, after announcing that the audience would be led in prayer by Dr. J. D. Hufham, stated that what had happened might look like a disappointment, yet he had the satisfaction of stating that we had six alumni of the college who had kindly consented to speak ten minutes each on topics which had been assigned them. The first speaker, Hon. John C. Scarborough, told of the needs of our common schools. The speaker said we had a great State, with a million and a half population, and sixty-five per cent. of these are white people. The towns and cities are to a great extent provided with public schools, but those who live in the country have not, in many sections, been provided with any schools. The average school term in the State is less than twelve weeks out of the fifty two. This subject of public education is specially important to the Baptist and Methodist denominations, as they are composed largely of people who live in the country. Mr. Scarborough made an earnest appeal to the colleges in the State to show greater earnestness in behalf of common school education.

Hon. C M. Cook was the next on the program. Subject, "How to supply the needs of our schools." The speaker said to find the how was the puzzling point in nearly all discussions. Plenty of people can point out difficulties, but to find the remedy is another question. Our schools are supplied in one particular, and only one—we have the children by a good large majority, and nearly everything else is to be supplied. We need good county superintendents. This will secure good teachers, and this will mean better schools. Continuing, the speaker said the best interest of the common schools was, after all, vested in the good women of the State. Men were not willing to sacrifice for the education of their boys, but mothers were always ready to make any sacrifice for the sake of sending their children to school. Capt. Cook's speeches are always strong, practical and original, and his remarks on this occasion were roundly applauded by the audience.

The subject, "More and better academies," was assigned to Dr. J. D. Hufham. The subject could not have been better placed. Dr. Hufham has for years led in this particular phase of education. The speaker alluded with much feeling to the condition of the University just after the war, also to Wake Forest College. He had felt for years that we needed the academies to come between the common schools and the colleges and University; that the best endowment our colleges can have are well-manned academies which shall serve as feeders for their support.

Dr. T. H. Pritchard made an eloquent appeal for the higher education of the girls. He believed we had made a mistake in not providing better for the education of our girls. If any had to be deprived of an education it ought to be the boys and not the girls. The speaker declared in a most emphatic manner that our Baptist people were making a great mistake in not at once establishing a seminary of high grade in Raleigh for the education of girls.

"Our College, its work and its needs," was responded to by Mr. E. E. Hilliard of Scotland Neck and Hon. G. W. Sanderlin. Mr. Hilliard fully sustained his growing reputation as an orator. He emphasized forcibly and with fine effect the necessity of individual effort on the part of the College representatives, and that the aggregation of these individual efforts must constitute the highest success of the College.

A North Carolina audience always hails with real pride the appearance on the rostrum of Dr. Sanderlin. He had spoken in eighty-five counties in North Carolina, and that from Wake Forest College had gone out streams which were educating and up-lifting humanity in every section of the State. Wake Forest needs no other president than the one she now has. The Baptists in the State are ready to follow him whithersoever he goes. Wake Forest needs no better boys, but only more of them. These will be supplied as the interest in our common schools shall increase and our academies be built up.

Amid deafening applause the exercises of the morning were closed.

WEDNESDAY EVENING.

At 8 o'clock a large audience assembled in Memorial Hall to listen to the baccalaureate sermon by Rev. C. H. Jones of Knoxville, Tenn. He is the youngest man who ever preached here on an occasion of this sort. Taking his youthful, student-like appearance, it would seem that this might have been his own graduating day. After singing, and prayer by Rev. Dr. Carter, he took as his text 1 Samuel 17: 39, 40. The members of the graduating class, as well as the readers of the RECORDER, will appreciate the following reference to the sermon which Dr. Wm. Royall made by request of the writer:—

Taking David and his sling as the occasion of his remarks, he made "Consecrated Individuality" his subject, and by an ingenious chain of analogies deduced lessons of moment for the benefit of young men. The call for a "man" was emphasized—a man, not a class or mass of men, a man to meet the giant—a man endowed by God and specially equipped for the specific work in hand.

In terse and beautiful language he painted the scene and the coming conflict, the man's strength in his seeming weakness, the ground of his confidence in its apparent groundlessness and the impulse which drove him to the contest.

In David's individual case the pebble and the sling were more potent than Saul's armor. Each is strongest on that good point which distinguishes him from his fellows. One's strength may be another's weakness.

When the oil from the horn held by some Samuel has flowed down into the soul, and the Spirit of the Lord comes with it, then follows intensified individuality—a dauntless preparedness for any work, toil, suffering which needs be met in championship of a great truth and a great cause.

"This one thing" enlists all the powers, sympathies, prayers of him in whose bones the fire burns. Concentration of forces, specialization, the gathering up to a focus of all energies and potencies for some high and noble venture—these are God appointed harbingers of a brighter day for a languishing cause or a down-trodden principle of right.

Moral intensity in the law, in medicine, in the pulpit, in citizenship, in every good cause, God demands, all times call for.

Upon the educated young men of to day rests a responsibility augmented by the conditions of a complex civilization of which preceding ages had no conception—a civilization involving problems the solution of which must devolve, under God, upon the men who can by virtue of education analyze and measure them.

But no sketch can do justice to either the argument or the style of this magnificent address.

There was a logical coherence and consecutiveness, a faultlessness and finish in diction, a felicity in word-painting, and a grace and manliness in delivery which seldom meet in such admirable and exquisite proportions.

THURSDAY MORNING.

This is commencement day. Everything conspired to make this one of the most pleasant and cheering occasions. Several prominent gentlemen occupied seats on the rostrum.

After giving, at the entrance of the hall, the "college yell," the largest class which has graduated in the State since the war, filed up the main aisle and took their places on the rostrum amid great enthusiasm from the audience. Dr. Taylor presented Rev. J. B. Richardson of High Point, who led the audience in prayer, in which he gave most devout thanks for the prosperity of the College, and invoking a continuance of these blessings for yet greater and wider usefulness for the College.

At this juncture Dr. R. H. Marsh read some extracts from the report of President Taylor, stating that the session just closed had been the best the College had ever had. Two hundred and thirty-three students had been in attendance during the year; the work of the students had been exceptionally well done; there had not been a single case of serious discipline during the entire year; that the parents of no student had been advised to discontinue their son for failure to make proper use of his time at College.

At the close of Dr. Marsh's remarks, which elicited the most hearty applause, the following program was gone through with in a manner which reflected the highest credit on the speakers and the training they had received:—

Salutatory—G W Paschal, Chatham.

Oration—We are Drifting, whither? C D Graves, Selma.

At the conclusion of the orations, Dr. Taylor, after reading the degrees which had been conferred on the class, delivered the following baccalaureate address:—

"WHAT THE WORLD HAS A RIGHT TO EXPECT FROM A COLLEGE GRADUATE."

Thirty-six more college graduates! Does the world need so many? Is not the supply outgrowing the demand? The reports that come every June from a hundred colleges, and such a numerous class as this, standing where twenty years ago was only three, might for a moment suggest that it is an open question. But only for a moment. In this presence our judgment are easily be guiled. When, however, we go forth into the crowded activities of trade, of agriculture, of manufacture, we see things in a truer light. For the right sort of college graduate the demand is far greater than the supply. Roughly estimating, there is in North Carolina to every thousand of population one college graduate. For each one who has a true Master's or Bachelor's degree there are in our State probably fifty score who have never received credentials of scholarship of equal value.

This consideration suggest a grave responsibility. Often have I addressed you as college students. To day, for the first time, and, as a body, for the only time, do I speak to you as college graduates. And now, while you feel the joyous elation in the wearing of your new laurels, I would remind you that every honor brings also its burden, that each one of you is in a sense a representative man, standing as one among a multitude who have not had your opportunities, and that where much has been given much will be required.

If any of you have dreamed that life is only beauty, may you awake as you enter upon its activities and find that life is also duty. Much will be required! The thought is not a sombre, but it is a serious one. There is nothing in it to depress. There is much that should stimulate.

May I be allowed to suggest at least three things that the world has a right to require and expect in a college graduate?

First, Scholarship. This goes without saying. Yet it is worth while to emphasize it. The diplomas in your hands are guarantees of attainments which are creditable to you now. They represent many, many hours of patient toil, as you have bent over the microscope or test-tube, or untangled the puzzle of a sentence or solved the intricacies of a problem, or stood for the first time with uncovered heads before the majesty of a moral of physical law. But if, ten years from now, you have not by study reading, observation, reflection and travel, made large new acquisitions, these bits of parchment will be reproaches. They will cry out for shame against you. We have sought in vain to train you, if you have not learned to set a modest estimate upon your powers and present attainments, and to form some ideal, large and true. Crudities and sophomoric affectations you doubtless have, as all your predecessors have had. And the world will good humoredly tolerate them, and laugh at them for a while. Then, if, when there have disappeared like thin veneering amid the hard knocks of life, it does not appear after all you have the genuine, solid, accurate scholarship which the world has a right to expect in a college graduate, the procession will still move on, but you will not be in it. The Muses yield their secrets and powers only to patient wooing. The price of true scholarship you will find in the future as you have found in the past to be arduous and continued labor.

Second. The world will require large common-sense and practical activity of the graduate. I do not say that the world expects it, but it longs to see it and will surely demand it as a condition of success in any career. The days are not far gone when the college-bred man was popularly supposed to be an amateur, unfamiliar with labor and the practicalities of life. Some, even now, imagine him to be an efferminate creature to be kept under glass, handled delicately with sugar tongs, and laid away in tissue-paper. They will hardly think this of the graduates who have played foot ball. The truth is that part of the good in physical culture and college athletics is in their tendency to develope activity and vigor and endurance in habits of life as well as in the body. If this be true, some of you have earned the right to become heroes, and to get to your goal.

Mr. Andrew Carnegie, in a recent article, said "I have inquired and searched everywhere, in all quarters for the college graduate, but find scarcely a trace of him." One trouble, with Mr. Carnegie was, I imagine, that he did not look high enough; for the graduate, especially when willing to go in at the bottom, has a way of getting to the top. And the millionaire's sneer is, after all, a compliment. He not only looked too low, but he looked in the wrong direction. Success in life with him means the acquisition of money, and nothing but that. But the wealth of the Indians could not buy a ticket for a back seat at the panorama which is forevere passing before the eye of a true scholar and thinker. The intellectual, as well as the spiritual life of a man consisteth not in the abundence of things that he possesseth. May your ideal of a successful life be higher than that of the man who measures all things by a money standard, and regards with contempt the nectared sweets of scholarship.

Of course there is a modicum of truth in the criticism. We do need to get more thoroughly rid of the idea that only so called professional men need be college graduates. Especially in the South is it desirable that thoroughly educated men should pursue technical courses of study and devote themselves to manufacture and the better tillage of the soil. We have had false pride enough among our young men. It has begotten sloth and extravagance. And their child is poverty. Young men, be examples, I charge you, to your generation, in the exaltation of labor and the display of common sense. The thousand people whom each of you represents have a right to expect it of you. Let witlings scoff. Let butterflies of society sneer. Your time to laugh will come later.

Third. The world has a right to look for character in a college graduate. Why, especially in him? you ask. Because he has come to see things—all things—in their wider relations. In whatever department he has studied he has found law. If he has done no violence to his reason, he has discerned a Law Maker. He has found himself environed with obligations. There is something anomalous, almost monstrous, in the sight of a man who has given several years to the study of nature and man and human thought, as revealed in language and philosophy, who has found himself encompassed with stupendous forces and unvarying laws, and who can yet think lightly and speak flippantly and irreverently. Deep moral earnestness is a natural result of thoughtfulness and application to study. Unless a young man has poisoned his moral and intellectual life, or put a mortgage upon himself by the formation of evil habits, his culture, especially culture in a christian college, under christian influences, may be expected to reveal itself, not only in his genuine scholarship and true manliness, but also in his exalted character. Young gentlemen, do not forget that each of you stands for a thousand who have not had your chance. You have no right to be vicious or unfaithful in trusts or uncharitable in judgment. Sad enough for any man to be bad. But that a college graduate, with his opportunities for moral development and with the eyes of so many upon him should ever make shipwreck—alas, alas! Young men, you will not, surely you will not. God help you, that you may not.

And need I remind you that in order to have character you must have convictions? On the lips of men are a thousand plausible generalities about largeness and broadness. They are lurking places for fatal fallacies. They will not help in character building. Better some definite beliefs, some well defined principles, some certain hope than a wide and trackless moor without a signboard or a finger post, over which to make life's journey.

Despise not the path trodden by your fathers and mothers. You have come, through their love and sacrifice, to know more of language and science and philosophy than some of them know, but in the things that, after all, are the best and the highest, they can still be your teachers. That path is still straight and narrow. It can never be otherwise, for it is the path of virtue, and it leads to heaven. Other paths, broad and alluring, will open before you. But in them you can never satisfy the deeper hunger of your natures, as your hearts come to pant and cry, as they surely will—for you are his off-spring—for the living God. In them you may have spotless reputations, but you cannot form the shapeliest characters. In them you may make real some dream of selfish ambition, but the highest aspirations you can never fulfil. For it is only as our lives connect themselves with the plans of the Eternal, that they can reach their fullest and most exalted dignity.

Successive classes, as year after year they have gone forth from these halls, have, with rare exceptions, proven themselves to be men of character and have developed in usefulness. This hour closes the best session and crowns the largest class that the college has ever known. See to it, I charge you, as I bid you farewell—for we have a right to expect it of you as Wake Forest graduates—that each of you shall become a centre of illuminating, purifying, sweetening influence, and, in order to this, strive to be men, not only of true learning and intelligent industry, but also of high, heroic, truthful, honest, stainless character.

The concert in Memorial Hall and the gathering in the Literary Society Halls were the closing scenes of a most enjoyable and successful commencement.

Peace Institute.

On the last day of beautiful May, Peace Institute closed one of the most prosperous years of its history. It had an enrollment of 188 pupils, eighty of whom were boarders.

This school had its origin in the boarding and day school for young ladies, established at Hillsboro, N. C., in 1838, by the now venerable, Rev. Robert Burwell, D. D., and his sainted wife, Mrs. Anna Burwell, "who may justly be regarded as the Mother of Peace." Afterwards they moved the school to Charlotte, N. C.; and again in 1872, for climate and other reasons, they moved it to its present location at Raleigh, N. C., where for nineteen years it has continued to dispense the benefits of its liberal culture, through scholarship and charming accomplishments to thousands of the noblest young women of North Carolina and the South. Until two years ago the Institute was controlled and managed by Rev. R. Burwell and his gifted and accomplished son, Capt. Jno. B. Burwell, as associate Principal. Owing to the great age of the former and the failing health of the latter, two years ago the Institute passed into the control of Capt. James Dinwiddie, one of the old Artillery officers of Jackson's Corps in the Army of Northern Virginia, who is a Master of Arts of the University of Virginia, and a teacher with twenty five years of experience.

The Institute is one of the best equipped in the South with new furniture, modern appliances, and twenty-one new pianos.

Prof. A. Bauman, one of the most gifted of Southern music teachers, is Musical Director, and is assisted by his no less gifted wife, by Miss S. McIlwaine (a pupil of Hahr, Sherwood and Howard), and by Miss S. Marguerite Howell, for four years a pupil of Sieber (in Voice) and Schwenka (in Piano) at Berlin, Germany. Miss Emma B. Bock, a graduate from the School of Design in Philadelphia, is Directress of the Art Department.

Every department of the school is in charge of a specialist.

The commencement exercises of 1892 were held May 30th, with the following

PROGRAM:

Double Quartette—"Hail! Alma Mater!" Misses B. Oates, E. Watkins, K. Belvin, W. B. Graves, F. Hunt, B. Watkins, M. Merrimon, L Cordon, M. Gaskill.

"Chanson Hongroise." Miss Mamie Salzman.

Announcement of distinctions.

"Come to the Woods"—Duet. Misses Emm and Bettie Watkins.

"Paraphrase de Concert." Miss Alice Kant Tinsley.

Presentation of prizes.

ANNUAL ALUMNÆ MEETING.

The annual meeting of the Alumnæ was held in the ladies' parlors of the Institute on Saturday evening, May 29th, 1892. It was an enthusiastic meeting of the loyal daughters of grand old Peace. Fifty-four of Peace's honored daughters were present, and there were tender and touching scenes, when mothers of families, long separated in the battles of life, fell upon each other's necks, and with tears of joy renewed the friendships of theirs school days.

COM.

High Point Female College.

Dear Recorder:—The commencement exercises of High Point Female College were pronounced by every one fully equal to the very best ever witnessed anywhere.

They began on Friday evening, May 27th, by drills, songs, and dialogues of primary pupils under the management and direction of the teacher, Miss Kate Stallings, who had so perfectly drilled the little ones that no mistake was made by any. There were some recitations and some music, too, which was finely executed to the delight of the audience; but the closing piece, the cantata, was the crowning piece of the occasion. It is not too much to say that every one was charmed.

Saturday evening the spacious chapel was well filled with an appreciative audience to hear the recitations of the Elocution Class and music by the music pupils. Every one performed her part splendidly. Penelope's Sym was very enjoyable, and the whole reflected the highest credit upon the teachers who had the training of the young ladies.

Sunday morning was dark, lowering and rainy, but the chapel was well filled to hear the commencement sermon by Dr. John Mitchell of Wake Forest from the text, "She hath done what she could." It was a gospel sermon, full of Jesus, and of most tender and beautiful descriptions of the love and devotion of Mary and the tender love and appreciation of her act and her motive by the Master, with a most forcible and eloquent application to all and especially to the young ladies of the College.

At night, Elder C. S. Farriss of Florida preached a most eloquent and impressive sermon from the text, "Almost thou persuadest me to be a christian." There was a good audience and the preacher was at his best. Truly North Carolina lost a most noble and talented brother when Bro. Farriss went from her borders, but Florida received the gain. Bro. Farriss, as is known to many, is editor of the Witness, the Baptist paper of Florida, and is making it one of the very best of our papers. He is also Professor elect of Greek in Stetson University, the great Baptist school of Florida. Bro. Farriss is destined to stand amongst our most celebrated men, and is and will be a great honor to our State and to his Alma Mater, Wake Forest College.

Monday evening was devoted to drills, recitations and music. The success of the previous evenings was equalled if not surpassed. The music was excellent, showing that Miss Ford, the musical directress, had faithfully and correctly drilled her pupils. This was apparent to every one from beginning to end, not only on this, but on the former evening, and again on Tuesday when some pieces of difficult music were admirably performed. The Elocution Class showed now, as before, that a master hand had drilled them, and the benefits of physical culture were clearly seen in the grace of expression exhibited by all. The exercises concluded with the "Aesthetic Drill" by this class with their teacher, Miss Minnie Stallings, at the piano, directing with her exquisite touch the movements of the young ladies, which were so graceful and perfect, as to convince the audience of the great benefits derived from physical culture. The opening exercise was the "Patriotic Drill," which was splendidly executed under the direction of Miss Kate Stallings, the teacher.

Tuesday came, bright and beautiful, and brought a full house. After an invocation by Elder J. K. Fant, the President delivered rewards, promotion cards, and distinctions; then diplomas in particular schools as follows:

In French, to Misses Lula Vann of Rich Square, and Etta Ring, Elkin, N. C.; in Moral Science, to Miss Josephine Thomas of Cumberland county, N. C.; in English Language and Moral Science, Miss Alice Liles of Rockingham county, N. C.; and in English Language, Natural Science, Moral Science and History, to Miss Mary F. Cousar of Marion county, S. C.

The Graduating Class was then introduced, and Miss Kate Daniel of Mullens, S. C., delivered a very appropriate salutatory, and read her graduating essay. Subject: "I'll Paddle My Own Canoe." Miss Mable Wiles of High Point, N. C., read her graduating essay. Subject: "Flowers." Miss Pattie Tuttle of Plymouth, N. C., read her graduating essay. Subject: "What Next?" and delivered a very feeling and appropriate valedictory address. The young ladies treated their subjects ably and read them well. The President delivered diplomas to Misses Daniel and Wiles, both having finished the six schools of English, conferring on them the degree of B. L.; and to Miss Tuttle, who had finished the six schools of English and schools of Latin and French, conferring on her the degree of A. B.

Dr. Mitchell, by request of the President, delivered, in a very appropriate address, Bibles to the graduates.

The Scholarship medal was delivered by Rev. C. S. Farriss to Miss Lelia Turner of Statesville, N. C.; and the Deportment medal, by Rev. J. F. Tuttle to Misses Carrie Dunn of Riceville, Va., and to Miss Texie Walters of Person county, N. C.

Hon. J. F. Spainhour of Boone, N. C., was then introduced, and after a few humorous and apposite remarks, announced his subject: "Woman's Rights." The speaker condemned the popular idea on that subject and showed in an hour's forcible address the reasons for the false notions on the subject in New England and other Northern latitudes and what her true rights are, condemning with much force the injustice heretofore done her, and pleading for her rights for the future. The speaker pointed out the proper reasons for separate education, showing it to be a matter of different physical training and management, affecting the health of our girls in college, &c. The address was admirable in conception and was very forcibly delivered. The exercises were interspersed with choice music elegantly rendered.

The finale of this most successful series of exercises was a splendid rendition by the Singing Class under the direction of their teacher, Miss Bettie Stallings, of the Cantata, Esther, the Beautiful Queen. The personations were as follows: King Ahasuerus, Miss Kate Daniel; Queen Esther, Miss Etta Ring; Haman, Miss Lelia Turner; Zerish, Miss Minnie Grimes; Zerish's daughter Ida, Miss Vera Idol; Mordecai, Miss Pattie Tuttle; Mordecai's sister, Miss Josie Thames; Propheteas, Miss Elsie Summer; Scribe, Miss Blanche Tuck; Harbonah, Miss Mamie Ford; Guards, Miss Dora Austin, Annie Parks, Blanche Tuck, Bessie Liles; Herald, Miss Maggie Vann; Queen's Attendants, Misses Carrie Dunn, Lena Pepper and others; Hegai, Miss Sallie Williams; High Priest, Miss Alice Liles; Zerish's Attendants, Misses Ada and Bessie Crocker, Lula Vann and May Wiles; King's Pages, Misses Minnie Pickett and Connie Charles; Queen's Pages, Misses Rhett Leach and Maggie Callum; Chorus, class. Each acted her roll most successfully.

So ended the third annual commencement of High Point Female College. To say that all were pleased inadequately expresses the appreciation of the audience—they were delighted.

The chapel was beautifully decorated with evergreens and flowers, the work of the pupils, to the general good conduct and diligence of whom the President bore the strongest testimony.

The Art Gallery was open to inspection during the commencement, and many admired the array of beautiful crayons and paintings executed during the year—the first five months under the charge of Miss Dixie Leach, and the last five months under Miss Minnie Stallings. The verdict rendered by all was that the Art exhibit was equal to any at any similar institution and on a footing with all the excellent things enjoyed at the commencement.

The prospects for a full attendance next year are most flattering. Every room will probably be full.

Charles H. Spurgeon: his Faith and Works. By H. L. Wayland. 12mo, 315 pages. Price, $1.25. American Baptist Publication Society.

The lamented death of Mr. Spurgeon has awakened in the minds of a vast number a desire to become more fully acquainted with his history, his character, his aims, his works, and his success. At the same time it has stimulated many christian authors to the very laudable effort to prepare for these interested parties memoirs of this eminently successful minister of the gospel of Christ. We have seen more than a dozen of these memoirs, and the cry is still, "They come." Even the most imperfect of these works can scarcely fail to be useful. They all hold up an example that is worthy of careful study, and will undoubtedly incite many to zealous imitation—a consumation devoutedly to be wished. This work of Dr. Wayland is one to be especially commended to the notice of pastors and evangelists, to Sunday-school teachers, to young men and young women, to all the followers of Christ of whatsoever age or capacity. It is a book for all christian workers, and every believer in Christ ought to be a real worker for him. We cannot attempt to present an analysis of its valuable contents. It must suffice to say in what respects we believe it would be found profitable to any active christian reader. First, it is adapted to awaken in every real believer a desire to know what gifts the Lord has entrusted to him for use in his blessed work. It is to be feared that many have never thought of inquiring as to the number or the kind of talents that their Lord has given them. Second, it would lead him to ask, "How can I use these talents entrusted to me by my Lord, so as most successfuly to promote the spread of the gospel, for salvation of men, and the glory of my Redeemer!"

Thoughts—No. 2.

BY SCATTERBRAD.

"Take no thought for your life, what ye shall eat, or what ye shall drink; nor yet for your body, what ye shall put on."

Our Master meant to teach us that we should not bother our minds too much with the things of this world. He knew that we poor creatures would think more about our eating, drinking and things to wear, than about eternal matters. It is very natural for us to think about something good to eat; and some put their whole thoughts on good things to drink and fine things to wear. I reckon if a fellow could tabernacle here all the time, he could afford to pester his mind mostly about such matters. But a fellow hardly gets settled down in this "clime" till he gets orders to move out, and he is certain to obey orders. I believe this drinking and eating business is carried on too much in America for the good of the people. The Lord has told or promised his people if they would mind their own business and work, that "their bread would be certain and water sure," in short, he says he will feed them and that they will not starve. He does not say though that he will feed them on nicknacks, such as ice-cream, cake and pie. A man generally has a hankering after such things not best for him. The Lord knows best what things a man should have; and when he gets to meddling with things forbidden he'll be pretty certain to find it out sooner or later. I think the Lord wants the house he stays in to be healthy and sweet. Good digestion will make a clear mind and a healthy body, and there won't be much room in the house for the "blues." It is a mighty hard matter for us to hold up on eating, especially on such things as taste good. Temperate habits will make doctor bills little.

We are commanded to be temperate in "all things." I reckon this does not mean we should be temperate in such things forbidden for us to use. Surely it don't mean we must swear a little—to be temperate in that; and just steal a little, and be temperate in that sleight-of-hand performance; and drink moderate-size drams, and be temperate in the Devil's venom. Lots of things the Lord wants us to abstain from, and he says strong drink is one. I am very certain he does not want his children to engage in any thing that will defile the house or temple that he lives in. I am not certain, but I believe he has his eye on tobacco as being a very unclean thing for his children to use. It is a very good medicine if kept away from the mouth. Many people can't give any money to the Lord's cause, but they do spend lots of money of money for tobacco. It is a preacher's business to try to get the people to live like decent folks ought to, but I have heard tell of some preachers leaving a good deal of sign where they have been, as, they say, some of them know how to spread "tobacco paint" on people's floors.

I reckon people expect too much of preachers any how. I used to think that a preacher was an uncommon creature, but I am now forced to believe that at best he is a poor sinner "saved by grace." I am very un easy for fear lots of the preaching men are not much acquainted with the Lord, judging from their fruits. Christ was the best preacher that ever walked up and down this world. He is a perfect model for everybody to imitate, and preachers would do well to imitate him as best as they can. I don't believe Christ worried much about the "luxuries" of this world. He was a very poor man, too. He did not own any house, and don't suppose he wore very fine clothes. I reckon if he were here now, he couldn't preach unless he had on a "sweep tail" coat buttoned up to the chin, and put on airs in general. I am very certain he would look nice and decent, and don't believe his chin would be stained with tobacco juice. Preachers ought to wear nice clothes, but I don't know that they are bound to advertise themselves by the kind of clothes they wear. I think the best way to let the people know that we are the Lord's servants is, to possess much of his Spirit and quietly do his work. Christ put in all his time doing good. His mind was not occupied about worldly honors, big salaries, what he should eat, or what he should wear. Some of our preachers do a heap of work, live very slim, and wear seedy clothes; but some of the brethren in hollowing distance of the preacher fare sumptuously every day and wear fine linen, too.

It is a very hard matter to get things on a right balance in this "low ground of sorrow." Things will be adjusted pretty soon. It is a very hard matter for us to keep from worrying, especially about things we can't help. This continual fretting and worrying about things not under our control, shatters the nerves of lots of people, and hurries them to a premature grave. It is best not to "cross a bridge till we get to it." It is best for us to trust the Lord and do our duty, and he will make things all right for us. He don't mean for us to trust him and then sit down and fold our hands and expect him to give us the things we need. Faith and works are very apt to keep together. Bro. Watts "hit the nail on the head" when he wrote, "Make the service of the Lord your delight, and he'll make your want his care." The Lord never forgets his own. He don't want us to live lives of carefulness, but lives of trust. If we trust the Lord and do good, we will be fed and wear apparel that will protect the body, too. Of all things that fly, swim, creep or walk, man is the meanest, since old Satan has been prowling around. Satan, they say, is getting meaner, and I guess man is, too. The Lord tells us to learn a lesson from the birds about not putting our mind so much on how we are to "keep soul and body together." Many of us, too, are wondering how it will be with us when we come to die. That's none of our business; but it is our business to live for Christ every day, and if we do, he will be close to us when we die. "We can lean our head upon his breast, and breathe out our life sweetly there."

Some Things Novel at the Northern Anniversaries.

1. Dr. George Dana Boardman preached the annual sermon before the Missionary Union. His text was Eph. 2: 15. He announced that he would follow his usual custom, and he proceeded to read and comment upon the chapter from which his text was taken. In doing so he read his Bible lesson and turned his leaves deliberately through the whole exercise: to us it possessed the virtue of novelty at least.

But may not many of our brethren who often indulge in extemporaneous comments while reading Scripture lessons take a hint? Not necessarily to read the exercise, but to prepare it thoroughly, so that it should not fall below the reading of an ordinary commentary.

2. Another new observation was that of female ushers, apparently young ladies. Some things we can learn to like after long custom. There is one favorable feature about that—it is pleasant to be manipulated by gentle, soft hands.

3. Another delightfully novel scene was the choir of two hundred in Grace Temple church. The organ is large, has usual elevation in the rear of the pulpit, and descending from the organ to the platform of the pulpit are ranged in order the seats of the singers. Among the choir there are to be observed maturely looking men and women, but many young men and ladies, with a goodly number of boys and girls. We like choirs when they are large enough and representative enough. But a fossilized choir in a church is the end of progress.

It was inspiring to sit in the Grace Temple church, filled with four thousand people, and find yourself enveloped with music, plain and simple, to which a christian heart could respond. J. B. B.

Meeting of West Chowan Ministers.

At a meeting of the ministers of the West Chowan Association, held at Margarettsville, N. C., it was decided to canvass the Association in behalf of Missions, beginning Tuesday after the third Lord's day in July, and to continue the work for fourteen days as follows:

Tuesday, July 19—Seaboard, Jackson at night.
Wednesday, July 20—Potecasi.
Thursday, July 21—Roberts' Chapel.
Friday, July 22—Meherrin, Murfreesboro at night.
Saturday, July 23—Mt. Tabor, Winston at night.
Sunday, July 24—Ahoskie, Union at night.
Monday, July 25—Hebron.
Sunday, July 31—Brantley's Grove, Harrellsville at night.
Monday, August 1—Ross'.
Tuesday, August 2—Lawrence's X Roads Cashie at night.
Wednesday, August 3—Republican, Lewiston at night.
Thursday, August 4—Connaritsa, Aulander at night.
Friday, August 5—Sandy Run.

The following brethren were selected by the Bertie Union Meeting as speakers:

Elder C. W. Scarboro: Subject—The History, Success and Prospects of our Missions to the Heathen.

Elder L. M. Curtis: Subject—God's Providence in Baptist Missions.

Elder C. N. Donaldson: Subject—Biblical Idea of Missions.

Elder B. Craig: Subject—Missions as Dependent on Pastors and Churches.

Graded Helps.

The arrangement of its Sunday-school literature by the American Baptist Publication Society is helpfully suggestive. Here we see six grades provided for—enough, but not too many, for any school that would do its work thoroughly and systemically. The provisions for each separate grade are full and, in every respect, complete. Primary, Intermediate, Advanced, Senior, Teacher, Superintendent—all are well equipped for the best work of which they are capable. It would seem impossible for any Sunday-school to use such helps and so arranged, without becoming itself better managed and more helpful to every individual connected with it.

The Woman's Home Missionary Society as usual gave a large part of its words to denouncing the wickedness of Southern whites and wringing their hands over the woes of the colored men. One prayer even was devoted to telling our sins to the Lord. It would seem they have called South God-forsaken, so long as they have come to believe he has indeed so forsaken us as to know nothing of what goes on in this part of the earth, and to need to be informed by them. It seems passing strange that women and white women should denounce the mobbing of colored fiends who have assaulted white maidens, and have no word of sympathy or pity for ladies so foully wronged.

While the speaking sisterhood have set Paul aside, yet there seems to be always an uneasiness about him. He will not down. He is in the air as it were, and somebody is sure to introduce his name. This time it was Dr. Lorimer, who introduced the Apostle. He said: "What Paul said? Well as another has said, 'Paul—yes—why—Paul meant—Paul intended—I say Paul meant to say—Brethren, I don't know what Paul did mean! He did not cover the case.' I look in the earnest faces of these godly women, and I can better believe we have a mistake in exegesis than that they have mistaken their work."—Western Recorder.

POKINE.

I have used the within remedy (Pokine) with great success. James H. Lassiter.

I have used the Pokine Remedy (prepared by W. T. Cheatham, Jr.) in case of Sciatica with the result of positive relief in a few hours, and believe if used as directed is will effect a permanent cure. J. L. H. Missillier.

March 6, 1891.

For the benefit of the public, I unhesitatingly recommend Cheatham's wonderful remedy, "Pokine," to all sufferers of rheumatism. It has produced marvelous results in my case. I was a sufferer of the malady for five years, and after taking a few bottles was entirely cured.

Very respectfully, W. W. Dowtin.

Henderson, N. C., March 7, '91.

Mr. W. T. Cheatham:
Dear Sir—My wife was down in bed with rheumatism, and the Pokine I bought of you gave her relief after taking four doses. She has not been troubled since. It is the best medicine she ever took for rheumatism. Respectfully, Zack Davis.

Mr W. T. Cheatham, Jr.:
Dear Sir—I have been afflicted with rheumatism time and again, for the past thirteen years. I have received more relief from Pokine than any medicine I ever took, and therefore take great pleasure in recommending it to all sufferers of rheumatism. Very respectfully, F. G. Mitchell.

January 19, 1891.

W. T. Cheatham, Jr.:
Dear Sir—I desire to say that in January last I was down with rheumatism; my suffering was great, and I was completely prostrated. One bottle of your Pokine completely relieved me, and I have not had any rheumatism since. My son also was relieved of rheumatism by Pokine.

Yours truly, Charles G. Hurroughs.

Henderson, N. C., Sept. 16, '91.

Mr. W. T. Cheatham, Jr.:
Your rheumatic cure, Pokine, has completely cured me. I. M. Green.

Mr. W. T. Cheatham, Jr., Henderson, N. C.:
Dear Sir—Being asked my opinion of your rheumatic remedy, Pokine, will gladly state I deem it the only medicine of its kind on the market that will accomplish that which is exclusively claimed for it. Being a sufferer of rheumatism, I consequently tried many remedies, until finally relieved by Pokine. Very respectfully, J. A. Kelly.

Letter from China.

Dear Bro. Bailey:—Perhaps there is less need of our writing you now, as, for the first time in many years, you have a man in the State from this mission. An American mail has just arrived—not distributed yet. By this mail we hope to hear from Bro. Herring and family as having arrived at the homes of their friends in North Carolina. Some who desire to know more of the Chinese and of our work may hear them. From indications we had before they left, we think it likely that you may hear more about some of the "next cities" than about ours.

I confess that I have strong sympathy with the desire to go into some of the "next cities," but it is not because of scarcity of work in the cities already entered. We want to increase this work and at the same time have a hand in giving the gospel to to some who make up the millions in the interior of this great empire.

If Bro. Herring goes to the interior I know the Shanghai mission will sustain a severe loss, but the field is the world. I believe Bro. Herring was called to Shanghai. Now I believe he is called on further. I have prayed that inland work might be begun by the Southern Baptists. I did not start with the thought that my right hand man and fellow worker might be the one called to begin the undertaking, but if this is the Lord's will, let it be done, and let all the people say amen.

A new party of missionaries passed through Shanghai last week for West China. They were from the Evangelical Foreign Missionary Society, New York. In the party there were four Baptists. The leader of the party was a Baptist from Dr. Gorden's church, Boston, I understand. I don't know the circumstances, but it seems a little strange that other people should be called upon to send our brethren to the foreign field. If we work together wisely I don't see why the Baptists might not send every man called from among their ranks.

One thought about the thousand men for China. We asked the Lord for these men, and it seemed as if the Lord heard before we called. For a while they came thick and fast. Then the "heathen raged," and the question, Is it prudent to go to China now? was raised. In our perplexity we went to the Lord. The hinderances were checked. I think we learned this lesson: we must have the strength of the Lord, for he is tens of thousands. There are many in this city and like places who see the light, but love darkness. There is much prayer that God's spirit may come in great quickening power upon these who love darkness, and upon us who proclaim the truth to them. Join us in this prayer.

Don't understand me to say that we are in any less need of laborers. We want missionaries for Shanghai and Soochow early this fall, and we expect to see them.

Yours fraternally,
E. F. TATUM.

That Speech.

Your correspondent, Mr. J. C. Caddell, some weeks ago gave an account of his visit to Mars Hill, and made many kind remarks about the work at this place. I suppose his modesty would not allow him to speak of another feature of his visit, but I propose to see that justice is done.

Having been acquainted with Bro. Caddell in my College days, I know something of his powers as a speaker. He was, therefore, pressed into service to deliver an address on education. A good crowd gathered on Sunday night to hear him. The effort was almost wholly extempore, but one would never have judged it to be so unless he had been told. The speaker said what most fitted time and place, and was heard with unabated interested interest from beginning to end.

We should be glad to have such a representative of the RECORDER among us again.
THOS. M. HUFHAM.

On Sunday, May 15, the Romanists of Brooklyn dedicated one of their newest church edifices, St. Augustine's. The new bishop paid this doubtful compliments to his venerable predecessor:

"His soul," said Mr. McDonell, "may yet linger in the purifying fires of purgatory, and if there, the prayers of his late flock will help his spirit to the heavenly throne of his Maker, where he will never cease to intercede for you."

We are not wholly averse to seeing Romanists erect elegant houses, for we believe Protestantism in some form will yet be entrenched in them. As Westminister Abbey and the old cathedrals of England have been converted from Rome to Protestantism, so the popish cathedrals of the United States will yet ring with Luther's hymn, and a pure gospel will be preached in their pulpits. It is more than likely that the child is already born who will be some Dwight Moody conducting revival services in this St. Augustine's church.—Christian Inquirer.

Three Good Business Rules.

Never sign a paper without reading it, and if, after reading it, you do not understand it, have it thoroughly explained before you put your signature to it, says an exchange. It is best to get some third person who is not interested in the matter at all to explain the meaning of what is not clear, or to point out words that may have two meanings in the document.

Always make a memorandum in your little book of any contract you undertake for money, or any agreement to work. It saves much trouble to keep a memorandum-book, and put down the dates when you either pay or receive money. Whenever money passes on account, set it down. If any money or thing of value goes through your hands, give a receipt for it and make a memorandum. Your receipt settles the amount that passes, and that can not be disputed. When you pass it to a third party, get a receipt and keep it. This form is as important in the transfer of income, trust money or valuables among your own family as with other persons.

Never allow any person to do any service for you without first agreeing upon the cost to you. This rule strictly adhered to will save you many annoyances.—Dry Goods Chronicle.

Baptists have no sympathy with the Episcopalian idea of ordination. To them the claim of some nameless grace, derived from the apostles through a succession of Roman Catholic priests, many of whom were ordained when they were mere boys, and others of whom were the most wicked of men, seems the most arrogant humbug. We are fortunately free from this superstition. Yet the word succession or successor is often properly used among us in its more common signification, and is possibly sometimes misunderstood for the Episcopalian idea of succession, by which is meant an unbroken chain of ordinations. The Baptist churches of to day are the successors of the apostolic churches in the sense that they hold the same beliefs, have the same objects, and fill the same place in the world. The ministers of to-day are successors of the preachers and teachers of the days of the apostles, in the sense that they are preaching the same gospel and carrying on the same work. But when we call them successors, we do not mean that they are connected by a chain of laying on of hands, or by any mystical thread. Even if it could be proved that there nas been an unbroken chain of Baptist churches from the apostles down, it would not affect the Baptists of to day, one way or another. Our commission is from the Lord himself, and the New Testament is the justification for our existence. We regard it as particularly fortunate that none of the early Methodists were ordained by the Bishops of the Church of England. Had John Wesley been a Bishop, the Methodists might have been tempted to claim some mystical power through the Romish priests and the corruption of the middle ages, which would have greatly weakened their hold on the people and interfered with their success. The less we have to do with superstition the better.—Journal and Messenger.

HAWTHORN, FLA., June 23rd, 1890.
Rev. H. H. HOUSTON, Nashville, Tenn.

Dear Brother:—Yours of June 30th received. I have had almost two years' experience with the Electropoise, and must say that it far surpasses even skillful medication; and I have treated more than two hundred cases of various diseases with marked success. I have broken chills and fever of several weeks' duration, in from one to three nights. It is impossible to have chills while using the Electropoise properly. I have treated more than fifteen cases, the majority being typhoid-malaria, curing them in from two hours to four days. Diarrhœa, dysentery, and cholera morbus I have cured in from one hour to eight generally. Rheumatism in from three hours to three days, in one case making the patient throw away his crutches and straighten his deformed limbs.

It is beyond doubt the greatest remedy God has permitted us to know. The instruments are placed all around me and I am treating people day and night. It is giving me influence here as nothing else can. My confidence in the treatment is almost unbounded; it cures promptly and permanently. The certificates of cure could be made stronger than are given in the circulars.

By all means put the instruments in the hands of our missionaries that they may go forth like our Saviour, preaching and healing the sick. Your fraternally,
C. N. MORROW.

Rev. Sam Jones says: "My wife and daughter were cured of headache and catarrh by Germetuer."

In the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal church at Omaha, last week there was a serious consideration of abolishing the five-year limit to the pastorate—among Southern Methodists it is four years. It was claimed, and justly, we think, that if a pastor is doing good work at a place there is no reason in removing him arbitrarily at the end of that period to make room for a new man. It was claimed also that the five-year limit creates the presumption that the pastor will remain for that length of time, whereas his work is done and he ought to leave before. This is getting near Baptist ground, though there is still a chasm which separates us. The question comes: Who is to determine when the pastor's work is done? The Methodists who say the bishop. We should say the pastor himself and the church.—Baptist and Reflector.

Synopsis of Address Delivered by Dr. F. M. Ellis Before the Womans' Missionary Union, Atlanta, May 9th.

It affords me more than usual pleasure to appear this morning in the interest of the work with which you are interested. I speak of a crisis in the Centennial movement. We are engaged in attempts to awake enthusiasm, it's but the stepping stone; to arouse enthusiasm is one thing, to utilize it is another thing.

The Baptists of the world have undertaken to raise as a thank offering this Centennial year in addition to their regular contributions, these amounts:

We stand to day with pledges of $350,000 to memoralize the Centennial movement. England has committed herself to one-half million dollars, so it may it be safely assumed they will raise that in addition to their annual amount. Canada one fourth million. Northern brethren have pledged themselves for one million. We stand committed for $250,000 and 100 additional missionaries. A corresponding increase to the home field in all $400,000. These sums aggregate $1,900,000. This is a tremendous sum for people who have never raised $1,000,000. Can this be done? There is something startling about it, but when we know that fifty cents from every Baptist would do it, it does not seem so startling. Now, reducing and limiting it to our own Southern Baptists, can this be done. I am going to be practical.

I am satisfied that the base of this pyramid is the broad basis of conviction. When we reflect that this sum requires but thirty-two cents from every member, it does not seem impossible. No Baptist but what can do this. It can be secured by self-denial. If the North can raise its sum, which is $1.25 for each, can we not raise our sum? We have as much money in the South as they have in the North. If brethren in the North can do this as they think they can, can not we? We can if we will. What we can do, we should do. The standard which God sets before us is, that we should do what we could. God passed this encomium upon her. She hath done what she could. We never accomplish anything for God according to our ability, but he says the same of us. Now, will we do it? If we can and ought, will we? Suppose we accomplish this work, what will be the result? Wonderful advancement, most beautiful display of love and affection. It will be worth all sacrifices, all self-denial. The question is a personal one of individual responsibility. If every woman will do two things, do her own personal best and get others to do their best. In every thirteen members of the Moravian church there is a missionary. You see its not a question of ability but willingness.

This Centennial year furnishes the most magnificent occasion since Pentecost. Now we are preparing for the reception of our King. We are waiting for the bridegroom to return to claim his bride; we want a part in it; we want more self denial than ever before.

We are in the nearer approach of the bridgroom than we ever dreamed. What will you want with possessions when Jesus comes? Now, if consecration shall require of you sacrifice, its the hastening of the coming of Christ. This is the conception of this movement; it lifts me out of myself, yet this is the great impulse. To place ourselves where we ought to be is another point in the movement. When the Holy Ghost begot the idea in Cary, he secured his society of six, and with this little handful around him, just half the number of the Apostles, this truth took hold of this man in Kettering and he started out.

No sooner had they stepped forth than God's blessing came down. Ought we not now step forward and take the front place in this movement. To glorify our denomination? No, no, what is this leadership, what is the reason for this. I think we, as Baptists, come nearer to teaching the whole truth. I wish the day would come when we would preach the whole truth. If we reach that point of consecration of preaching the whole truth, God will honor us. If this Centennial movement fails, what then? I believe the Holy Ghost has been with us. We have placed ourselves in such a position that retreat is impossible. We are willing to confess it may have been enthusiasm. We can not pass such a resolution and fail to keep it.

We must not retreat, we must meet it. A crisis is now upon us. Shall we meet it, having promised as leaders. If success is attained, it won't be done by passing resolutions at big conventions. What is necessary, personal work, prayer. We must get on our faces; we must pray as never before. You christian women must not minimize your forces, it must be prayed for. It must be constantly planned for. These plans must be taken before God. Take them to him. You must be sure you have a message from him. A sacrifice must be made. I thank God for the providence he has placed upon us. I believe the success depends upon you. You are here before God, before Christ to know his will. Its the mightiest undertaking you ever assumed. The Holy Ghost has put it upon you, go forward.

You have as much or more power over the church than ministers. You mould the church. I am not eulogizing woman, God forbid. I would as soon think of complimenting the Apostle Paul. You have long desired to do something, now the opportunity has come. God has invested you with gifts—womanhood, wifehood, motherhood,—these are the elements, and by organization you have them united.

Sentiment is an excellent thing. Your work wants more than that if it amounts to anything. A poor organization if pushed, accomplishes more than the best one if allowed to run itself.

Now for the aim: The Chapel card is so simple, we think we see all there is in it at one glance. But the longer you look at it, the more you see in it. This simple conception of this card has in it all the elements to move the world—the aim. We number 1,800,000 as constituents of card plan. You will use for the definite aim, one brick for one child, three for every woman. Its a possible thing for these women to lay upon the altar an offering of $250,000; if its our enterprise it will fail, if its his it will go. I have seen in my church an illustration; we can do good things, we can do large things there. In a little way the most magnificent collection was taken two weeks ago. There was a company of mothers, poor washer-women (most of them,) and I gave out certificates for $88.96. You can touch the poorest people in the land for Christ.

I am aware I am not talking to poor washer-women; I am talking to capitalist's wives, to minister's wives, and to wives of influential men.

The reflex influence will be more than on heathen women yonder. Its the most practical realization of living for Christ. You don't know, perhaps, what it is to daily walk with Jesus. A mother will take her boy and leave him with Jesus, as she left her sins. I believe its in the power of these women to say, 'I'll wear the poorest garment for Jesus, and these cards will come back filled by christian women.' There are women who can lay upon this altar to God a thousand dollars. Remember that $5 to some women will be more than $1,000 to others. My front door key is but a small rivet of steel, yet it unlocks a large door and lets me in to my house. The key to the treasury is a small rivet of steel, yet it unlocks the door to millions. So this chapel card is a little thing, but you can fit it into the wards of the lock of God's grace and turn back the bolts to untold treasuries.

A Mission Board was in debt for $60,000, and women were called upon to save it; their money was freely given, but the woman who took the collection, had blazing from her throat and sparkling in her ears and on her white fingers, $40,000 worth of diamonds. May he lead and keep you for Christ's sake.—Baptist Basket.

Rev. A. W. Price.

Abraham William Price was born at Conway, S. C., Jan. 28th, 1858. When quite young he made a profession of religion, and with his conversion came his call to the ministry. He felt the need of preparation for the work and determined to begin at once the prosecution of his studies. In this, however, he was destined to be disappointed; for when he was fourteen years of age, his father died and left a widow and three children, of whom the subject of this sketch was the eldest.

Although he was a delicate, fragile youth, the support of the family devolved upon him. He bore this heavy and unexpected burden without a murmur until he was eighteen, at which time his mother died, and the other children were able to take care of themselves.

When about nineteen years of age, he entered Ashpole Institute, then under the control of Rev. Stinceon Ivey. He attended this institution for perhaps two years, after which he went to Wake Forest. He hadn't been at Wake Forest many months when his health gave way, and all his friends, even his physician, thought that he could not recover. After weeks of great suffering he was partially restored; but his physician told him it would not do for him to resume his studies. With an aching heart he was forced to give up the long cherished hope of a full course at Wake Forest.

After resting for sometime, he regained about his usual health, and determined to go at least a year to the Seminary. Here again he was doomed to disappointment. When the session was a little more than half spent, his health gave way, and once more that precious life trembled in the balance. When he was able to travel, he came home, and in October, 1882, took the pastoral care of Antioch church in Marion county, S. C. From Antioch he moved to Mullens, and became pastor of a group of churches with Mullens as a centre. From Mullens he removed to Whiteville, N. C., of which church, in connection with some others, he was pastor for four years. From Whiteville he was called to a field comprising Laurinburg, Spring Hill and Alma churches. He came to this field and settled in Laurinburg, N. C., in November, 1887. He was called to Wadesboro and removed to that place in August, 1891. From Wadesboro on the 27th of May last, he was called to heaven.

In the death of Bro. Price, the denomination has lost one of its strongest men.

Though he was a young man when he died, he had developed into a preacher of marked ability. His mind was intensely analytical, and his powers of discrimination exceptionally fine, enabling him to draw the finest distinctions. His sermons were homiletical gems, and bristled with fresh and original thoughts.

We have few preachers who are as gifted in the use of English as was Price. He was never at a loss for a word, and it was always just the right word.

He was modest and unassuming in his bearing, and hence would not make so good an impression on strangers as some men of less modesty and less ability. To be appreciated, it was necessary that he be known, and when best known he was most appreciated.

The life of A. W. Price should be an inspiration to young ministers in many ways. In the first place, it should encourage those whose circumstances and surroundings absolutely prohibit them from thoroughly preparing themselves for their work. Now I do not mean that his example should cause young brethren to be indifferent about their preparation. On the contrary, it should stimulate to greater endeavors in this respect; for there was never a more earnest advocate of ministerial education than he. Twice he hazarded his life in seeking that preparation of which he so much felt the need, and only gave it up at last when forced to do so by physical weakness.

To a man who is prevented by circumstances beyond his control, from taking a regular course at a literary institution, the example of Bro. Price is encouraging; for though his college course was cut short by failing health, he didn't give up the work of preparation, but prosecuted his studies in connection with his pastoral duties. In this way he attained to quite a considerable degree of scholarship.

Again, his example should help us to surmount difficulties. Much of his best work was done while suffering physical agony. I remember to have heard him say on one occasion, that he had never spent one single day free from suffering. And yet, although he was such a sufferer, there is no man in North Carolina, perhaps, who has done ten years of harder or more effective mental labor. But now his sufferings are all over, and he has entered upon the "rest that remaineth for the people of God."

LIVINGSTON JOHNSON.

REV. T. P. LIDE ON THE DEATH OF BRO. PRICE.

Editor of Biblical Recorder:—My heart was deeply saddened when I saw the announcement to-day in your columns that Rev. Abram William Price was dead. He was born in Conwayboro, S. C., where he lived for several years, moving from there in early boyhood to Marion county in the same State, where he grew up to manhood. He was a bright, intelligent boy, and much devoted to his widowed mother. He worked as a farm hand for several years, and in every employment was faithful and had the entire confidence of his employers. He lived with me first as hired boy, and afterwards more in the capacity of a pupil and as a member of my family. It was my privilege to bury his mother, and to baptize himself, his sisters and his brother. I also baptised his wife, preached his ordination sermon, and married him. He was married to Miss Pauline Watson of Marion county, S. C., who still survives him. His constitution was frail. He was never robust in body or uniform in health. A stroke of lightning when quite a young lad, seemed to have impaired his health, and his course, at Wake Forest College and the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, was cut short by extreme illness. He had the measles three times, the last time very seriously. He suffered intensely from an attack of acute dyspepsia, and through much weakness did his Master's work. When his father in law died, in coming to his funeral during an intensely cold spell of weather, his two little children contracted pneumonia and died. He has had to pass through deep waters.

He served very acceptably as pastor some churches in Marion county, S. C., from whence he removed to Fair Bluff and Whiteville, N. C. From Whiteville he moved to Laurinburg, where he served as pastor. From Laurinburg he moved to Wadesboro, where he had but fairly begun his work when God took him. In every pastorate he was faithful and greatly blessed in building up the cause. The churches he served in Marion county, S. C., and in Columbus and Robeson counties of North Carolina, will long feel his impress for good.

His mind was bright, vigorous and grasping. He was a fine sermonizer and a good preacher. He was a workman that needed not to be ashamed. His character was beautiful. Deep, earnest piety made him lovely in life and mourned in death.

My spiritual son in the gospel, farewell! Many hearts will long be saddened because you have been taken from this earth, and heaven will be nearer and brighter because you are there. T. P. LIDE.

TRIBUTE OF RESPECT BY WADESBORO CHURCH.

WHEREAS, It hath pleased Almighty God to call to his reward, Rev. A. W. Price, the Wadesboro Baptist church, of which he was the beloved pastor, offers this tribute of respect:

Abraham William Price died on Friday morning, May 27th, at 2 o'clock. About eight weeks before his death, he was suddenly stricken with meningitis. When first attacked, his life was despaired of, and sorrowing friends gathered around his bedside, thinking that every hour the end would come. Before many days had passed, there was a change for the better, and hopes were entertained of his recovery. These hopes, however, were destined to be shattered; for soon there came a relapse, which, if possible, was more severe than the first attack, and after two weeks of anxious watching, the end came. The "last great monster," which most men regard with terror, was to him a "welcome messenger." Several times during his last illness he prayed that he might "depart and be with Christ." Of him it may be truly said as of God's servants of old, "he fell on sleep." He died as peacefully as a little child falls to sleep in its mother's arms. He "leaned his head on the Saviour's breast and breathed his life out sweetly there."

Though his stay among us was so short (having been here about ten months), he had won his way into the hearts of all our people. His delicately refined nature, his cultured manners, his gentlemanly bearing, his tender regard for the feelings of others, his easy and graceful style of conversation, made him the central figure in whatever company he was thrown. As every good citizen should do, he took a lively interest in whatever was for the well-being of his community. A young man himself, he was the special friend of young men, and eagerly seized upon every opportunity by word, by example and by personal contact, to inspire them with exalted aims and pure aspirations. Nor yet was he unmindful of the old; but many a ray of sunshine did he bring into the lives of those over whom the shadows of evening were lengthening. All—young and old, rich and poor—found in him a friend. As a preacher, we do not think it exaggeration to say he had few equals in the State. He was practical and pungent, fresh and vigorous, and at times surpassingly eloquent. He was a man of unusual modesty. A less modest man with his ability would have occupied much more prominent positions. But despite his modesty, he was rapidly coming to the front and his ability was being recognized throughout the State.

Wishing to give some expression to the high regard and esteem in which we held him, therefore Resolved 1. That in the death of Brother Price, Wadesboro has lost one of its most useful citizens; our church an able, earnest, faithful and efficient pastor, and our denomination one of its strongest preachers.

Resolved 2. That while this is a mysterious providence, past our finding out, yet, with crushed hearts, we bow to receive the stroke, knowing that he who sends it "doeth all things well."

Resolved 3. That we tender to the sorrowing widow and darling little child our sympathies and prayers, and commend them to the love and care of that one who has promised to be a Father of the fatherless and a Judge of the widows.

Resolved 4. That a copy of these resolutions be spread upon our minutes, and a copy sent to the BIBLICAL RECORDER, Wadesboro Messenger and Intelligencer, and the Baptist Courier, with requests that they publish the same.

The Ladies' Home Journal for July will contain the literary debut of Bret Harte's young daughter, Miss Jessamy Harte. She will give a most entertaining description of "Camp Life in the Adirondacks," in which it is claimed every evidence shows itself of inherited literary tendencies not unlike those evidenced in Bret Harte's earlier work. Miss Harte is a girl still in her teens, and has artistic as well as literary proclivities, as one of the illustrations accompanying her first article shows.

The Examiner on Dr. Kerfoot.

The Examiner of New York has the following comment on Dr. F. H. Kerfoot's address before the Education Society:

The other address was by Professor F. H. Kerfoot, D. D., of Louisville. He spoke on the work of the society from the Southern point of view. His speech was a bucket of cold water. A bucket? That does it injustice—a barrel, a hogshead, a river! Dr. Kerfoot is personally that genial kind of man called by everybody "a good fellow." We all love him, we of the North no less than those of the South, but the mildest thing that can be said of his address is that he made the mistake of his life in writing and reading it. He represented the attitude of the South towards the society as one of doubt, of suspicion, of fear. They are awfully scared, these good Southern brethren, lest the society shall do something—they don't know what—that will interfere with Baptist liberty and orthodoxy. One would naturally have inferred from his remarks that Northern benefactors, through the society, have been cramming money down the throats of unwilling Southern people. Now there is an impression in these parts that Southern institutions have take gratefully, not to say eagerly, all that they have received, and would have taken a good deal more in the same way had the society been able to give it. The impression to be gathered from Dr. Kerfoot's address was that if the society will behave itself properly, the South will condesend to accept as much more money as it will give. One cannot believe that the South is so narrow, so suspicious, so hostile to those who would be its benefactors, as this address represented it. If it is, it must expect to see its educational institutions continue to languish, and to be outstripped by those that display a more liberal and trustful spirit.

The towns of Titusville and Oil City, in the Oil Creek Valley of Western Pennsylvania, were visited by a terrible disaster somewhat similar to the Johnstown horror, on the 5th inst. A large dam situated at Spartanburg, seven miles from Titusville, broke, and the waters soon flooded Titusville, causing heavy loss of life and damage to property. A large oil refinery exploded, and the burning oil added to the horror of the scene. At Oil City, eighteen miles from Titusville, a similar horror occurred.

MT. AIRY
White Sulphur Spring.

This celebrated summer resort will open June 15th. The hotel has been thoroughly renovated, new furniture placed in every room in the building. The Spring is at the foot of the Blue Ridge Mountains. In front is a beautiful park of meadow land covered with grass and flowers, and through it is beautifully valley flows the Ararat River. Up this lovely valley blows from the mountain tops a grateful breeze, which makes cover on the beds necessary during the warmest summer nights.

The property has recently been purchased by a stock company with an abundance of capital. No pains or expense will be spared which can add to the comfort and pleasure of those who come to spend the summer in the most beautiful mountain region to be found in the world.

Guests will be met at Mt. Airy, the terminus of the C. F. & Y. V. R. R., and conveyed to the Spring without any stop over at the hotel.

Special rates furnished by all railroads to persons coming to the Spring. Board, $30.00 per month. Children under 12 years, and servants, at half rates. Address
JORDAN & BROWN, Props.

In a private letter from Dr. L. G. Broughton appears the following: "After spending three weeks at the Mt. Airy White Sulphur Spring I was convinced of the untold value of the water, especially in the treatment of dyspeptic conditions of the lower bowels and in cronic liver and kidney troubles."

Letter from the S. B. T. Seminary.

Since I have been at the Seminary, the RECORDER is a more welcome visitor, that I may keep up with the spirit of the work at home.

The most successful session in the history of the Seminaary closed last night. We have had during the year 236 students; thirty-three of this number graduated with either the English eclectic or full degrees. Our closing exercises were pleasant and encouraging. The prospects for an increased number of students next session are hopeful, and with the rapid progress in the erection of the new building, it is expected that it will be ready for use next session.

I hope every young minister in our State, who has finished his studies at Wake Forest or other schools, will make special efforts to come to the Seminary next October. Dr. Broadus, who is acknowledged chief among New Testament instructors, can not last always, and those who expect to get the benefit of his instruction should come without delay. I want the future ministry of North Carolina, as well as that of the present and past, to stand on par with that of any other State. To do this, we must avail ourselves of equal advantages.

The spirit of the age demands, as never before, a thoroughly equipped and strong ministry. The Seminary puts a man in possession of the best means and methods of accomplishing this without spending half of his life in learning what are the best things to study and what not to study, and the best methods to accomplish the greatest possible work.

Much time and talent are lost by not knowing that the same work may be done otherwise. Will our young ministers not deny themselves of flattering advantages, and overcome disadvantages, to spend at least some time at the Seminary before entering permanently upon the work of life?

On account of having some outside work in connection with my Seminary work, I shall spend the vacation in Kentucky.

With best wishes for every interest for the Master's cause in North Carolina, I am,

Yours fraternally,

C. J. THOMPSON.

Letter from Rev. A. W. Crabtree.

Dear Recorder:—I moved the middle of April to this place (Hornet), twelve miles southeast of Charlotte, near Wilson's Grove and Arlington churches, where Rev. J. E. King preached last year and did everything in his power to gain both churches over to the Second Adventists, but the brethren kicked against it and threw the gentleman out. Some of the members were in favor of King. I think I can gain back most of them. We had to turn out one woman for following him.

Everything is moving on smoothly. I baptized three into the fellowship of Wilson's Grove since I have been here, and received five at Arlington by letter.

I also desire to say that the good brethren and sisters have not been thoughtless of their pastor. They have "pounded" me from the time I got here until now. I can not tell the good things they have given me. They are noble people in every way. I wish all our churches would remember their pastors thus.

May the Lord bless our churches. I love my churches and work because my churches love me and help me to work for souls.

Pray for us that we as churches and pastor may overcome all the seeds of heresy before it takes root in the hearts of the people.

A. W. CRABTREE.

Hornet, June 4, 1893.

To the Ministers of the Raleigh Association.

After correspondence with ministers in the various sections of our Association, I am advised to announce a postponement of the mission canvass agreed upon at the conference held in April last, until the month of September.

A conference of the ministers of our Association is called to meet in the Mission Rooms in Raleigh, on Wednesday after the fourth Sunday, June 29th, at 2 p. m., to definitely fix the time and schedule of meetings for the mission canvass of our Association.

N. B. BROUGHTON,
Secretary of Conference.

Mr. A. M. Carroll, son of Dr. J. L. Carroll of Chapel Hill, has been appointed a Fellow in Greek for the year '92 and '93 in the Johns Hopkins University of Baltimore. We note with pleasure this preferment of a North Carolina boy.

A Wonderful Instrument.

Curative results, starting in their seeming impossibility, have marked the history of the Electropoise since its introduction to the public, as a method of treatment for all disease.

For years the public prints have been full of advertisements, detailing the value of nostrums without merit, in which medical charlatans have endeavored to interest the public. In the face of the prejudices which have been aroused by these impostors, the unqualified statement, that, the Electropoise is for the cure of all diseases, needs, and has, evidence in its support, some of which is subjoined.

The Electropoise, it should be remembered, is merely a factor in its system of cure—a medium for the transmission of the treatment by Electrolibration, which in its method of application can only be defined by the broadest terms of universality.

The absorption into the system of hydrogen and other positive gases—malaria—contained in the atmosphere, causes the physical disturbances known as disease. To cure, the electric poise of the system must be restored by the absorption of the negative gases. With the Electropoise we so fix the electrical condition of the body that oxygen—the vitalizer—the most negative substance in the world, is absorbed.

The accumulation of morbid matter, causing the disturbance, is combustible, and when brought into contact with the requisite supply of oxygen, combustion follows in the tissues of the body, so generating vital force, and enabling every organ to properly perform its normal functions.

The blood passes through the lungs to have the impurities which it has gathered up in the course of its circulation through the body, burned out by the oxygen which we inhale with the breath. The Electropoise causes this combustion to take place in the capillaries, by the oxygen absorbed at every pore, so that the blood returns to the lungs with this work more than half done, thus eradicating the cause, and in consequence effecting the cure of disease.

To these facts, (we no longer say theory, for a theory proven is a fact) we invite the attention of all who are interested in getting well, and staying well.

Do not believe what we say, or accept our statements; read this: "Unless about ten thousand men, mainly professional men, lawyers, doctors, editors, preachers and all classes, including the writer, are very much mistaken, the Electropoise effects cures, and gives relief, where all other known remedies have failed. Especially is it efficacious in the case of delicate women and feeble children. I have used one of the Standard Electropoises for the past two years and find it invaluable as a curative agent." Letter from Rev. Zephaniah Meek, D. D., editor of the Central Methodist, Catlettsburg, Ky.

Below we publish some of the testimonials supporting the claims made for the Electropoise, and invite your investigation.

We have successfully treated thousands of patients and have testimonials covering the cure of nearly every form of disease; many of these we have permission to use and will be glad to mail them to interesting parties.

We especially invite correspondence from those who have been treated in vain; who have found no relief in change of scene and climate; who have been pronounced incurable; who are desperate, for it is in chronic cases of this description that the Electropoise is most successful.

Remember the Electropoise is not subject to error of diagnosis, ignorance or carelessness of administration. It enlists nature at once in the cause of the suffering, and draws its remedial agency from the great storehouse of vitality, which heretofore undiscovered or unapplied, now opens a rosy pathway to the suffering through the desert of disease to the ever beautiful oasis of good health, perfect womanhood and robust manhood.

In regard to convenience and economy the Electropoise stands without a peer in any method of treatment. It is easily applied, and treatment can be taken at home either night or day as the patient may elect.

In its use there are no doctors bills to pay, no druggests account to settle, no expensive appliances to be bought. It is ready at all times for immediate use, and we have testimonials from patients who have owned instruments for an extended time, and in whose families diseases, differing widely in their character, have appeared in the interim, who state that they have all been so successfully treated and cured by the Electropoise, that they have not purchased an ounce of medicine since they have had the instrument.

In the introduction of this treatment founded upon discoveries far in advance of all the "theories" of the past, we invite the most searching investigation by an intelligent and discrimnating public. Write us for further information and testimonials, your correspondence will be held strictly confidential and our advice will cost nothing.

Respectfully,
ATLANTIC ELECTROPOISE CO.,

BURLINGTON, N. C., July 9, 1891.

I have been suffering with pulmonary consumption for more than three years, unable to perform any manual labor, and was finally closely confined to my bed, without hope of recovery. Commenced using the Electropoise last March, and I am now able to walk around any where I wish. It has proved a wonderful success in my case. To those who are suffering I say try it.

THOMAS BOSWELL, Glencoe Cotton Mills.

WILLIAMSTON, N. C., March 7, 1892.

I have found more relief, in Bright's Disease, from a few months' use of the Electropoise than from all patent medicines, physicians' prescriptions, mineral waters, "faith-healing," sea voyages and a winter residence in a warmer climate.

Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir:—I have been using one of your Electropoises for four years, upon a little invalid son, who has been afflicted with a pulmonary trouble and a dropsical tendency. I have found great relief for him in the use of the Electropoise, when the doctors have failed to give him any permanent relief, and I am satisfied that but for its use we should have lost him.

I have never seen it fail to reduce his fever, or to bring sound sweet sleep. I would not be without it for many times its cost.

Yours truly, J. C. BUXTON.

Mr. Buxton is also President of First National Bank, Winston, N. C., and is one of the foremost men of the South.

WILMINGTON, N. C.

JOHN N. WEBB, Esq., Washington, D. C.

My Dear Sir:—For the benefit of those who suffer from Nervous Debility I would say that in my opinion no medicine will give the permanent relief to be obtained from the use of the Electropoise. I have had one in my family for nearly a year, and do not hesitate to say it is invaluable to us.

In my own case of Nervous Dyspepsia which was attended with all the horrors incident to the disease in its worst form, I found it gave me relief when everything else failed, and I feel confident its use laid foundations for the good health I now enjoy after three years of suffering such as few men could stand. Very truly yours,

W. R. FRENCH.

DIED.

SORRELL—Died, at Flint, Wake county, Saturday night, June 4th, at 12 o'clock, Mrs. Elizabeth Sorrell, aged sixty-three years, relict of the late Jacob Sorrell. The funeral and burial took place Monday at 2 p. m. at the family burying ground, and was attended by a large concourse of relatives and friends to show their love and respect for this most estimable lady, whom they will miss so much.

BURKE—Miss Sallie E. Burke, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. R. M. Burke of Franklinville, N. C., died May 16th, 1892, aged twenty-eight years. For six years she was a professor; was a good girl, and loved by all. Father, mother, four brothers and four sisters are bereft. May the Lord sanctify this bereavement to the good of the bereaved.

G. L. MERRELL.

WILLIAMS—Miss Emma P. Williams, daughter of Bro. Noah Williams and wife, fell asleep in Jesus on May 26th, 1892, having a few months before completed her twentieth year. About eight years ago she professed faith in Christ and united with Cool Spring Baptist church, Gates county, of which she continued a faithful member till called away by death.

She loved the church, the missionary society, and the Sunday-school—indeed she took great delight in attending all kinds of religious services. She was a loving, obedient daughter, kind and gentle in disposition, and very helpful to her mother in watching over and in working for the other children. How sorely her absence will be felt by those who best knew her real worth. Her death was a very happy one. She seemed to have had some premonition before taken down sick that she would not live long. Though naturally desiring to live, when the end came on she met it without fear or dread.

She expressed a wish for her pastor. Her mother said, "Do you want him to come and pray for you?" "No," she said, "I want to hear him talk some like I have so often heard him talk." She sang and prayed, and then her spirit left its tenement of clay and went to dwell with Jesus.

"She sleeps in the grave, and how sweet are her slumbers,
Away from life's conflicts, temptations and woes;
No fettering clay her freed spirit encumbers,
O blessed are they who in Jesus repose."

Tributes of Respect.

WHEREAS, It has pleased Almighty God in his kind providence to remove from our midst on May 7th, 1892, sister Mollie Ellis Patterson, one of our purest and most beloved sisters; therefore be it

Resolved 1. That while we, the Woman's Missionary Society of the Youngsville Baptist church, mourn the loss of our dear sister in the church and Society, also the examples of purity and candor which she exhibited in her daily life, yet we bow in humble submission to the will of him who "doeth all things well," for we have the sweet assurance that all is well with her.

Resolved 2. That we mingle our tears with the heart-broken husband and grief-stricken relatives, and commit them to the tender love and mercy of our Heavenly Father. We earnestly pray that they may imitate the example of her whose life was full of love and sunshine, and whose "sun sank to rest in a cloudless sky."

Resolved 3. That a copy of these resolutions be tendered to the bereaved husband, and also sent to the BIBLICAL RECORDER for publication.

The Leaksville Woolen Mills, Leaksville, N. C., need no introduction to the public in North Carolina and adjoining States. This is simply to remind you that they are still "in touch" with the people, working up their wool into various forms of finished product at satisfactory prices. A handsome catalogue containing samples of their new and attractive styles of Fancy Cassimeres and All-Wool Flannels, together with all other goods made by them, is sent to any address on application. Besides an interesting article on "Wool and How to Handle It," the catalogue contains full particulars in regard to shipping wool. If these details are carefully followed, we guarantee prompt return of goods.
Write to Hiram Foard, Sec'y, Leaksville, N. C., for catalogue, before disposing of your wool.

The Faithfulness of God

"For he hath said, I will never leave thee nor forsake thee." Heb. viii: 5.

Great God of love, through all my various days,
Whate'er befall, I pray remember me;
That light from heaven may shine on all my ways,
And guide me on the path that leads to thee.

Should dark or lonely be my onward road,
Do thou with peace my aching bosom fill;
O keep me ever near thee, gracious God,
That I may feel thy presence, and be still.

I cannot fear, if thou art ever nigh
To bear each burden, and each anxious care,
To hearken to my breathing and my cry,
And all my trials and my sorrows share.

Only, dear Lord, with cords and bands of love
Draw me, and bind me to thy sacred feet;
Raise heart and mind and soul to things above,
Then all thou sendest will to me be sweet.

If life be mine,—why then to thee I live;
If death should come,—why then to thee I die;
Whate're it be, I hail what thou dost give,
Though shines the sun, or clouds obscure the sky.

—Canon Bell, D. D., in Sunday at Home.

The Robin in Church.

It was the night before Christmas, and snow was falling. They did not mind it in happy homes, where lamps were lighted and fires burned cheerily, and tables were spread for tea. But a little robin, cold and hungry, hopped about wearily, seeking shelter and food. Our robins fly away South before snow comes, but this was in a country across the sea, where the robin stays all the year.

The little bird lighted on window-sills and tapped with his beak, but was hardly heard. Once, two little girls looked out of the window and saw him, but it was so cold that they quickly ran to the warm fire, and birdie flew away.

After a while an old man came along in the path that led up to the village church. Robin hopped behind him, and when he opened the door, birdie was close by, and went in without being noticed. Oh how warm and comfortable the church was! The Sunday-school children had been there with their teachers trimming the church with holly and mistletoe, and singing Christmas carols. The fire was to be kept all night, that the church might be warm for the Christmas service. The old man put on fresh coal and went home. Birdie hopped about in the firelight, picking up some crumbs he found on the floor. Some cakes had been given to the children. How welcome this little supper was to the hungry robin you can guess. Then he perched on the railing of the stairs and tucked his head under his wing—a very sleepy and happy bird. In the morning his bright eyes espied, first thing, the scarlet holly berries. There was indeed a royal feast in robin's eyes, enough to last for many weeks of wintry weather.

The hours flew on, and the happy children came, and sang their Christmas carols. Just as the first verse was finished, a clear, rich, joyous song burst from birdie's little throat, high above among the green branches. No one had seen him, and what a sweet surprise it was. The minister raised his hand to keep silence while birdie sang, and then, opening the Bible, read in reverent tones:

"Yea, the sparrow hath found a house, and the swallow a nest for herself, where she may lay her young: Thine altars, O Lord of hosts!"

"This time," said the minister, "our favorite bird, our little Robin Redbreast, has found a lodging and breakfast in the church where we come to pray for our daily bread. Snow is all around, covering the ground and bushes; he was cold and hungry, and might have perished in the storm, but the good All-Father, in his pitying love and tender care, guided the tiny wings hither.

"The little bird praised him in its joyous song. Shall not we, with far greater reason, praise him gladly?"—Mrs. M. O. Johnson, in Our Dumb Animals.

The Proper way to Sit.

A proper sitting position requires that the spine shall be kept straight, and that the support needed for the upper part of the body shall be felt in the right place. Therefore, sit as far back as possible in the chair, so that the lower end of the spine shall be braced against the back of the rest. If this back is straight the shoulders will also rest against it; if not they will have no point of support, and it will be found that they do not need it. This position makes no strain upon the ligaments of the spine. It allows a proper position of the shoulders, consequently of the chest, consequently of the lungs, stomach and every other organ of the body.

Their work is carried on naturally and comfortably, as is also the circulation of the blood, which in a wrong sitting position is seriously interfered with. With the feet resting squarely upon the floor, the hands resting easily upon the lap, perfect equilibrium, and consequently perfect rest of the body, is secured. There is no strain upon any part of the body; no muscle or organ is requested to do more than its legitimate amount of work. The arms should never be folded: for this position not only causes a strain upon the spine, and all other evils already referred to, but, in addition, places the weight of the arms upon the stomach and the diaphragm, thereby increasing the labor of digestion and respiration. Placing the hands behind the back, if possible, is a good attitude to take occasionally, giving, as it does, the fullest expansion to the whole upper part of the body.—Ladies' Home Journal.

A Case of Thoughtlessness.

The other afternoon I got into a car of the Sixth Avenue Elevated road, going up town. At the next station above where I entered the car, a father and mother and a boy about five or six years old got into the same car. A seat was given to the mother, who made room for the boy beside her; after a time the father got a seat, and tried to persuade the boy to come over to him. The boy very irritably refused, and with pouting lips clung closer to his mother. A few stations further on, a seat beside the mother was vacated, and then the father changed his seat to the vacant one beside his wife. Each moved, and the small boy was persuaded to kneel between them and look out of the window. No sooner was he comfortably settled than the father began amusing himself by pulling the boy's ears, pinching his cheeks, shoving his elbows off the window-sill, pulling his feet. At every manifestation of anger the father would throw his head back and laugh. At last he made the boy cry, and his enjoyment reached a climax, as he now kept saying in an audible whisper, "Cry baby! cry baby!"

The poor little fellow was a painful object. He was very thin, had tiny bones, and was evidently worn out nervously, and without doubt his physical condition was due entirely to the thoughtless cruelty of his father, a big, healthy, careless, fun-loving man—I had almost written monster—selfish and dense to every finer emotion. The patient expression on the mother's face, as she mechanically soothed the boy, proved that the experience was too common to even arouse comment in her own mind.

The next morning I picked up the Tribune, and turned at once to a report of the doings at Chautauqua; the proceedings of the Woman's Club were reported, the principal subject being the training of children. "Q. How would you break a child of the habit of teasing?" A. By breaking older people of the habit of teasing the child," were questions and answers that brought vividly to mind the incident of the evening before.

What a future of rasped nerves and false standards of amusements was being established through a father's thoughtlessnes.—Christian Union.

Sick Room Suggestions.

Never stand or sit at the head of the bed, or where the patient will be obliged to turn even his eyes to see you; place yourself where he can look into your face. I have seen people enter a sick room and take their stand out of sight, under the mistaken impression that they would not attract attention; but invalids are peculiarly sensitive to an unseen presence, and they will turn their head, or even try to raise themselves on the pillow, in the effort to ascertain who has come into the room. Keep a small table spread with a white cloth, upon which to lay glasses, spoons and bottles; this should be, if possible, in an adjoining room, or, if that is not feasible, as far as can be from the bed. Always use the same utensils, washing them as soon as possible after using, for if they are carried away, in nine cases out of ten the article that you need will not be on hand when required; and waiting at such times is almost torture. It is well to have a napkin or soft towel always at hand. Ask your physician to write out his directions; do not depend upon your memory. You will find it a great assistance to keep a daily record, both for your own use and for information of the doctor. The following is merely a suggestion: 1 p. m., quinine; 2 p. m., beef tea. If the patient is sleeping quietly when the hour for medicine or nourishment arrives, except in very extreme cases, it is better not to waken him, as few remedies are so valuable as sleep. This, however, is a point for your physician to decide. Follow implicitly the physician's directions.—Good Housekeeping.

Two Kinds of Girls.

There are two kinds of girls. One is the kind that appears best abroad—the girls that are good at parties, rides, visits, etc., and whose chief delight is in all such things; the other is a kind that appears best at home—the girls that are useful and cheerful in the dining room, the sickroom, and all the precincts of home. They differ widely in character. One is frequently a torment at home; the other is a blessing. One is a moth, consuming everything about her; the other is a sunbeam, inspiring life and gladness all along her pathway. Which will you strive to be?

May you make the wise choice while young in years!—The Sunlight.

Nervousness.

Learn to keep still outwardly, even as to hands and tips of the fingers, as to feet and head, and you will find rest and quiet coming to the mind as a result. Sit when you sit and stand still when you must stand. No one can tell how much of the beautiful serenity of the Quakers comes from the outward stillness and quiet of their worship. Do not allow yourself to move nervously fast, and the more nervous you are, the more deliberate all motions should be. When the scissors slip to the floor, the knot you were sure you had made at the end of your basting thread is not there, the button-hole-twist kinks, knots, and, taking on a life of its own, becomes a self-flinging lasso in pursuit of any game, and the needle going through perilously hard, finally snaps into three pieces—in short, when, to use Gail Hamilton's felicitous phrase, the "total depravity of inanimate things" is manifestly in the ascendant, that is the time for delay and dallying. When you are waiting for a train, don't keep perpetually looking to see if it is coming. The time for its arrival is the business of the conductor, not yours. It will not come any sooner for all your nervous glances and your impatient pacing, and you will save strength if you will keep quiet. After we discover that the people who sit still on a railroad journey reach that journey's end at precisely the same time as those who "fuss" continually, we have a valuable piece of information, which we should not fail to put to practical use.—Anna C. Brackett, in "The Technique of Rest."

HAIR ON THE FACE, NECK, ARMS OR ANY PART OF THE PERSON QUICKLY DISSOLVED AND REMOVED WITH THE NEW SOLUTION

MODENE

AND THE GROWTH FOREVER DESTROYED WITHOUT THE SLIGHTEST INJURY OR DISCOLORATION OF THE MOST DELICATE SKIN.—DISCOVERED BY ACCIDENT.

In Compounding, an incomplete mixture was accidentally spilled on the back of the hand, and on washing afterward it was discovered that the hair was completely removed. We purchased the new discovery and named it MODENE. It is perfectly pure, free from all injurious substances, and so simple any one can use it. It acts mildly but surely, and you will be surprised and delighted with the results. Apply for a few minutes and the hair disappears as if by magic. It has no resemblance whatever to any other preparation ever used for a like purpose, and no scientific discovery ever attained such wonderful results. IT CANNOT FAIL. If the growth be light, one application will remove it permanently; the heavy growth such as the beard or hair on moles may require two or more applications before all the roots are destroyed, although all hair will be removed at each application, and without the slightest injury or unpleasant feeling when applied or ever afterward. —MODENE SUPERCEDES ELECTROLYSIS.—

—Recommended by all who have tested its merits—Used by people of refinement.—

Gentlemen who do not appreciate nature's gift of a beard, will find a priceless boon in Modene, which does away with shaving. It dissolves and destroys the life principle of the hair, thereby rendering its future growth an utter impossibility, and is guaranteed to be as harmless as water to the skin. Young persons who find an embarrassing growth of hair coming, should use Modene to destroy its growth. Modene sent by mail, in safety mailing cases, postage paid, (securely sealed from observation) on receipt of price, $1.00 per bottle. Send money by letter, with your full address written plainly. Correspondence sacredly private. Postage stamps received the same as cash. ALWAYS MENTION YOUR COUNTY AND THIS PAPER.

The Gospel Problem.

BY REV. L. G. BROUGHTON.

Text—"That they do good, that they be rich in good works, ready to distribute, willing to communicate."—1 Tim. 6: 18.

The Apostle Paul in this letter to young Timothy is giving him plain directions as to how (1) he shall act himself, (2) how he shall teach others to act. Timothy was a young evangelist. He was to come in contact with all characters of men, and Paul exhorts him as to how he shall instruct them with reference to riches living and what shall do for the Lord. He lays special stress on works, and hence we want to consider "working for the Lord," or the "gospel problem."

I. GOD HAS ORDAINED TO SAVE THE WORLD BY THE AID OF MEN.

This has ever been true since the dawn of time. Look at God's dealings in the past. Take the history of the flood. The world was in great wickedness. God must destroy it. Noah was selected to prepare an ark in which to preserve seed with which to replenish the earth. He could have opened the heavens and let an ark down for this purpose, but he did not see fit to do so. Again, the children of Israel were promised the Promise Land for an inheritance, and Moses was selected to guide them. On their way they perish for water. Moses was selected to take the rod, strike the rock, and get water. Again, they were bitten by fiery serpents and were dying. Moses was selected to erect the brazen serpent which should be the antidote to the poison.

These are some of the many examples of God's dealings with men in Old Testament times. How was it in the days of Jesus Christ. His very first step in his ordained work was led by man. Listen at John over in the plains of the Jordan crying, "Prepare ye the way of the Lord and make his paths straight." Then, again, when he would give the world that sublime lesson which then was the antetype and afterwards become the type of his burial and resurrection, without which no man could have been saved, he selected John and was by him burried in and resurrected from the river Jordan. Again, the heathen Gentiles must have the gospel preached unto them. He then, through the church at Antioch, set apart Paul and Barnabas to carry the gospel to this people.

MY IDEA OF ELECTION.

This about constitutes my idea of election. God elected Noah to build the ark because of his fitness; Moses to lead the children of Israel because of his fitness; John to be the forerunner of Christ because of his fitness; Paul and Barnabas as missionaries to the Gentiles because of their fitness; and so he does to day. He elects men to their individual work because of their individual fitness or qualification. But as for the individual salvation, independent of individual effort, I do not believe the spirit of Jesus Christ or his disciples or apostles afford the slightest shadow of foundation.

II. THE WORK THEN OF SAVING THE WORLD HAVING BEEN COMMITTED TO MAN, HOW SHALL IT BE DONE?

This is the question of importance to every child of God. If the proposition in the beginning is true that God has ordained to save the world through human instrumentality, what, then, is the individual duty, and how shall it be done?

(1) Through the church and its allies. But have we not been trusting to this means for nearly nineteen hundred years? And still the world is not saved. Something, then, is radically wrong. Either the gospel is at fault and needs helping up, or our church is at fault and needs helping up. Mr. Gladstone, the world's greatest statistician as well as statesmen, said sometime ago that he was convinced that in eighteen months he could get a message from Her Majesty the Queen of England into every tongue and country on the globe, and could have it read by two-thirds of the population of the world. Now what's the matter? We have been nearly nineteen hundred years in trying to spread a message from the Lord Jesus Christ, and still we have failed to reach the world. Now this is the gospel problem. Let us try to solve it.

(1) The church has misunderstood its mission. The notion has prevailed and prevails to day to a great extent that the purpose of the church is to take care of its subjects, and that it has absolutely nothing to do with going out and dealing with other subjects; or in other words, that the duty of the church is simply to take care of religion, and then religion will take of the world. Now I do not believe in any such a mission. I believe the duty of the church is to reach men. What would you think of the sun, the true source of light, if he was to say to himself, "I am the only true light, and therefore I must take care of my own light, and not go down into the marshy places where the malarial germs are active, with my purifying rays, lest I be contaminated with the poison?" What, again, would become of those districts? They would stagnate and die. And yet good men argue that way. "Take care of religion. Don't go into the marshy places of life. Keep out of those slums. Don't take religion in there, it will become contaminated." Did Christ die for religion? Nay, religion is an invincible principle; it is eternal. It needed no Christ to die for it, but he died for men. So the church must live for men. And that church which does not let its influence be felt in the affairs of men is but the devil's play ground, and he smiles at its delusion. I believe in the church being felt in all matters that pertain to men, politics, business and manners of living. Why, it has gotten so that if a good man dares to dive into politics he is to be branded as a prodigal. Lets away with that idea, and realize our power, and take out of the hands of the devil this territory he has so long occupied.

A CHURCH ON WHEELS.

Again, there are a great many people who seem to have a wrong conception as to what the church is. I did for a long time. There are lots of people who think this house we worship in to-day is Broad Street Baptist church. I don't think so, and I'm glad I don't, for if I did I would resign before night. I would not serve as dead a church as this is with old wood walls, common pews, ugly furniture. But this is not the church of which I'm pastor. Broad Street church is a mounted church. It is on human wheels, and sometimes I see it as I go my rounds in the sick room, down in the alley, away out on the edge of the city in the business houses. Yes, wherever I go around the city thank God I occasionally run up on my church. This is what makes me stay here as your pastor, and it is what is giving you power. Mr. Edison has invented a magnificent instrument with which he detects gold veins in the earth, but so long as Mr. Edison lets his beautiful instrument remains in his office it is powerless for good, but the moment he carries it out into the gold regions its power is drawn out and the gold is obtained. So is the church God has invented. It has more than sixty cells—it has thousands of cells. The electric fluid of God's grace is stored away in those heart cells of the individuals composing this great battery, the church, but so long as they stay still rejoicing over the grandeur of the magnificent box (the building) which holds them together they are powerless for doing their work. But the moment they are carried down into the soul regions of our city or country the power is drawn out and the souls are reached. Oh, let us not worship our old church buildings. There is no power in them.

PARALYSIS.

Why is it that the old storage battery is about playing out in the treatment of paralysis? Because paralytic patients will not come to the doctor's office for treatment, and he wants a portable battery—one that he can take around with him more easily. So with the church. We want a church that can go out and apply its current to the old paralyzed sinners on the streets, in the stores, and everywhere.

"A SPIRE A THOUSAND FEET HIGH."

A brother said to me the other day he wanted a church at Broad Street with a spire on it a thousand feet high, so that he could see it from every direction of the city. Well, I have not time here to discuss spires, but there is this I do say: I had much rather have a church whose spire I could see in every portion of our city than from every part of our city. Church spires with gold crosses on them never will save a soul; but I tell you what will—the cross of Jesus Christ in the heart. The most sickening sight to me is to see a cross on a church spire and its members at the theatre or at the ball. If you want to put a cross anywhere, put it in the heart; that's the place for it.

(2) The church in the past has been afraid of methods and fact. And hence you hear of apostolic and non-apostolic methods. I believe that Christ established all that was needed to save the world so far as his ordinances, &c., were concerned, and I believe no man has the right to change one of them to suit any convenience. But so far as methods are concerned, when there is no sin in them of themselves, I believe he has left that to man. Look at Paul when among the Jews. He wouldn't eat any meat. Why? Not because it was bad meat; not because there was any harm in meat; no incompatibility between Jew meat and his digestive organs. But because by so doing he might catch a Jew.

LEARN A LESSON FROM THE DEVIL.

We need not be afraid to study his plans. Christ says, "Be ye wise as serpents and as harmless as doves." The serpent is the devil, or compared to him. Study him. Learn a lesson from him. Go down the street—see that elegantly painted front; a bright lamp burns all night in front of the door; flowers growing in flower pots; boquets on the counter; music in the rear. Why? To catch men. Look at our mens' social clubs—tapestried walls, carpeted floors, &c. Why? To catch men.

THE CHURCH AS AN EDUCATOR.

I believe the church should do more along this line. John 8: 32, "The truth shall make you free." We have failed to get the good out of this passage of Scripture because we have tried to divide the truth. It can't be done. Truth is truth. Truth is eternal, and truth is God. So whatever of truth we know, we are in part helped to be free Why so much vice in our factory districts? Because they are not taught the principles of virtue and honesty. I believe, then, in making the church an educational center to help it reach the people for God. I believe, then, in having in connection with our churches, where needed, reading rooms, gymnasiums, libraries, medical dispensaries, &c. In other words, having a Y. M. C. A. of its own, and if it can't run a Y. M. C. A. of its own, I think the church should take hold of those we have and use them for this purpose.

MORE ZEAL.

Again, in order to do the work we need to have more zeal and earnestness. I know that men will call us cranks and fanatics if we are zealous, but that's nothing. I stood the other night and looked at that great, strong crank which was attached to the electric power engine. By means of this crank a thousand lights were kept burning and a whole city kept from falling on the wayside in the dark. Oh, if I could only be such a crank for the Lord as to light up a city for God. A man called me a crank the other day because I said in a sermon that girls for doing the same amount and kind of work as men do ought to get as much pay, and yet Christ says "the laborer is worthy of his hire." Somebody is a crank. Who is it? Christ, me, or the man?

MORE MISSIONARY.

Again, the church to reach the world must be more missionary—not more foreign missionary or home missionary or State missionary. But more of the general spirit of missions. God set us the example when in heaven he looked down here and saw a great world lost without Christ, and he had a convention up there and decided to send a missionary to the world. He came and stayed till there was riot in the world and the mob killed the missionary. But he left some followers, and the heathen have been trying to kill them every since, but they haven't succeeded yet. Lets keep the work of Christ. Start missions at home—right at our church doors. God has so fixed it that we can be two missionaries at once. We can do home mission work and can send some one to do foreign missions for us.

MORE HUMILITY.

Finally, we need more humility in our work. (1) Reach the common people. I know a church in this State that made its brags over not having any poor folks in it. If it had said no religion, too, it would have been complete. I would not serve a church that stuck its poor off in a chapel to worship. The common people, so called, compose the greater part of the world, and its the fate of the Baptists to get them. I'm glad of it. They have got more religion than rich folks. They have got bigger souls. They will hold more grace. I think Christ was talking about poor folk's souls when he told them to fill up the water pots and it took so much water to fill them. Jesus was a common man, the son of a house carpenter. Carey was a common man. That's the reason his soul held such a big idea as missions. Eighty per cent. of the rich folks of Winston-Salem are in the churches, and less than twenty per cent. of the so-called common folks. This means something. Christ said it was a miracle when he was here for the poor to have the gospel preached unto them, and so it is to-day. Talk about the days of miracles being past! Not till the poor have the gospel.

(2) Be less formal. Formality is our curse. This thing of showing out at church! I can't stand it. I heard of a man who was a sailor. He come in Sunday morning, and his wife persuaded him to church. They went in and every pew was rented, and the usher asked him for his "ticket." He said he didn't have any. "Well, you can't get in." "What church is this?" said the man. "It is Christ church, sir," said the usher. "Well, then, he is not at home to-night, is he?" said the sailor, and went away and never was saved. Such abominations as this will have to be put under our feet before the world is going to be saved. Let us study the church problem.

Morality without religion is only a kind of dead reckoning—an endeavor to find our place on a cloudy sea by measuring the distance we have to run, but without any observation of the heavenly bodies.—Longfellow.

Notes and Comments.

The Southern correspondent of the National Baptist, in one of his letters "from the South," tells several things which we imagine will be news to not a few readers of that paper. The writer says that he has lived in various States of this Union—North and South; that he has always felt much interest in the welfare of the Negroes, and he candidly states that he is acquainted with no part of this country where the Negroes have better opportunities to get on in the world than they have in Virginia. Then come the following observations:

And this is due to

THE SOCIAL CONDITIONS IN THE OLD DOMINION.

I was born, reared and educated in Virginia, and was never out of the State before the late Civil War. I have held pastorates in different parts of the State, and I know the general social conditions better than I do those of any other part of our country. And I can confidently say that I am acquainted with no region where there is less of race prejudice against the negroes than there is in Virginia. Many excellent people, I am sure, are seriously misinformed on this subject. For instance: Not long ago, I read a charming article from Rev. Edward Eggleston. It was one of the Forum's series on

"FORMATIVE INFLUENCES."

In that article Mr. Eggleston said: "My father had been bred a planter's son, and, of course, a white-handed stranger to all manual labor." Now, Mr. Eggleston's father was bred in Eastern Virginia, and when I read that sentence, I could not help thinking how strange it would be to many a planter's son who was bred in the same region. I knew a great many planters' sons, for I was one of them, and I have known scarcely one who did not, now and then, take a hand at plantation work. Raking, binding and shocking wheat; dropping, thinning, plowing, cutting, shucking and housing corn; worming, hoeing, stripping and prizing tobacco; chopping wood—"all these things have a most familiar sound to the ears of thousands of planters' sons, who, on plantations swarming with negroes, were not too white handed to do any, or even all of them, when occasion required." The idea that the sons of planters in Virginia were a white-handed and idle aristocracy, who scorned to work with "niggers" in the field, is a mere romance, so far as my rather extensive personal knowledge, experience and observation go True, we did not eat with the negroes, nor did we sleep with them, but we went to church with them, we sat under the same preachers, we hunted, fished and frolicked with them. I have sat on the banks of the now classic Rapidan with negroes all day long, fishing, before and since emancipation, and it never occurred to me that I was doing anything improper or peculiar. In not a few lines of work negroes now are usually and decidedly preferred in Virginia and other parts of the South.

That Edward Eggleston is a man of decided ability, and of high character, scarcely any intelligent reader is likely to question. Such a man can not lightly be suspected of intentionally misrepresenting the people among whom his honored father had been bred. And yet he has evidently allowed himself to be utterly deceived as to the habits of the whole planting population of the great State of Virginia. The stupid phrase "plantation manners," which is so current in certain parts of the county, and is meant as a slur upon the conduct and character of Southernors generally, is a libel upon George Washington, Thomas Jefferson, James Madison, James Monroe and John C. Calhoun, who were all planters, and lived on their plantations. Jefferson's "plantation manners" were especially elegant and courtly. Madison's manners made him the idol of all his neighbors, and were the admiration of every visitor at his elegant country seat, "Montpelier," in Orange county, Va. Calhoun's manners were the charm of every young man who came in contact with him. No man in South Carolina was ever so beloved by all classes of the people. That men whose manners captivated the courts of the most refined nations of Europe, as did Jefferson's, should be sneered at as unmannerly boors and country bumpkins, is one of the most grotesque absurdities of this age.

One of the ancient classical authors—a heathen, of course—tells us that the "KNOW THYSELF" descended from heaven; and there are various passages of Scripture which teach us the supreme importance and the extreme difficulty of attaining to self-knowledge. In illustrating this point, one of our Southern preachers tells the following amusing anecdote:

We once knew a man who was fond of manufacturing stories in order to cast ridicule upon people whom he disliked. He had great reverence for old Mr. Jesse Powers, a Methodist preacher, who was known and read of all men as one of the salt of the earth. There was another Methodist preacher in the neighborhood; and our story-telling friend had no great respect for his sincerity; so he told the following anecdote, which was probably "made out of whole cloth," but still illustrates the point before us: Brother Powers and Brother Thompson were riding along the road through the southwest mountains of Virginia, when Brother Powers said despondently, "My brother, I am afraid I am in a very bad way spiritually. I am so full of worldly thoughts and feelings, that I can not even pray without being interrupted by thoughts of the world. Is it ever so with you." "No, indeed!" said Thompson. "When I determine to have a season of communion with my God, I never allow the weak and beggarly elements of this sinful world to come into my soul, and drive out the thoughts of my Maker." "Ah," said Brother Powers, "that is a blessed state! I wish it were so with me. Now, brother, if you will dismount from your horse; give me the bridle; kneel down here in the road, and make a prayer of five minutes, and then tell me, on the honor of a Methodist preacher, that you have not had a worldly thought during the prayer, I will give you my horse." Now, Bro. Powers was well mounted, as the circuit-riders in that mountain country commonly were. Brother Thompson at once gave his reins to Brother Powers, dismounted promptly, knelt in the road, and prayed very devoutly for about two minutes; and then, pausing in his prayer, looked up, with great anxiety in his eyes, and said, "Brother Powers, did you say the saddle, too?"

From the Religious Herald we clip this sharp bit of criticism:

The New York Mail and Express tells the public that Wm. L. Marcy was Secretary of State in the Cabinet of President Polk. It is a well-known fact that Mr. Marcy was the Secretary of War in that administration; and it was as Secretary of War that he distinguished himself in the memorable controversy with Gen. Winfield Scott. Marcy was Secretary of State under Pierce; and in the latter part of 1853 he greatly added to his already splendid reputation by his very able correspondence with the Austrian Government on the subject of the release of Martin Koszta by Capt. Ingraham of the United States Navy. If Mr. Marcy was ever Secretary of State under Polk, the editor of the Mail and Express, is probably the only individual in these United States who ever found it out.

And this reminds us that the New York Tribune, some time since, published a sensational story about an interview that one of its correspondents had with President Lincoln, after the capture of Jefferson Davis. The correspondent asked Mr. Lincoln, "What will you do with Jeff. Davis?" And then we are told what President Lincoln said. Now, as Mr. Lincoln had been dead about a month when Mr. Davis was captured, the Tribune was giving the public a fine specimen of a ghost story!

That the editor of such a paper as the New York Tribune should have been taken in by so stupid and palpable a fraud, is really surprising. There is not much reason for surprise at the error of the Mail and Express; for the editor of that paper is famous for publishing editorials or subjects that are beyond his ken. Indeed, he quite frequently tells what nobody knows. SPEX.

A correspondent of the Examiner speaks of Prof. A. T. Robertson as "bright, oratorical, hyper-orthodox." We cheerfully agree that Prof. Robertson is bright and oratorical; but as for his being "hyper-orthodox," that is another question. The expression "hyper-orthodox" carries the idea that a man can be too orthodox. As well talk of a man's being hyper-honest, hyper-truthful or hyper-faithful. Prof. Robertson is orthodox through and through, but not a bit more so than he and everybody else ought to be.

What sort of words will the slack-twisted brethren invent next? Prof. Robertson is no more orthodox than he is honest, truthful and faithful. If then he be hyper-orthodox, he is equally hyper-honest, hyper-faithful. And the question arises how orthodox does the Examiner's correspondent think a man ought to be? and how honest? how truthful? and how faithful? Would he claim that people are hyper-moral? Would he advocate being honest only to some extent? We heard of a preacher out West who preached the funeral sermon of a sharper, and said, "This gentleman was as honest as circumstances allowed." We might infer that the proper degree of orthodoxy is to be as orthodox as circumstances allow.—Western Recorder.

The Power of the Bible.

The libraries of the world are full of dead books. But the Bible remains as full of youth as the most recent literature. As an example of its hold upon the reading world, the following facts are eloquent: In 1891 the new publications on theology, biblical exposition and other lines suggested by the Scriptures, numbered in England 580 and in the United States 588.—Ex.

Good Morning.

Don't forget to say "Good morning!" And say it cheerfully, and with a smile; it will do you good, and do your friends good. There's a kind of inspiration in every "Good morning!" heartily spoken, which helps to make hope fresher and work lighter. It seems really to make the morning good, and to be a prophecy of a good day to come after it.—Selected.

Verily, when the day of judgment comes we shall not be examined as to what we shall read, but what we have; not how carefully we have spoken, but how prayerfully we have lived.—Thomas à Kempis.

DOCTRINAL SERMONS.

Such is the name given in modern religious parlance to that class of sermons that are devoted in the main to the discussion of peculiar denominational tenets and the consideration of controverted points wherein one denomination differs from another or from all others. To call such sermons doctrinal is, however, somewhat a perversion of the proper scriptural and literal meaning of the word. The word doctrine, in this connection, is more properly applied to the teaching of the Bible; so that if a preacher preaches God's word faithfully, every sermon will be a doctrinal sermon. The custom of using the expression "doctrinal sermons," in the limited sense above mentioned, has become so general, however, that we will for convenience accept it, and give the expression, in this paper at least, the meaning now usually applied to it.

Almost any minister, in the active work of the pastorate, or in evangelistic work, will feel constrained from time to time to preach, in whole or in part, such sermons. Indeed, there seems to be a necessity for them. Paul's preaching was intensely doctrinal, and he was constantly under the necessity of preaching such sermons; even such as we are now considering. In this age of divers faiths, and of many, and sometimes warring creeds, there must of necessity, then, be more or less of such preaching. It is perfectly natural that men should at times attack doctrines different from those they hold. This results from several causes. One is zeal for the truth; another is natural pugnaciousness; and another still is an unquiet conscience. Men that have a zeal for what they conceive to be the truth, and an ardent desire to see the truth in its purest form prevail, are moved, through a sense of loyalty to God and his truth, to attack such forms of error as tend to destroy or compromise that truth. For this they have not only scriptural example, but also command. Christ himself earnestly condemned error. So did Paul, Peter, James, John, and the rest of the apostles. "Earnestly contend for the faith, once for all delivered to the saints," and other passages like it furnish proof that there is Scripture command for such sermons.

And again, as intimated, some men are naturally of a controversial turn of mind. So was the great Luther, and many distinguished preachers since his day. The Lord needs people of different types and dispositions in his service. Men of bold, lion-like character, when possessed by the spirit of the Master, have often done invaluable work in building up his kingdom. It is natural also, as stated above, when a man's conscience is not at rest as to any doctrine or practice which he or his people hold, and for which scriptural authority is claimed, for him to be ready for an argument with any one who may differ from him. Fearing at times he is wrong, he is disposed to seek light by testing his doctrine in the crucible of fair discussion, and if it will not stand the test he secretly proposes to abandon it. There is, then, we repeat, and as long as human nature remains the same, there will be a need that such sermons should be preached from time to time.

Right here we would ask and try to answer two questions:—

1. When, or how often, should doctrinal sermons be preached.

2. How, or in what spirit, should they be preached.

In answer to the first question, we may say that there are those among us who claim that distinctly doctrinal sermons should never be preached; but that doctrine (in the limited sense in which we are now using it,) should be preached in any ordinary sermon when the proper discussion of the text demands it. In other words, that doctrines should be preached naturally and incidentally at any time, without any previous notice, which may put those who differ from the preacher on their guard. To some extent this is a good plan. It was, we believe, to a marked extent, the plan of Spurgeon, who was one of the greatest of modern preachers. It is to be noticed, however, that this plan, even if followed as a rule, has to be departed from at times, when the preacher's faith, or that of his people, may be so boldly and persistently [illegible] in a given community that the demand for full and prompt reply, and for a clear exposition of the leading doctrines of [illegible] is imperative, and cannot be [illegible] without injury to the cause he loves. Such an occasion arose near the close of Spurgeon's useful life, and the man rose equal to the occasion, when he preached his grand sermon against the theory of baptismal regeneration.

A minister may be holding quite a successful meeting in a town or community where his doctrines are little understood. His success at once excites the opposition to those who find their doctrines antagonized and jeopardized by his; hence they take it on themselves to "fill the air" with all sorts of rumors, and even misrepresentations, as to what he and his people believe. Such reports, if suffered to continue spreading, may seriously cripple his work and hinder his success, and in this case no one can blame the man for a candid, plain statement of his doctrines, and a manly defense of them. To trust to the gradual process of reply would not meet the demands of the occasion. To fail to reply at all would be a seeming admission of the truthfulness of the reports. We would say, then, in a general way whenever a preacher is satisfied that the time, place, or occasion, demands such a sermon, after proper deliberation and prayer, he should preach it. There is certainly need of prudence and deliberation in this thing, and times or places may demand such sermons oftener on the part of some ministers than on the part of others. Some pastors are located in communities where they and their doctrines are well known and well established, and where their predecessors had to engage in the sharp work of religious controversy. Others are where they and their creed are little known, and where sharp antagonism will be met. Of course one may seldom need to preach such sermons, while the other will often have to contend, in no ambiguous terms, for the faith he holds.

In answer to the second question, we would say that such sermons should always be preached in the spirit of Christ. Dr. Broadus, the distinguished President of our Theological Seminary, once, when speaking to some young men under his instruction, about preaching such sermons, used about the following words: "Brethren, when you feel constrained to preach sermons of this kind, remember that you need for them more grace and prayer than for any other kind." Right here lies the secret of the fact that doctrinal sermons at times fail to do good, and sometimes do actual harm. The preacher, and especially the young and inexperienced, at times finds himself filled with what he conceives to be righteous indignation when some "neighboring pastor," forsooth of another denomination, attacks roughly some favorite doctrine of his people. Forthwith he announces, with gusto, that "he will reply to the sermon" at such a time and place, (often on the following Sabbath.) He at once goes to work with pen, pencil and authorities. He is in a fever of excitement. He can hardly sleep at night; much is expected of him; the cause of his people is in jeopardy; he seems to think they stand or fall with him, &c. He gets more indignant at the brother that attacked him as the week passes. He may pray—yes! but he prays for victory. When the following Sabbath comes he rushes into the pulpit and hardly utters a dozen sentences before his face is flushed. He stamps the floor, pounds the Bible, talks rapidly, and, in plain English, is mad. He will in such a temper be apt to call others hard names and use abusive and sarcastic epithets. The sermon may be a hot one; very convincing to his own people; but will hardly convince or win those that oppose.

Before preaching such sermons, then, the minister should pray very earnestly for the spirit of the blessed Master. He should ask the Lord to enable him to reach the heads and hearts of those who oppose; that he may not only vindicate his own people, but convince and win others, to his views. Instead of calling others hard names, and using abusive epithets, let him show toward them rather the spirit of the great apostle when he wrote, "Brethren, my heart's desire and prayer to God for Israel is, that they may be saved," &c. Such sermons often convince the mind and win the heart of the bitterest opponent.

ACCORDING to a report in the Minutes of the Baptist State Convention for 1840, signed by D. S. Williams, Cor. Sec., there were in North Carolina at that time twelve thousand anti-Mission Baptists and twenty-four thousand Missionary Baptists. They were then called anti-effort and effort Baptists. There are now about ten thousand anti-Mission and three hundred thousand Missionary Baptists in North Carolina. Here is a demonstration that missions develop and multiply a people who do what they can to give the gospel to the destitute.

WE shall thank brethren in different parts of the State for a postal giving any item of interest in their section for publication.

PERSONALS AND OTHER ITEMS.

... We print an excellent letter from Sister Yates this week. It should be read by all.

....Rev. Dr. L. G. Broughton's church in Winston has given him a month's vacation.

....Dr. Skinner went down to Morehead last Saturday to attend the Teachers' Assembly.

....Rev. I. T. Newton paid us a very pleasant call on his way home from Wake Forest College.

....Rev. Dr. J. C. Hiden accepts the pastorate of Grace Avenue church, Richmond, succeeding Dr. S. A. Goodwin.

....Prof. T. R. Crocker, who graduated from Wake Forest in 1890, has accepted the chair of Greek in Turlington Institute.

....Rev. Tiberius G. Jones, D. D., will preach the commencemet sermon at Williams and Mary College on the 26th inst.

....Prof. Collier Cobb, lecturer in Harvard University, has been elected to the Chair of Geology at the University of North Carolina.

....Dr. B. H. Carroll preached the commencement sermon at Richmond College on the 20th inst. Dr. Ellis delivered an address on the 21st.

....The members of the Baptist church are making arrangements to repaint their church building at an early date.—Murfreesboro Index.

....Please acknowledge as received for Bethel church, $6.50 from Oxford Baptist church. Thank you, dear brethren.—J. R. Pace, Bethel, N. C.

....Rev. J. H. Hildreth of Wilmington is at Southport assisting Rev. A. T. Howell in a protracted meeting in the Baptist church at that place.

....Prof. J. H. Horner, one of the foremost educators of the South, died at his home in Oxford Monday evening, the 13th inst., of paralysis of the heart, after a sickness of two years.

....The programme of the celebration of the battle of Guilford court house is on our table. We notice that Hon. Walter Clark will deliver an oration on the life and services of Gen. Wm. R. Davie.

....Rev. Frank M. Royall, a Wake Forest graduate who has been attending the Seminary, Louisville, and soon to be a missionary to China, preached two fine sermons at Roxboro, Sunday, the 12th inst.

....Of the thirty six young men who graduated at Wake Forest week before last there are fourteen prospective preachers, twelve teachers, five lawyers, two doctors, one pharmacist, two business men.

....President G. C. Briggs of the North Missouri Institute has just closed a most successful session of his school. Prof. Briggs is a Wake Forest boy, and we are glad to hear of his well deserved success.

....On June 8th the Board of Trustees, after two years searching for a suitable man, decided to again offer the presidency of William Jewell College to Rev. Dr. J. P. Greene, pastor of the Third Baptist church of St. Louis.

....Rev. Dr. H. M. Wharton of Baltimore returned home sick from North Carolina last Saturday. He is confined to his bed this week and his physician says he will not be fit for work for several weeks.—Richmond Dispatch.

....The library of the late Rev. A. W. Price is now for sale at a greatly reduced price. Any brother in need of books would do well to confer with Mrs. Pauline Price, Wadesboro, N. C., who will furnish a list of the books to any one desiring it.

... Rev. Dr. Pritchard is now a permanent resident of Wrightsville, it being his intention to reside there both summer and winter. He comes up to the city every day, however, on an early train and returns in time for supper.—Wilmington Star.

....Rev. W. J. Wilkie died on Sunday, 5th inst., at his home on Hooper's Creek, and was buried at the church of that name on Monday. He was sixty-two years of age, and had been in the ministry for about forty years.—Charity and Children.

....The Roanoke Union of the Tar River Baptist Association was in every sense of the word a success. The preaching and speaking was very fine. The brethren of Scotland Neck know how to get up an interesting programme.—J. R. Pace, Bethel, N. C.

....There will be an educational rally at Mars Hill, July 6th, 1892, in the interest of the college. Rev. J. L. White, Hon. John W. Starnes and J. Q. Tilson will be present and deliver addresses. Dinner on the ground for all. You are specially invited. —T. M. Honeycutt, Chm. Com.

....We have just received a very pleasant note from Bro. Bryan. He says "the RECORDER is our dearest paper, and Bro. Bailey is to us the RECORDER." He has been sick for a good while, and his doctor advised him to come home, but the Board has persuaded him to wait till 1893.

....At Tryon Street Baptist church, Dr. A. G. McManaway pastor, baptismal services were held Sunday, 12th inst. Eight persons were received into the membership of the church. Twenty-seven in all have been received as the result of the meeting just closed.—Charlotte Observer.

....We acknowledge the reception of an invitation to the marriage of Miss Mary Lilian White and Prof. J. H. Simmons of William Jewell college for June 15th at Thomaston, Ga. It would give us pleasure to be present, but as this cannot be we send our kindest wishes.—Central Baptist.

....Hon. Eli T. Stackhouse, Congressman from the Sixth South Carolina District, who attended Col. Polk's funeral, and was one of the pall-bearers here on that occasion, died suddenly of heart failure in Washington last week.

....Mr. W. A. Montgomery of Warrenton has received the degree of A. B. from Johns Hopkins University. He will return in the fall to study for Ph. D., making Greek his specialty. As a student of languages, Mr. Montgomery has few equals in the South.

....As a result of the Fife meetings in Goldsboro, 316 persons have joined the churches, 144 going to the Methodist church, 80 to the Baptist, 55 to the Presbyterian, and 14 to the Episcopal. Many from the country will join churches in their own neighborhood.

....A good sister who taught a school in a destitute section, and had the RECORDER sent to her, writes: "I boarded with a Disciple, was surrounded by Primitives, Freewills, Quakers, etc. Your paper was such a comfort to me, and made teaching easier. I could not live up here without it."

....Rev. P. S. C. Davis reports good work at his church at Shiloh. He has baptized two converts within the past few weeks. His church started off splendidly with its pledges, raising twenty dollars for the Orphanage on the first Sunday, leaving nearly that amount in the treasury for some needy Board.

....It gives us pleasure to announce that Rev. Dr. Pritchard, who tendered his resignation as pastor of the First Baptist church of Wilmington, was prevailed upon by a large number of his congregation to reconsider. At a congregational meeting on Sunday, the 12th, he announced that he would withdraw his resignation.

....Dr. J. E. Todd of Mark's Creek township, Wake county, died at his home on June 15th, 1892, from cancer on his face. He had been a great sufferer for the past year. He was a faithful and consistent member of Hephzibah church, a zealous christian worker in church and Sunday school, a kind neighbor, and a good citizen.

....While a student at Wake Forest last session, I preached for the brethren at Mars Hill. The Lord has blessed us in our work. The fourth Sunday in June we will have a Centennial Mission day. Bro. Butler is to be with us, and a large congregation is expected. I hope and pray that our people may be aroused to a deeper interest in missions. —A. J. Taylor, East Durham.

....Rev. C. H. Strickland, D. D., of Sioux City, Ia., expects to summer in Europe. His generous parishioners provide the funds and grant as much time as is necessary to see Europe and the Holy Land. They know how to appreciate the three years' faithful service of Dr. Strickland. In that time 308 persons have been added to the membership of the church, and $30,000 given to general denominational benevolences.

....Hazing received at least a temporary check at Yale College recently. A young man from Nebraska was being initiated into one of the College societies, and was required by the older members "just for fun" to run as hard as he could down one of the city streets. While doing so he came at full speed against the pole of a wagon, and died shortly after from the effect. This murder it is thought will stop hazing at Yale until the present crop of ninnies at that institution is succeeded by another one.

....There is abundant room in this country for Unitarian missionary enterprise. About $20,000,000 might easily be expended by that liberal body in the establishment of a half dozen small churches in this State. They have only one at present. Our Congregationalist brethren also find this an excellent field for the expenditure of missionary funds. Their success is almost equal to that of the Unitarians.—South Carolina correspondent of Examiner. The erratic and liberal brethren have a hard time in the South.

....On Monday night, June 10th, Rev. Dr. Geo. Cooper of Richmond, Va., celebrated his silver wedding and the seventh anniversary of his pastorate at the First Baptist church. At the conclusion of the celebration Dr. Cooper was presented with a bag of several hundred new silver dollars from his congregation. In his sermon Sunday morning Dr. Cooper presented to his hearers some very interesting church statistics. He had received 497 members during the seven years of his stewardship, and in all this time had missed only three services from sickness.

....Rev. J. A. Howard preached a forcible and practical sermon at the Baptist church Sunday morning on the relation of the individual member to the whole body of the church. He condemned the idlers, grumblers, and those who will not do their part. As the body cannot be healthy unless each member does its work, so it is with the church. All cannot be leaders; some must be privates. Find what your duty is and do it. Each member is responsible for the work of the church to the full extent of his ability. If things do not go right it is their duty to do all in their power to make them go right.—Webster's Weekly.

....Rev. H. M. Wharton, D. D., editor of The Baptist of Baltimore, who conducted a tour to the Holy Land, has written the results and observations of his travels in a book of 500 pages, entitled "A Picnic in Palestine." The book is now in press and will be ready about July 1st. It will be illustrated with nearly forty engravings made expressly for the book, and taken by Dr. Wharton himself. It will be printed on heavy paper and handsomely bound. The book will be written in Dr. Wharton's well known breezy manner, and will be amusing, entertaining, and instructive. Messrs. Wharton, Barron & Co., of Baltimore, are the publishers, and announce that it will be sold only by subscription.

....We said two weeks ago that the Baptist pastors of Louisville declined to consent that the Baptist Congress should meet in this city unless guarantees were given that the foundations should not be attacked. It would have been well to add that the assurances were given and the meeting would have been held but for trouble in agreeing on a date. But some of the brethren, including some editors, felt that it was very narrow and behind the times generally in us to demand any such assurances. We believe something here in Louisville, and we propose to stand by our faith. If people assail our faith they will have to do so without any help from us.—Western Recorder. You are right, brother. It will make no difference if the Congress is never held.

....Sister Nancy Price, long a resident of Raleigh, died at the home of her son Albert in Petersburg, Va., on Friday morning, June 17th, 1892, at 3 o'clock, in the seventy-third year of her age. For many years she had been a widow, and resided alternately with her son in Petersburg and with her daughter in Raleigh, sister P. C. Hardie. The remains were brought to this city and interred in Oakwood cemetery on the afternoon of the day of her decease. Three children survive her—two sons, William and Albert, and one daughter, Sister Hardie, who were all in affection and service that children could be to a devoted mother. Sister Price was the relict of Bro. Albert W. Price, Sr., and for a great portion of her life had been a follower of the blessed Redeemer. We extend our sympathies to the bereaved.

....Dr. T. H. Pritchard, in Charity and Children, has the following to say about Wake Forest College: "I will say that a rather unpleasant impression was made on the Trustees by the revelation of the fact that sixteen thousand dollars worth of notes given by students for tuition still remain unpaid, and the opinion prevailed that some of these young men who had been helped by the College, and also by the fund Mr. Bostwick had provided for their aid, were not as mindful of their honor as they should have been. If there is any debt in this world that should be regarded as sacred, it is one of this kind, and as a friend of the College, and from a regard for the reputation of these young men, I appeal to them to pay these debts of honor. I quit College owing nearly seven hundred dollars. Judge Faircloth was also deeply in debt for his education. So was the Hon. J. C. Scarborough. But we paid every dollar of our debts, with interest, and most of these young men can do the same."

Letter from Sister Yates, Shanghai, China.

Dear Bro. Bailey:—In the RECORDER of March 30th, there were two things that gave me great pleasure. The first was, that you continued to improve and would soon be able to take up your accustomed work.

The other was, the answer of the King's Mountain Association to Mr. Bostick's proposition.

I have nothing against Mr. Bostick, but I am strongly opposed to the plan he proposes, because I am sure that it "tends to break down all organized effort in our denomination." I rejoice greatly in the assurance that North Carolina Baptists adhere firmly to united effort, and have confidence in the management of the Board; that "there is no disposition on the part of any of our North Carolina churches to do Foreign Mission work other than through our Board at Richmond."

I can not make out what our discontented missionaries have to complain of, for the Board has been exceedingly kind to all whom the churches have placed under its care and direction. If I were to find fault, it would have to be that it is too indulgent—allows its missionaries to do too much as they please. In looking back over the forty years of my life in China, I can not recall a single word or act of arbitrary control towards any one of us. Yet, it has not been because provocations, many and grave, were wanting.

Neither am I clever enough to see what advantages these discontented brethren expect to secure. They claim that under their plan, the home churches would know all about the work, take more interest in it, and send out more laborers. The churches would know what their missionaries chose to tell them—neither more nor less. Whatever they could do under the proposed plan, they can do under the old. What hinders their giving information to the churches and associations now? I know that many of us do write frequently—we are glad to do so—and I believe that the churches know more than they are credited with. Faultfinding is a tool that never turns out good work. The tool that we all need to handle most is described in the thirteenth chapter of 1 Corinthians.

I am very glad that the Bryans are to remain at their post. Mr. B. is very, very poorly, but the fact that he is so much needed makes me hope that his health will soon be restored. His one fault is overwork. Whatever he undertakes is done with soul, mind, and strength, and there is so much need for work all around him, he can not refrain long enough to get well; but he has promised to be more careful, and I am hopeful.

There are many more things I would like to talk about, but dare not, except face to face.

My Anne joins warmly in "love to Bro. Bailey and family." She is looking well and is happy. I am unusually strong—have been so for several months—and have the satisfaction of being of some little use. Mr. and Mrs. Tatum and babies, two, are well.

Greatly longing to hear that you are quite well again, I am yours sincerely,

ELIZA M. YATES.

A Model Pastor.

Reference has been frequently made in the RECORDER to the work of Bro. Josiah Elliott. It might be well to give a brief sketch of his work as an encouragement to the humble workers in our State. It was my pleasure and privilege to live under the same roof with him for a year and sit at his table for six months. He was not a preacher then, only an humble and consecrated layman, selling books and hauling goods to support an invalid wife.

I have known him to stop his daily work to haul wood and beg provisions for the indigent poor of his county, and to visit the neglected and sorrowing in the highways and hedges.

This model layman has become a model pastor. He has never been to academy or college, but he has learned in the school of faith. He has had very few opportunities of culture, yet he is a better preacher than some who have had splendid opportunities, and is a harder student than others who have their walls decorated with college diplomas.

Bro. Elliott was born in Perquimans county, near the town of Hertford (his present home), some forty odd years ago. He had been in the ministry about eight years. During this period, has served some nine different country churches. Two of these he has served the whole period of his ministry; two he has served seven years, one he has served six years, another five, and another three, and two others one year each. During the eight years he has repaired four houses of worship and built four. Two of which were on new fields of labor. He has also planned and started two others, which have been completed. He has assisted in organizing two new churches and in re-organizing two others. The entire cost of the above work has been $5,440, all of which has been raised without any of the modern methods. He has preached as many as twenty-eight funerals in five months. During the first thirty months of his ministry, he married forty-four couples riding thirty-five miles to perform one service. As opportunity afforded he has had appointments in fourteen different school houses. He attends from five to nine protracted meetings yearly, and visits from thirty-two to forty-four families every month. For two years he has served six congregations. Every church he serves would gladly have him remain and several which he does not serve would be glad to have him serve them.

Bro. Joe. Elliott is a noble example for every country preacher. His pastoral power, added to the preaching ability of many brethren, would wonderfully develop the churches and advance the Master's kingdom.

While Bro. Elliott has many of the Bible blessings resting upon him, he also has one of the Saviour's woes, viz: "Woe unto you when all men shall speak well of you." If Bro. Joe. Elliott would combine with the many splendid elements in his pastoral work, a little more firmness in the administration of church discipline, his churches would more rapidly develop, and he would soon have swept from his head this woe which the Saviour had pronounced upon him.

"Joe Elliott" stands to-day as a living monument of encouragement to every humble worker. What he is doing, many other humble workers can do through the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ. May the Lord bless and help all the humble workers in every part of the world to do the Master's work with all their might.

Bethel Hill, N. C.

Dear Bro. Bailey:—It is very gratifying in looking over the columns of the RECORDER to see reports of progress in the Master's work from different parts of this great nation, and especially from our own State.

But while I see many places mentioned which are making great efforts both on educational and spiritual lines, I know of none that is more worthy of mention than Bethel Hill, N. C.

These people, for some time past, have seen that in order for one to be most efficient in the Lord's work the mind and heart must both be cultivated, and for this cause they are and have been making great efforts for the improvement of the minds and hearts of the young and growing up generation.

The Bethel Hill Institute, located at Bethel Hill, under the supervision of Rev. J. A. Beam, stands high among the institutes of the State. The able and efficient principal, with his able assistants, make it a very desirable and beneficial school for cultivating both mind and heart, as the principal lays special stress upon cultivating both together.

Bro. Beam is also making a special effort to aid young men studying for the ministry. He not only offers them a school in which they can get excellent training, but he makes special arrangements so that they have a great advantage financially. And in addition to his efforts, his church (Bethel), seeing the great necessity of ministerial education, has, sometime since, agreed to help some young men by boarding them, and, for some time, has been doing so.

About two years ago, by some influence brought to bear upon him, your scribe was influenced to write to Prof. Beam, and, after time for a short correspondence, was invited to the Bethel Hill Institute under the proposal of the church. With the invitation he also asked that we go by Wake Forest and be received by the Board of Education, and then to Bethel Hill.

So on January 20th, 1891, we turned our back upon home and loved ones and started for Wake Forest, and on the 21st we reached our destination, where we were taken in and cared for with that kindness which made us feel that, though all faces were strange, we had found some good old "father in Israel" at Wake Forest.

After spending the night, and being examined, we started for Bethel Hill, and on the morning of the 23d we were among the hills of Person, and soon in the day reached Bethel Hill. There we found the doors of the houses of those good people thrown open with their good things heaped before us, of which they shared freely with us. They were not concerned only about the support of our physical body, but concerning our spiritual development also, which was very encouraging and helpful to us. After spending about one and one-half years with them, we have left them to enter another school, but we feel that there shall always be a heart of thankfulness to them, and especially to God, for the kindness bestowed upon us while at Bethel Hill.

We pray that God may continue to bless Bro. Beam and his school, and all the efforts of the Bethel Hill people for the development and preparation of the young for doing noble work in "the vineyard of the Lord." Yours in Christ,

J. C. GILLESPIE.

Institutes for Colored Preachers.

The Baptist State Convention in session at Goldsboro last November passed the following:

"Resolved, That we request the churches connected with this Convention to give one collection during the Conventional year to aid our colored brethren in mission work and ministerial education, and that this money be expended through our Board of Missions."

The Board, believing the churches will furnish the needed means, have arranged for ten Institutes to be held during this summer. Five hundred dollars have been appropriated for the work—fifty dollars for each Institute.

The Home Mission Board of Atlanta has agreed to pay one-half of the above amount. We will need, therefore, to secure from our churches for this specific work two hundred and fifty dollars, and we ask the pastors to bring it to the attention of their churches, and give them an opportunity to comply with the request of the Goldsboro Convention.

After consultation with the Board of Missions of the colored Baptist State Convention, the Professors of Shaw University and other judicious colored men, the Board has agreed upon the following PROGRAM FOR INSTITUTES.

1. Elizabeth City, May 31st to June 12th. Prof. A. A. Smith of Shaw University, Rev. N. W. D. Norman (col.), pastor at Plymouth, Rev. C. A. G. Thomas.

2. Charlotte, July 9th to 16th. Rev. J. O. Crosby (col.), President of Greensboro College, Prof. A. A. Smith, Rev. A. G. McManaway, Rev. D. M. Austin.

3. Weldon, July 11th to 18th. Rev. P. F. Maloy (col.), State Missionary, Rev. R. I. Walden (col.), Rev. T. J. Taylor.

4. Winton, July 19th to 26th. Rev. J. A. Whitted (col.), Principal of Normal School, Warrenton, Rev. Luke Pierce (col.), pastor at Winton, Rev. C. B. Williams.

5. Roxboro, July 26th to Aug. 2d. Prof. A. W. Pegues (col.), Professor in Shaw University, Rev. R. H. Harris (col.), pastor at Milton, Rev. J. H. Lamberth, Rev. J. J. Lansdell.

6. Greensboro, July 26th to Aug. 2d. ——, Rev. P. F. Lewis (col.), pastor at Salisbury, Rev. R. R. Moore and Rev. J. K. Fant.

7. Rockingham, July 20th to Aug. 5th. Prof. A. A. Smith, Rev. P. F. Malloy (col.), Rev. L. Johnson.

8. Magnolia, Aug. 2d to 10th. Prof. A. W. Pegues (col.), Rev. I. M. Powers (col.), pastor at Wallace, Rev. O. P. Meeks.

9. Wilmington, Aug. 22d to 30th. Prof. N. F. Roberts (col.), Prof. in Shaw University, Rev. L. T. Christmas (col), pastor at Wilmington, Rev. T. H. Pritchard.

10. Newbern, —— to ——. Prof. A. A. Smith, Rev. Rufus Ford.

Prof. A. A. Smith has charge of the Theological Department in Shaw University, is well equipped, is a splendid brother, and is devoting his life to the best interest of the colored people of the State. We most heartily commend him to the brethren.

The colored brethren named are thoroughly qualified for their work and deeply interested in it.

The local brethren named, pastors of our churches (white) where these Institutes are held, are most earnestly asked to attend and render whatever aid that may be in their power and report to our Board their impressions of the work and the workers.

The Institute in Elizabeth City has been held, and Rev. C. A. G. Thomas writes: "I have been to the Institute for the colored brethren, and it gives me pleasure to testify that the work done by Prof. Smith is first class and will be of great benefit to the colored preachers. They need just such work as he is doing, and its influence will be felt upon the churches. Several years of this summer work will greatly bless the colored people of our section. I think the money is well spent." C. DURHAM, Cor. Sec.

The Centennial Movement.

The extra efforts that will be made during this Centennial year may be of lasting benefit to the cause of missions, and they may not be. Whether they help or hinder the cause, depends upon the character of the work done. If the work shall be educational, permanent good will be accomplished; otherwise, but little, if any, good will be done, and more than likely harm will come out of our efforts.

If in all our efforts we endeavor to throw light on the general subject of missions, and on our duty in regard to it as that duty is taught in the Scriptures, instead of trying to stir up the people with pathetic story and thrilling incident of missionary life, there is no doubt but that we shall lay the foundation for greatly enlarged missionary work in the future.

Enthusiasm is what is needed, but enthusiasm created by exciting narrative will soon die out, and reaction may take place that will make the task of raising money for missionary purposes harder after this year than it is now. But enthusiasm that is the result of increased knowledge of the subject of missions will not die out, but rather go on increasing in intensity in all the years to come.

I believe that the money used to pay the expenses of the great "rousement" missionary meetings that are being held in various places in some of the States, would do a great deal more good if it was expended for the publication and free distribution of the addresses made at such meetings, and also for such other literature as would inform the people. These large meetings held mostly in the cities and large towns will never reach the masses of the people in our Zion. But if good missionary literature be put into the hands of all our pastors and active lay brethren, with instructions to give it away, and they do it judiciously, the people will be reached and educated as they can not be in any other way, and an impetus given to the cause of missions that will be felt for years to come.

I wish our churches would constitute themselves into reading circles, and read all the missionary books and periodicals they can during this year. They might raise funds and buy missionary libraries and give out the books weekly or monthly to be read and returned just as we do in Sunday-schools, and thus give many who are not able to buy books, the advantage of good stores of missionary information. In this way we might make out of many who now feel very little interest in missions, real good missionary christians.

Brethren, let us all do our best, and in the wisest way this year for missions, and make the Centennial of Missions a grand success.

J. R. JONES

Milton, June 14, 1892.

Letter from Southwest Virginia.

Dear Recorder:—A communication from this place can not be very full of Baptist news, for Baptists are not very abundant hereabouts, neither is any sort of religion prevalent. However, I have a good church trained by the indefatigable J. R. Harrison to a high standard of activity in all christian work. Our cause here owes its existence as well as prosperity to this same Harrison. Ten years ago he found here hardly the nucleus of a Baptist church and a public sentiment most adverse to our people. To-day we have a self-sustaining church to which more than twenty-five additions have been made in the last year, and which is the banner church of this region in the matter of beneficence.

Besides, there is a flourishing academy for boys which catalogued last session between fifty and sixty pupils, and also the Southwest Virginia Institute, which has, under the presidency of Prof. Sam. D. Jones, achieved a business success and a scholastic position of which any community might well be proud. The session just closed has been in the highest degree satisfactory. With every room filled, with almost absolute health and faithful work under competent and distinguished teachers, the great school has moved on most smoothly and pleasantly. Of the two full graduates, one was was a North Carolinian—Miss Nannie Winston of Oxford, and the other, Miss Josie Weston of Boykin's, Va., was born in North Carolina. Another North Carolina girl, Miss Martha Knight, carried off the diploma of graduate from the department of music, and still another, Miss Emma Gooch, gained distinguished honors in the School of Art. You see how well the old North State girls do on the sacred soil of Virginia. Send us a few dozen of the same sort next session.

Speaking of the achievements of your girls reminds me that the highest and most distinguished honors of Hollins were gained this year by Miss Lottie, the daughter of Bro. D. F. King of Leaksville, N. C., one of my own girls. We take off our hat to the Old Tar-heel State. Now, let your young men make as good a record, and the future will be well.

I read the RECORDER with unfailing interest and pleasure, and am greatly delighted that the health of the editor, my old-time friend and college mate, is so much restored. May blessings be on you.

J. W. MCCOWN.

Letter from Bro. J. O. Alderman.

Dear Recorder:—I have been much surprised in this field since coming here. Certainly it is a mission field, but a much more hopeful than I expected to find. The brethren are few, but united and ready to work. They are all doing something financially, except some few who have been for a long time on the retired list. They are also beginning to take more interest in the church work. We have had some three or four additions by letter since I came, and expect several more in the near future.

Last Tuesday night about 8:30 o'clock I answered the door bell and found quite a number of brethren on the porch burdened with baskets, boxes, cans, &c. In they went to the dining room and just piled the table full of provisions of a durable and appreciated kind. It was indeed a pleasant surprise to us. We had just gotten at home here in our new home, Mrs. Alderman having been here some over a week. We shall find our new home one of pleasant associations and large opportunities.

My people are as appreciative and ready to be helpful as any among whom it was ever my lot to live.

The RECORDER grows more interesting every week. God bless you in a long life and work. Fraternally,

J. O. ALDERMAN.

The Summer School in connection with Oak Ridge Institute (Book Keeping, Shorthand, Type-writing, and Telegraphy) will open June 29th. Address J. A. & M. H. Holt, Oak Ridge, N. C.

A Statement from Rev. D. W. Herring.

Dear Bro. Bailey:—Under "Personal and Other Items" of last week's RECORDER, it was stated that I had presented my resignation to the Foreign Mission Board and it had been accepted. I would like to say, in explanation, that this does not mean that I do not intend going back to China as a missionary. I was compelled, on conscientious grounds, to offer my resignation when the Board declined to endorse the following plan (see below) for extending mission work into the interior of China. It was not occasioned by any personal difference with the Board. Their failure to endorse these principles and provide that they be put into operation, will probably necessitate other resignations. This movement will do no violence to the foreign mission work of the Board, for it will from its very nature be gradual in beginning, only keeping pace with the number who, being called of God and seeing the Scripturalness of it, rise up and say to the churches who are willing, "Here am I, send me."

I hope it will not prove the occasion of controversy. I am in this country in behalf of the unreached millions of China, and am ready to present this matter to the churches in person wherever I am asked to do so. I hope the pastors and brethren generally will give me this privilege; for a personal presentation of it will be much more satisfactory; then I can explain it fully.

The necessity for this movement, so far as it concerns the people on this side of the water, is that our present work is projected and run from the standpoint of wealthy city churches and men of high salaries; this is projected with especial reference to the country churches. We claim that there ought to be one department of our Foreign Mission work that so accommodates itself to our country people, in the simplicity and economy of its workings, that they may know and appreciate all about it.

Yours faithfully, D. W. HERRING.

Mt. Airy, June 16, 1892.

To the North Carolina Baptist Pastors and Churches.

Dear Brethren and Sisters:—At our last Board meeting (June 3d), we appropriated every cent ($75.00) we then had in the treasury to our beneficiaries. We now have fifteen on our list, including three widows. It takes about one hundred and thirty-five dollars for us to make a single payment; and it is our earnest desire to make monthly payments to them. This we can not do, unless the pastors and churches scattered over the State come to our aid. When we made the last payment, we were anxious to send each one ten dollars, but could send only two of them over five dollars for want of funds.

I was requested by the Board to address this letter to you, hoping to have a general response from you in the near future. The fact that we have three widows on our list, ought to appeal strongly to our sisters for help in this work. Will not the pastors call at once on their churches? If the pastor forgets or neglects it, will not some member in each church call attention to our needs. We know that a great many of our worthy pastors have been intending to help our aged brethren or their widows. Well, dear brethren, now is the time.

I am proud of North Carolina's record this year. She has given more to Home and Foreign Missions than ever before. Our people have been among the foremost in liberality to the heathen; but in all candor, brethren, is it anything to our credit for it to be known that some of our aged preachers are suffering for the necessaries of life?

Again we say, will not every pastor and every church in the State let us hear from them. Remember, brethren, that your Convention has heartily endorsed this work, and recommended that you contribute regularly for it as for any other denominational work. It would carry great joy to my own heart and into the humble homes of our aged brethren, if you would let me hear from you promptly. All contributions sent direct to our Treasurer, T. E. Cheek, will be acknowledged quarterly in the RECORDER. If sent to J. D. Boushall, Raleigh, they are acknowledged weekly. Brother, sister, before you lay the paper down that contains this appeal, ask the Lord what he would have you to do in this work.

For the Board, yours in Christ,

C. A. WOODSON, Cor. Sec. Board.

Ordination.

Pursuant to the call of Zion's Hill Baptist church, a presbytery of brethren from the neighboring churches met on Saturday, the 11th day of June, to examine and set apart to the work of the gospel ministry our Bro. A. J. Bordeaux.

The examination was conducted by Rev. J. M. Register, the pastor, assisted by Rev. G. C. Cains and Rev. D. H. Hilburn. His christian experience and call to the ministry proved satisfactory. He was found to be sound in the faith and orthodox as to church polity.

We had Bro. Bordeaux to preach for us, after which the presbytery proceeded to ordain him.

The charge was made by Rev. J. M. Register. The Bible was presented by the writer, and the ordination prayer was made by Rev. G. C. Cains, after which the presbytery laid their hands on the good brother and sang a hymn, and the pastor called on Bro. Cains to pronounce the benediction.

Bro. Bordeaux is preaching at Yorkville and Zion's Hill. He made a powerful speech at the Central Union at Galeed on missions. The oldest people present at the Union say it was the best speech on missions they ever heard. We do thank God that he has sent this good brother and earnest worker among us. Yours in Christ,

D. H. HILBURN.

Bladenboro, June 18, 1892.

Death of Rev. Wm. Kennedy.

Rev. Wm Kennedy calmly and peacefully entered his final rest at the residence of his son, Dr. Kennedy, in Warsaw, on the 6th inst. His health had been on a steady decline for two years or more, and with patient resignation to the will of God he was longing for the summons to come. While his disease attacked the brain and rendered him more or less oblivious to earthly surroundings, he was clear to the last on religious topics and spent his closing days in prayer and communing with Jesus.

His funeral was preached by the writer from 2d Tim. 4: 7, 8. The faithful old minister was truely an exemplification of the Text. He was born in Duplin county, in August 1825, being nearly sixty-seven years of age.

He was converted and baptized when about twenty-years old by Rev. Jesse Howell, in a meeting at the Johnson church. He soon manifested a call to preach the gospel and was licensed and ordained when about twenty-three years old. With no collegiate course and little other early education than he received at his mother's knee, by his native ability, his apparent consecration and diligent study of the Word he was at once sought out by the churches, holding as his first pastorate Island Creek and Concord.

He has made a record that may put many a college graduate to the blush. He early learned the secret of making himself indispensible to the churches; he was enlisted heart and mind in their welfare; he was never without a call, serving during his long ministry nearly every church in the Eastern Association, and some that are now in the Atlantic and South River. He served the Mt. Holly church thirty consecutive years and the Riley Creek thirty-nine years, the latter refusing to dissolve the pastorate until he died. He had here a most successful pastorate, baptizing over 100 at one time, and having constant accessions annually. He baptized 112 at one meeting while in charge of Well's Chapel. The number of conversions under his ministry were very large, and the number of baptisms many hundred.

Perhaps no preacher who ever lived in the Eastern Association was so thoroughly enlisted in local and State missions. While holding pastorate he did a great deal of general missionary and colportor work in this section. He was invited to preach before the Southern Baptist Convention in Raleigh, was often a delegate to that body and the State Convention. During the war he undertook a self appointed and self denying mission in the camps and hospitals about Wilmington. He served as chaplain of the Seaman's Bethel in Wilmington for a time until his health failed.

Faithfulness was his leading characteristic. He was an untiring unceasing worker. He was loyal to duty and to God. A striking instance of his devotion was exhibited in his refusing the offer of a collegiate education by a friend, in order that he might take care of his widowed mother. He was as true as steel to Bible truth, earnestly contending for the faith, yet most courteous and knightly in its deliverance.

He took a lively interest in educational matters, and specially Warsaw High School, which he and his son had under charge from '84 to '87.

He was an ardent temperance advocate; was a delegate to the first prohibition convention ever held in this State in 1865, and stumped this and other counties for the constitutional amendment in 1881.

He was married to Margaret Johnson in 1853, who survives him and who has been a most noble helpmeet. Two sons and a daughter are also his survivors. One dear daughter who was cut off in bright young womanhood, to whom he was devotedly attached and made every sacrifice to educate, stood ready to greet him on the glory shore.

O. P. M.

We invite attention to the advertisement of the Oxford Female Seminary in another column. The advantages it offers are many. Its location is unsurpassed. Oxford is noted for the refinement and culture of its social life, and is used by many people as a summer resort. The course of study is comprehensive and its standard of graduation high; and it is the purpose of the president to advance these still higher. The degrees conferred are B. A. and G. E. The B. A. degree corresponds to full graduate, and the G. E. degree to graduate in English. A course of study in the Bible for one year has been arranged for the senior class, and such others as may wish to join. In arranging this course the assistance of Dr. John A. Broadus of the Southern Theological Seminary, and of Dr. W. R. Harper of the Chicago University, were secured. Both of these distinguished Bible students, as well as many other scholars, warmly commend the introduction of the study of the Bible into the school. Typewriting and stenography will be taught next session. Physical culture will be made even more prominent. The teacher of this department is now visiting schools of this class in the North to learn the most approved methods. The faculty is a strong one, holding diplomas from five or six of the leading schools of this country, while the piano teacher received her training in the Royal Conservatory of Berlin, Germany. The Baptists of North Carolina are to be congratulated that the outlook of this old and renowned institution was never more hopeful than now. The catalogues are now ready for distribution. They can be secured by application to the president.

The rapid and healthy growth of the University during the past year is one of the best signs of continued progress. The institution is taking rank with the [illegible] country. Young men who desire to fit themselves for useful careers in life, should write to President Winston at Chapel Hill for full information. See ad.

FIXTURES.

What is a fixture? For our purpose we will say, "A personal chattel affixed to real estate which may not be removed against the will of the owner of the land."

A tenant purchases and attaches tobacco flues to his landlord's barn. Are the flues fixtures? A mortgageor puts a new engine in the mortgaged mill. Is the engine a fixture? A man sells his farm. When the purchaser comes to take possession, the vendor claims all the apple and peach trees. Are they fixtures?

The landlord forbids the tenant removing manure raised during the year. Is manure a fixture?

This term "fixtures" has a different meaning in its application to different parties—as vendor and vendee, mortgageor and mortgagee, heir at law and executor, landlord and tenant. The right to remove and detach is recognized as between landlord and tenant when it would not be between the other relatives.

The public are disposed to make the actual affixing of the chattel to the freehold, rather than its use and the relationship existing between the parties the test of a fixture. Nor is this popular mistake entirely without sanction in the early opinion of some of the judges.

And here again we may pause to observe that progressiveness is not more the law of life than it is the life of law.

"Anciently," say our Court, "the law was more strict in respect to making things erected upon and attached to the land, directly or indirectly, a part of the freehold, than in modern times. As civilization has advanced and trade and other industries have multiplied, there has been a growing relaxation of the strict rule of law in their favor." Generally speaking, any tenant, at the end of his tenancy, may remove any addition that he has made to the land from his own funds and in furtherance of his business.

Some years ago the Western N. C. R. R. obtained permission to erect a ticket office on the lands of another. After a while the R. R. was moved. It demanded the house. The land owner said "Not so, it is a fixture." But the Court held that it was not a fixture. This was between landlord and tenant or lessor and lessee.

Now let us see as between a vendor and vendee of land. In Mecklenburg county in 1877 Davis sold certain mining property to Vallentine. Vallentine bought an engine and machinery, affixed the same to the land, to test it. Davis then became bankrupt and was sold out. Moore bought the mining lands at public auction. Moore claimed the engine, &c. So did Vallentine. The Court was called on to say if they were fixtures, and held that they were, because of the relationship and vendor and vendee. Says the Judge: "Where a mortgageor or vendee makes improvements and erects fixtures, he does so for the purpose of enhancing the value of the property, and having made this addition to the land, he is not at liberty to subtract it on the ground that by his own default he is not able to get the title. Such is not the law. When a tree is planted, or a house is built, or a steam engine is annexed to the soil and is used as a part of the freehold, it becomes a part of the land and can not be severed except in special cases."

So our Court has held that, as between vendor and vendee, a plank, which was put down and used as a floor in a gin-house, was a fixture, whether nailed or not. Had the plank been laid down to dry or for safe-keeping, it would not have been a fixture.

We are now, perhaps, ready to answer the questions suggested in the beginning of this article.

If a tenant buys tobacco flues and attaches them to the barn in the usual way at the end of the year, they are the tenant's.

If the mortgageor or vendor does the like, the flues become fixtures and can not be removed by him. So, on the death of a party, the flues in his tobacco barns, no doubt, go to his heir and not to his administrator. So, if a mortgageor or vendor puts in an engine in the usual way, it is a fixture. Fruit trees are fixtures and no doubt can not be removed though planted by him. A tenant will be entitled to all the manure that he raises from his stock, provided he removes it before he leaves the premises. After his term has expired and he has left the land, the law, doubtless, would presume that he had abandoned the manure and he could not get it.

The Best Made Better.

For the past twenty years many persons have thought and said that The Baptist Teacher was the best of its kind. Now, they say that the best has been made better: that the last copy of the Teacher is superior to any of its preceding numbers. Editorials, contributions, lesson notes, Editor's drawer, library notes,—all its contents, from beginning to end, are up to the very highest point of excellence. How the American Baptist Publication Society can furnish a monthly for only fifty cents a year is what puzzles the average newspaper proprietor.

True glory consists in doing what deserves to be written, in writing what deserves to be read, and so living as to make the world happier and better for our living in it.—Pliny.

When the blood is loaded with impurities, the whole system becomes disordered. This condition of things can not last long without serious results. In such cases, a powerful alterative is needed, such as Ayer's Sarsaparilla. It never fails, and has no equal.

Life is too short to be spent in enmity or regretting wrong, private.

A Note of Warning and Information.

The Southern Baptist Convention has set out to celebrate the Centennial of Missions by raising a special fund of $250,000 for permanent work of the two general Boards—the Home and Foreign. A strong committee has in hand the raising of this money, and this committee is aided by committees in each State, and these in turn by committees in each district association, and in some cases by committees in the local churches.

For a year past, all over the country, there has been carried on a campaign of education on missions, all tending to the preparation of the people for the raising of this fund. Their attention has been awakened and their interest excited. Very many people, both young and old, will naturally be anxious to have a part in this special work, and will as naturally turn such gifts as they may be able to make to missions in this direction. The Centennial Permanent Fund will probably absorb the attention of the people, and possibly draw to itself the larger part of their gifts, and just therein lies a danger.

While the Centennial Fund is being spoken for, written for and given to, it is possible that our people will lose sight of the fact that a large and increasing work has to be carried on by the Foreign Mission Board—a work that will require for its maintenance and extension not less than $16,500 a month, and a work that in addition has begun the year hampered with a debt of some $16,000. If the Centennial Permanent Fund shall absorb the contributions necessary for the carrying on of the regular work of the Board, it will be a serious calamity and one that may involve very serious consequences. So I beg to call the attention of the brethren to several facts:

1. The Centennial Permanent Fund is a special fund, and can not be used for the current expenses of the Board.

2. If current expenses for enlarged work fall off in amount, an enlarged debt will be entailed on the general work, and no increase in missionary force will be possible.

3. The Convention has expressed the desire that the Centennial year shall be marked by the addition of one hundred missionaries to our present force, and the Foreign Mission Board is laboring in that direction.

4. The Permanent Centennial Fund had best be known as the "Chapel Building Fund," or "Permanent Fund," at least as far as the Foreign Mission Board is concerned. For the term "Centennial Fund" for our Board will embrace as well the fund designed for the enlarged work of the year.

5. We state now that all Centennial funds sent to our Board, unless designated as for "Permanent Fund" or "Centennial Chapel Fund," or "Chapel Building Fund" will be considered by us as designed for this enlarged work. Therefore,

6. All persons sending funds to the Foreign Mission Board for any part of the Centennial work, will do well to designate very clearly exactly how they wish them used.

7. The "Permanent Fund," "Centennial Chapel Fund" and 'Chapel Building Fund," all three meaning the same thing, and all three here given, because they have been used in the papers—so far as the Foreign Mission part is concerned, will be used for chapel building on foreign fields, Bible, tract translation and distribution, and such other work as may be of a permanent nature. All not needed at once will be invested and held as a permanent fund, to be drawn for these purposes as needed, the interest meantime being used, and the principal, so long as not used, serving as an emergency fund should the Board at any time be in need and be unable to find relief from the ordinary sources of supply. This emergency fund will be used only as collateral on which money may be borrowed in time of special pressure, and will not be used for current expenses. T. P. BELL, Assist. Sec.

A minister, now in heaven, once wrote an article for one of our religious papers under the heading, "The Loving Kindness of God." A blundering printer set it up, "The Loving Hindrances of God," and the careless proof-reader overlooked the error. The editor wrote an apology to the author. But he replied that the mistake was evidently providential. It had set him thinking that God's hindrances were often the most precious tokens of his love.—Interior.

I have used the Pokine Remedy (prepared by W. T. Cheatham, Jr.) in case of Sciatica with the result of positive relief in a few hours, and believe if used as directed is will effect a permanent cure. J. L. H. MISSILLIER.

MARCH 6, 1891

For the benefit of the public, I unhesitatingly recommend Cheatham's wonderful remedy, "Pokine," to all sufferers of rheumatism. It has produced marvelous results in my case. I was a sufferer of the malady for five years, and after taking a few bottles was entirely cured.

Very respectfully, W. W. DOWTIN.

HENDERSON, N. C., March 7, '91.

MR. W. T. CHEATHAM:

Dear Sir—My wife was down in bed with rheumatism, and the Pokine I bought of you gave her relief after taking four doses. She has not been troubled since. It is the best medicine she ever took for rheumatism. Respectfully, ZACK DAVIS.

MR W. T. CHEATHAM, JR.:

Dear Sir—I have been afflicted with rheumatism time and again, for the past thirteen years. I have received more relief from Pokine than any medicine I ever took, and therefore take great pleasure in recommending it to all sufferers of rheumatism. Very respectfully, F. G. MITCHELL.

JANUARY 19, 1891.

W. T. CHEATHAM, JR.:

Dear Sir—I desire to say that in January last I was down with rheumatism; my suffering was great, and I was completely prostrated. One bottle of your Pokine completely relieved me, and I have not had any rheumatism since. My son also was relieved of rheumatism by Pokine.

Yours truly, CHARLES G. BURROUGHS.

MR. W. T. CHEATHAM, JR.:

Your rheumatic cure, Pokine, has completely cured me. I. M. GREEN.

MR. W. T. CHEATHAM, JR., Henderson, N. C.:

Dear Sir—Being asked my opinion of your rheumatic remedy, Pokine, will gladly state I deem it the only medicine of its kind on the market that will accomplish that which is exclusively claimed for it. Being a sufferer of rheumatism, I consequently tried many remedies, until finally relieved by Pokine. Very respectfully, J. A. KELLY.

Ordination of Bro. John E. White.

At the request of the Baptist church of Apex on the 5th of June, a presbytery met at Apex for the ordination of Bro. John E. White to the gospel ministry. The presbytery consisted of Revs. C. Durham, Wm. B. Royall, J. M. White and J. W. Millard. After a full and satisfactory examination, the ordination was proceeded with at the morning services.

Dr. Durham preached an excellent sermon, after which the ordaining prayer was offered by J. W. Millard, and after the laying on of hands, Dr. Royall delivered the charge. Bro. J. M. White delivered the words of welcome to the ministry, the candidate being his own son. The benediction was pronounced by Rev. J. E. White, who preached a sermon that evening at eight o'clock.

Bro. White is the popular young pastor at Wilson. He is a young man of excellent abilities, having taken a high stand at Wake Forest while a student there. He was orator both of his Society and his class, graduating in 1890, as a student for the law. He has given that up, however, and has given himself wholly to the work of God. May he accomplish much. Wake Forest, June 7, 1892.

The following testimonial is from a lady, one of a family which is widely known and highly respected in the city of Summerville, and its neighboring cities. A large number of immediate relatives of the family, residing in Cambridge, together with many others, have voluntarily visited to testify to their knowledge of the strict verity of the facts stated.

SHEELDONVILLE, MASS., Sept. 23d, 1890.

Rev. A. L. Bosworth. Dear Sir:—You wish for a plain statement of my case, to help you in your work of saving life, and I have been benefitted so much that I am very willing to give it. I hope others may be benefitted as much as I have been, and I feel sure there can be no doubt as to the result of the treatment if the directions are carefully and rationally followed.

I had been ailing for the last twelve years, ever since I had scarlet fever. I had been to several physicians, one doctoring me for one complaint, another for another; all saying the stomach was the cause of the trouble. At last, three years ago, I was taken to bed with nervous prostration and inflammation of the stomach. I was in bed six months and then got up only to find life a burden, and was able to go merely from bed to couch. I had the advice of three among the best doctors in Boston, men standing at the head of their profession, with reputations for skill in such diseases, and they did all they could for me. I kept "going down hill," however, and in January, 1890, was taken to bed again, I and every one else thought for the last time. My physician thought there was no help for me, as my stomach refused all food. For the last three years before that time, I had lived on milk, not a morsel of solid food having passed my lips. After being taken down this last time, I had not a drop of any kind of food pass my lips for five weeks, and grew so weak that I could not certainly have lived another week longer, had we not providentially heard of the Electropoise.

You remember when my father first spoke to you about letting us have one of your instruments, you were very unwilling to do so, fearing it was too late to benefit me; but merely as an act of humanity, and as you felt there was no other earthly help for me, you consented to let me try one. We speak often of your discouraging manner, and how you would not let us hope for any good results, I was so very weak.

We applied it first on the 13th of March, 1890, and at that time I weighed but fifty pounds, having fallen in weight from one hundred and fifty; was given up by my physicians, and was too weak to move in bed without assistance. My death was expected at any time.

I commenced to gain from that point; slowly at first, so slowly as to get at times nearly discouraged; but if I had a very poor day or two, perhaps I would see a marked improvement the next day, which helped me to keep my courage.

On the second day after applying the Electropoise, I began to eat; very little at first, only a teaspoonful of milk at a time. I kept increasing the quantity of milk and gaining in strength a little every day, and three weeks after commencing the treatment, was able to sit up a little. Now at the date of this writing I am taking two quarts of milk a day, a little fruit and a very little bread, and I weigh one hundred and one pounds, having gained fifty-one pounds in six months. Before using the Electropoise, my blood was almost black, and so sluggish it would not flow, while now if by chance my skin is broken, the blood will spurt from the wound and is a bright red, almost as bright as a pigeon's blood.

I owe all my improvement to the Electropoise; and could you now see me walking and driving about and enjoying life, you would hardly believe it could be the same girl you saw posed as a skeleton on March 13th last. Most gratefully yours,

MISS LENORE BELLE HITTINGER.

Yadkin Association.

The next session of the Yadkin Association will meet with the church at Cross Roads, Yadkin county, about seven miles north of Mocksville, Thursday, Aug. 18th, and include the 21st, instead of Aug. 15—18, as stated by the minutes of the Association. I don't know to whom the error is due.

The Clerk of each church in the Association will receive letter blanks. Brethren, please see to it that they are properly and accurately filled. Fraternally,

R. R. DAY, Clerk.

Wake Forest, June 8, 1892.

"I can forgive, but I can never forget!" a sort of forgiveness, let me tell you, that isn't worth the name. It is base coin; and whenever you feel in that way toward anybody, you may as well take a long breath, and think seriously before you say the 'forgive us our trespasses' in the Lord's prayer. —Margaret Sangster.

Japan's Condition and Needs.

A great deal is said nowadays about the recent progress of Japan since she emerged from her Rip Van Winkle sleep of two hundred and fifty years of seclusion. She is represented by most historians as having thrown off feudalism in a day, disarmed her samrai (military class,) deposed her daimios, (lords,) set up a foreign style of government, established schools, and, in fact, adopted, in a marvelously short time, Western civilization. She is painted by the tourist as a land of charming, æsthetic little people of exquisite urbanity, who love to sit under the cherry trees in springtime and sip tea out of cups that vie with egg shells in minuteness, and, in fact, live a kind of holiday life. The fine art, embroideries, paintings and lacquer, are all described in such glowing colors that the reader might almost begin to fancy that Japan was a fairy land, which an old magician laid her wand upon, saying presto, change! and lo! mediævalism, with all its darkness, disappeared, and Japan became a new country, advanced in all Western science, culture and enlightenment, ready to take her place among the foremost nations of the earth. Now is this true? we ask. Japan has made wonderful progress since Perry came, we admit. But the customs, superstitions and prejudices were not to be dissipated like the mists, in a day, by the rising of the sun, in the shape of the government decreeing that Western civilization must be adopted. A revolution is going on in Japan, and as is always the case under such circumstances, the country is in a ferment, religiously, politically and socially. But it is only with the former question that we now have to deal. All sects are struggling for the mastery. Buddhism, like a sleeping lion, feeling the pain at the attempts of other sects to deprive it of its claw, has awakened and begun to roar, rallying its followers and seeking to make proselytes as never before. Shintoism and other forms of idolatry are rampant. Unitarianism and Universalism are aggressive. Skepticism and infidelity are rife among the upper and educated classes. Especially are they affected by men of culture who have studied abroad and think it a proof of their superior minds and advantages to declare themselves ardent followers of Huxley and Spencer. I quote from a brochure recently published in Japan by F. Kanamori on "Present and Future Christianity in Japan." The author was educated in the christian schools of Japan and America. He says that in Europe and America, in his opinion, there is a tendency to the creation of an impassable gulf between men of learning and ordinary believers in christianity. He believes that there is some truth in the Bible, but much falsehood; but that the truth should be combined with that found in other religions and a new and better belief be evolved, and that it rests with Japan to do this. To quote his words in an apostrophe addressed to the Orient: "Thou art poor and depressed. Thou wert left behind by thy brother Occident in the race of civilization. But thou needst not grieve; fortune has already turned; thou hast now in thy hands all the religions of the world, and it is in thy power to smelt and recast them into a great new faith. Thou shouldst aspire to become mother of the twentieth century religion. It is for thee to recompense thy Western brother for his gift of a material civilization by conferring upon him a spiritual civilization. Grieve not, but rejoice and fulfil thy mission." Now this is the kind of sauce that is served up to the reading and thinking public in Japan. But there are a large majority yet who do not read, and it consists mostly of women, whose duty it is to keep the house, obey the male members of the family and their mothers-in-law, if they have them, and bring up the coming generation of Japan. Now how are we to reach them? for if they are rather inaccessible to the newspapers by reason of their ignorance, they are often visited, admonished and exhorted by the priests of a corrupt and idolatrous religion. It is hard to get them to go to church to hear preaching, and the only way to reach them effectually is by visiting constantly from house to house and unfolding to them patiently, tenderly, lovingly, the wonders and mysteries of God's truth. Now you say, why there are several hundred missionaries in the little Island of Japan; why can't they tell them? Well, the majority of them are busy school teaching, while in Japan the wives of the missionaries are hardly to be counted on as an active force in the field. They say that with housekeeping and children they have no time for outside work, and this is really true, I suppose, in many cases. But you see it leaves very few workers among the women who need it so much. I tell you, my friends, my heart goes out in pity to these poor, ignorant Japanese women. They know no God but those wretched, ugly stone images that they worship so assiduously, offering to them and binding upon their necks their dead babies' clothes, in order to propitiate them and cause them to treat their children kindly. Isn't it almost enough to melt a heart of stone? Go think of it in silence and alone, and in the light of the resurrection day, and then ask yourself the question if you can face them then with a perfectly clear conscience? We want single women in the field to help us in this work—women of strong characters and consecration. Are there not some who will come? What are you doing at home—teaching school? making the home bright by your presence? We need you here to shed rays of gospel light into these darkened souls that shall lighten up their lives and shine on through eternity. I have often thought that a sufficient reward for a life of the greatest sacrifice would be meeting those redeemed ones in heaven who were first shown the way by us. Weigh the question well, pray over it, and answer to God and your conscience whether you ought to come or not.—Mrs. Sophie Boatwright Brunson, Kobe.

MT. AIRY

White Sulphur Spring.

This celebrated summer resort will open June 15th. The hotel has been thoroughly renovated, new furniture placed in every room in the building. The Spring is at the foot of the Blue Ridge Mountains. In front is a beautiful park of meadow land covered with grass and flowers, and through this beautifully valley flows the Ararat River. Up this lovely valley blows from the mountain tops a grateful breeze, which makes cover on the beds necessary during the warmest summer nights.

The property has recently been purchased by a stock company with an abundance of capital. No pains or expense will be spared which can add to the comfort and pleasure of those who come to spend the summer in the most beautiful mountain region to be found in the world.

Guests will be met at Mt. Airy, the terminus of the C. F. & Y. V. R. R., and conveyed to the Spring without any stop-over at the hotel.

Special rates furnished by all railroads to persons coming to the Spring. Board, $30.00 per month. Children under 12 years, and servants, at half rates. Address

The Need of Houses of Worship in West Arkansas and Indian Territory.

Polk county, Arkansas, borders on Indian Territory. Dallas is the county site of Polk and is the centre of a great circle, 140 miles in diameter, in which there is not one town with a baptist house of worship. In one town Baptists and Odd Fellows are partners in a house; in another, Baptists and Campbellites. But in their separate right, Baptists do not own one town house of worship in all this great circle. Think of it! One hundred and forty miles in diameter!

Paul and his Master cultivated the towns: Should not other Baptists imitate them?

Other denominations own houses in most towns in this great circle. In Dallas, both Methodists and Presbyterians have houses. Baptists preach and hold their Sunday-school in a Presbyterian house. They have a day school under direction of the church, in an old residence, a little way out of town, and there they hold prayer meeting each Sabbath afternoon.

Note four facts: 1. One year ago the only Sunday-school in Dallas was a Union School with a Methodist superintendent. He came to the Baptist conference, and, expressing the wish of himself and his pastor and the Presbyterian pastor, requesting that the school be turn into a Baptist school. The proposition was accepted and there was born a Baptist school, nourished by Kind Words literature, in a Presbyterian house—and that is still the home of this Baptist child!

2. One of the lady teachers, a widow with seven children, lives two and a half miles away, attend regularly and walks nearly every time. An aged, intelligent sister, five miles away, is prompt at her church meetings, walking generally.

3. A gentleman, not a professor of religiong, proposed to give $500 if the Baptists will build a $2,000 house, with rooms for church and school purposes.

4. Dallas is the centre of the highest and healthiest county South of Arkansas river. Several railroads pointing this way will finally bring a dense population to this healthy region.

Does not this central town need a Baptist house? The poor members here will do their best—and who will help them to raise $1,500 that they may secure the other $500? Who will speak first!

How many other towns and country points need to be mentioned if we had space! Look at the crowds of whites that are pressing into the Indian domain! The beautiful Indian Territory, including Oklahoma, is rapidly increasing in population, and internal improvements. Seven railroads are already there. Invaluable coal fields are being opened. Towns and cities are born like magic. Think of 125 railroad cities, towns and depots, all in Indian Territory! But not more than one in twenty five (out of Oklahoma) has a Baptist church house in it. If there are seven railroads now, how many will there be when the whites become citizens of this Indian land?

Nine towns have churches without houses. Purcell, the large Southern gateway to Oklahoma, Vinita, the crossing of two great railroads, Tilihena, a strong shipping and trading point, and Hartshorn, the beautiful young mining city are all without houses. And so is Eufaula, the old home of the great missionary, H. F. Buckner. South McAlester, with two railroads, and coal beyond estimate, is rapidly becoming a large city, but has no Baptist church nor house.

What must the future be in this railroad Territory if these railroad towns remain without Baptist houses of worship? Oh, how many other towns and promising points in the country that need houses! Missionaries are asking for tents in which to hold meetings. Who will help some and soon, and then again, 'till the Lord's houses are built?

E. L. COMPERE.

Union Meeting and Dedication.

The Camden and Currituck Union met with the Berea church, Pasquotank county, on Friday before the fifth Sunday in May.

Dr. J. J. Hall of Raleigh preached the introductory sermon from Acts 27: 23. It was an excellent sermon, and I trust it will do good.

The churches were well represented, and the congregations were large each day.

The Union seems to be doing a great deal of good, and increasing steadily in interest and power, as the objects of the Convention are kept before it and discussed at every meeting.

A colporter has recently been employed who gives all his time to this work, from which we are looking for good results.

Brother Hall was once a member of this Union. The brethren tell me he was held in high esteem while among them. Of course, everybody was glad to have him visit us again, and to listen to his stirring speeches on the various subjects that came before the Union.

On Sunday, the Corinth church was dedicated. The Union Meeting adjourned on Saturday in order to be present and take part in the exercises. The congregation was large. Some supposed there were more than two thousand persons present.

At ten o'clock Dr. Hall preached the dedicatory sermon from Luke 19: 9. The sermon was very appropriate and full of thrilling interest. Revs. Dr. Overby, P. S. C. Davis and Josiah Elliott were present and took part in the exercises.

A collection was taken to which the people generously responded. More than four hundred dollars were raised in cash and pledges to pay the amount due on the church, which almost pays the debt. We feel grateful for such liberality.

After a bountiful dinner, the congregation returned to the house where four deacons were to be ordained. Dr. Overby preached the sermon, in which he ably described the character and duties of deacons.

Now just a few things about the history of the church. It was organized last August, less than ten months ago. I became their pastor in September. At that time they numbered thirty five poor brethren and sisters. But from the first they have had a mind to work, and the Lord has signally blessed them until they now number seventy-five. They have a large and flourishing Sunday school, and a missionary society which numbers one hundred.

The church at Elizabeth City gave them their old house of worship. They used some of the timbers. But besides this gift, the house cost between twelve and thirteen hundred dollars, all of which the church had raised when dedicated, except a little over five hundred dollars, and they have not called on another church for a cent. By the help of the Lord, they have erected a beautiful house of worship. I believe they are as worthy a band of brethren and sisters as can be found. May God continue to bless them, and may he enable them to do an abundance of good in the world.

Revival at Worthville.

I held a meeting at Worthville, commencing on May 15th, and which continued till the next Friday night

Rev. Henry Sheets came down and helped me. He did most of the preaching, and certainly did it well. Every one was pleased with his preaching.

We had a good meeting. Seven have joined the church. I baptized five last Sunday, and two were sick. I think there are others who will join soon.

Rev. J. D. Hackney was with me all the time. He is a regular worker in a meeting. May the good work go on.

DIED.

FLINDLEY—Departed this life May 29th, 1892, Thomas D. Flindley, aged twenty-eight years. He died at his father's in Orange county. He professed faith in Christ four years ago, and joined Ashpole Baptist church. His hopes grew brighter and brighter, so his latter days were his happiest. He died on Sunday night and entered that Sabbath that has no night. We extend our sympathy to the bereaved family. A. J. TAYLOR.

RAGSDALE—Departed this life May 26th, 1892, Bro. Smyth G. Ragsdale, in the seventy-six year of his age. Bro. Ragsdale had been a member of the Baptist church for more than forty-eight years, and had lead such a life as never to bring reproach upon the cause of Christ. He was a man of firm convictions, and had great reverence for what he believed to be right. The writer of this had been a close neighbor of the deceased for nearly forty years, and can truthfully say if Bro. Ragsdale was not a good man and a christian he would not know where to find one. Bro. Ragsdale leaves a feeble wife and five sons to mourn his loss. But they mourn not as those who have no hope, for their loss was his eternal gain. He only sleeps to awake at the resurrection. W.

Adoniram, N. C., June 14, 1892.

BREVARD—On June 6th, 1892, at 5 o'clock, our beloved friend, and faithful member of the Baptist church, Mrs. C. E. Brevard of Charlotte, N. C., passed away to enter her eternal rest, the home for which she was fully prepared. The gold was refined, the dross consumed, and she was ready for the summons, "Come up higher." She was universally beloved by old and young, rich and poor, ever ready to help in time of need, ever willing to sympathize with the sorrowful, to "weep with those who weep, rejoice with those who rejoice," ever ready to give a timely warning or word of advice. Her mission was indeed one of love and mercy. Her influence was such as will tell for good in eternity, and it can be said of her that earth has been made better because she has lived. She was a woof no ordinary cast of character—of strong principles, of deep convictions, and of unusual intellectual abilities. Up to the time of her death her mental vision was as clear as ever in her life, and her faith was staid on Christ. Earth has lost one great attraction, but heaven seems nearer, only a hand's breadth, as it were, over which we will all soon pass.

She had been waiting her Father's summons for sometime. Being in her eighty-first year, and on account of increasing infirmities, she knew her change would come soon. Only a few weeks before her death, in a most precious letter, she said: "I have been more infirm, more feeble, during the past winter, but God has not forgotten to be gracious. I have kept up, resting more or less during the day, and am trying so to live as that when it shall please him to call me away it may be well." Her friendship was such to be valued above many precious things, and the writer, with a host of others, very deeply and sorrowfully feels the loss, but at the same time believes it will ripen into something more perfect. When we clasp hands on the eternal shore may I receive the blessings which she so often besought for me, and may her mantle of goodness fall on some of us.

LOULA KENDRICK.

Tributes of Respect.

The following resolutions were adopted by the Columbia Baptist Sunday-school, to wit:

WHEREAS, It has pleased our Heavenly Father to remove from our midst on Sunday morning, May 15th, 1892, our beloved sister, Jennie Needham; therefore Resolved 1. That while we cannot understand the dispensations of God's providence, yet we remember that his ways are not our ways, and while our hearts are saddened by our loss, yet we bow in humble submission to his will.

Resolved 2. That in the death of Jennie Needham this Sunday-school has lost one of its most earnest and devoted members and one of its most loved teachers.

Resolved 3. That we send a copy of these resolutions to the BIBLICAL RECORDER for publication; that a copy be sent to the family of the deceased, and that a copy be spread upon the records of this school.

Respectfully submitted,
W. V. SAVAGE,
LEMUEL BASNIGHT,
JOE L. SPRUILL,
Committee.

If every suffering lady who reads the BIBLICAL RECORDER knew how easily and pleasantly she can be relieved she would suffer no longer. Send 2c. stamp to Mrs. Jos W. Ashby, Mt. Airy, N. C., for free sample, or $1.00 for one month's treatment sent in plain wrapper. Six months treatment for $5.00.

REV. DR. HAWTHORNE'S EXPERIENCE WITH GERMETUER.

"I am free from catarrh. I believe that I could get a certificate to this affect from any competent physician. I have used no medicine within the last six months except King's Royal Germetuer. My health is better than it has been in thirty years."

I was troubled with indigestion and blood poison in the form of pimples on my face. I took two bottles of King's Royal Germetuer and it cured me entirely. THOMAS G. HILL.

Nashville, Tenn., Oct. 31, 1891.

Rev. M. H. Wells, of Birmingham, writes "that daughter and I were cured of neuralgia and rheumatism by the use of Germetuer after all known medical and climatic remedies had been used, by the use of Germetuer."

We are endorsed by thousands of our best known people, and are authorized in saying that Germetuer will permanently cure Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Indigestion, Bowel and Liver Troubles, Female Diseases, Catarrh, Asthma, Bladder and Kidney diseases, Skin diseases, such as Scrofula, Eczema, etc., Paralysis, Epilepsy, Erysipelas, Insomnia and General Debility.

Youth and Age.

In summer the luxuriant foliage made
On window and on roof a pleasant shade;
But darkened half the sky's ethereal blue,
And shut the horizon from my longing view.

In autumn, tho the trees are stripped and thin,
They let the sun and cheerful daylight in.
Through the bare boughs the heavens are smiling clear.
And distant views, long lost, again draw near.

Youth glances from a shadowed window-pane,
And counts the nearest view sufficient gain,
Age sees through time's frail wrecks and crumbling bars
The eternal splendor of the sun and stars.

Do not Hide the Bible.

"Oh, don't do that, please!" said Mabel Coy to her chum Rose King, as they were arranging their room at the Oak Knoll Seminary, at the beginning of the school year.

"Don't do what, pray?" asked Rose, opening her large black eyes very wide.

"Excuse me, please, I must seem very abrupt, but I thought you were about to put your Bible at the bottom of that pile of books."

"And what if I do? It is my own Bible."

"I did not think of that, it was simply that I have been brought up to never put anything on top of a Bible."

"You look too sensible to indulge in such superstitions."

"It is not superstition, it is reverence."

"The Bible is only a book."

"The Bible is God's only book. It should never be hidden or put on a high shelf, or wedged into a case. It should be in plain view, unobstructed, ready to be opened by any person at any time."

"I never heard of any such a thing. Where did you get such ideas?"

"It is one of our most cherished family traditions. Papa is a minister and an editor; his study table may be piled high with papers, but the Bible will be free, on its own particular corner. The habit was taught him in his childhood. He says that early love and reverence for God's Book made him anxious to read it, and resulted in making a minister of him."

"And I fancy it has helped to make a preacher or a lecturer out of you," said Rose, laughing.

"Am I lecturing you? I beg your pardon. I was only attempting to excuse my seeming rudeness and to defend my position. Please allow me to say further that this thoughtfulness about the Bible has awakened a reverence and love for it that has stimulated me to read it, and I love God and his Son, our Savior, better on account of knowing him better than I should had I not a knowledge of the holy Scriptures."

Mable spoke with such serious sweetness that Rose could not forget her words. Then, too, the sight of Mabel's Bible on a dainty little tripod stand in a corner was a constant reminder.

Hanging to one side of the stand was a small portfolio shaped basket containing a Sunday-school quarterly and a Christian Endeavor topic card: "So that I may know just where to find them," said Mabel. "So much valuable time may be wasted in hunting for things."

Rose's Bible was on her study table, with her other books, and was not often in requisition, for she usually read a story or wrote letters during the time Mabel spent over her Bible.

Presently, one evening there came to Rose, by express, a tiny, old fashioned claw-footed candle-stand, and, as she finished reading the note that accompanied it, she exclaimed:

"Oh, Mabel, I shall have to tell you how I happened to receive this pretty gift. I do not in the least deserve it. You see I wrote home all about your reverence for the Bible"—Mabel noticed with pleasure that she did not say superstition—"and grandma writes in reply that the idea is such a beautiful one, she is sure it cannot help being a benefit to any person who will follow it out in practice, and so she sends me the little old stand that came from England, and has been in our family for generations, and she hopes it 'will help to remind me how much the Bible meant to our Puritan ancestors, and that I shall not lose sight of the fact that this government, founded on Scriptural precepts, can only be sustained by a Bible-reading and Bible-loving people.' Now, isn't that quite a preachment from one's sweet little old grandma, and wasn't it lovely in her to rob her room of its greatest treasure for poor little unworthy me?"

"Indeed it was," replied Mabel, assisting to remove the wrappings from the little stand. "What a beauty it is! Now, in appreciation, you must make yourself her greatest treasure; you can do it by making yourself a Bible reader and a Bible lover."

"But I don't know how to do that."

"Read the Bible with me a half hour regularly every day. Try to read it prayerfully and understandingly."

"But, Mabel dear, I am not a praying girl."

"You ought to be. It is entirely your own fault that you are not, and it is a fault very easily overcome."

Just then the evening mail was brought to the door, and several letters full to Rose's share.

"After looking them over she said: "I think, Mabel, my conscience will not be quite clear until I have confessed that in every letter I have written this term I have indulged in some merriment about you and your Bible, and it has been the means of my finding out that my friends consider me a very frivolous young person indeed. They all say how beautiful your spirit of reverence is, and that Bibles are so common in this day and generation, that people fall into a habit of treating them with disrespect. They are all rejoicing that I have a roommate who is a christian, and trust that my bad habit of turning all serious subjects into ridicule will not entirely prevent you from influencing me for good. Now, is not that a fine record for a young woman of my age and advantages?"

"Is it true?" asked Mabel, softly.

"Oh, yes, you know it is, although you have made very few attempts to approach me on serious subjects. But, Mabel, dear," she went on, with some hesitation, "I was very much affected by hearing your prayer for me last night. You thought me sleeping, and your voice was very low, but my hearing is acute, and I understood every word. Now, I want to know if you believe that God was listening to your prayer?"

The young girl looked astonished at the query, but she replied quickly.

"He that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that seek after him."

"Is that in the Bible?"

"Certainly. It is in that beautiful eleventh chapter of Hebrews. It is all about faith, you know."

"I do not know anything in particular about the Bible; I never cared to know before. Do you think, Mabel, that God would listen to me were I to pray to him, seeking to be one of his followers?"

Mabel turned to her little stand, opened her Bible, turned to the passage she wanted, and read aloud:

"With the heart man believeth unto righteousness, and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation. Whosoever believeth on him shall not be ashamed. For whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved."

"Can everything be answered out of the Bible, Mabel?"

"I do not think there can be any doubt about it."

"Well, from this time on I am resolved to not be ashamed, but to make the Bible the guide of my life, and not only pray, but live also, as he would have me. How strange it is that your exclamation begging me not to cover up my Bible should have led me to this decision."

"Nothing in the providence of God is strange," replied Mabel.—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

Keep Your Daughters Young.

Mothers should try to prolong their daughters childhood as much as possible. Life's troubles will come to them fast enough. And, even from a selfish point of view, a daughter who is childlike in manner and in thought is much more of a comfort to a mother than an immature little woman can be.

It is natural, no doubt, for a tired woman, who has no mother or sister near, to tell her troubles to her little girl; to let her know that the butcher and baker want their bills settled, and that that speculation of papa's has delayed the payment; to remark on the conduct of Aunt Elizabeth as "unkind;" to point out the shabbiness of the parlor furniture; to wonder whether the poor-house is the future destination of the family, etc. But it is cruel, nevertheless, as many natural things are. Little, pale, grave-looking girls, with a premature sense of responsibility, are the outcome of this sort of thing, and the depth of shame and sorrow of which the little heart is capable, may be read in the sad eyes.

Perhaps it is even worse than this to dilate to a child on the faults of friends and acquaintances; to point out the spite or meanness of people the child is disposed to like: to arouse the desire for revenge, which awakens in every young soul at the thought of wrong or injustic. Afterward the mother may learn that she was mistaken, and forgive and forget; the child seldom does.

It is said that in China there are strange dwarfs of grotesque shape, kept for the amusement of the Emperors, who were made so by being imprisoned at birth in jars made for the purpose, the forms of which the wretched creatures took in growing, they being originally no different from other children.

Effects as distorting as these are produced on the young heart and mind by fitting childhood's budding love and faith and confidence to the narrowness of adult life—to its greed of gold, its inordinate value of appearance, its suspicion of others, or to the sad knowledge of what life really is.

If you love your daughter, let her laugh and prattle. Rejoice with her; do not make her weep with you. There are a thousand things to teach her that are bright and good and elevating, and you had better go back to your own youth, and help her dress her doll like Miss Elfrida Jane, who seems so lovely in the child's eyes, than tell her that Miss Elfrida Jane paints her cheeks, and is not all she ought to be in conduct. You had better read "Cinderella" and "Puss in Boots" with her, and believe with her that a good fairy might come down the chimeny at any time and evolve a golden coarch from a yellow pumpkin, than to teach her prematurely that the world is a sad place and its dwellers most evil-minded persons.

Keep your little girl young and hopeful, and they will help you to keep so, too.—New York Ledger.

How to Visit the Sick.

These visitations are intruded upon the patients, and often so unpleasantly that requests are made that they should thereafter be forgotton. How this contrasts with that sweet visitation which is done in cheerfulness, which may only be indicated by the presentation of a bouquet of flowers, or some fruit, with the kind wishes that it may buoy up the spirit and help to nourish them into health again—or by the reading of a pleasant gospel story, and thus become their confident and loved and looked-for friend, placing themselves in relations with the patients, that they may increase their joys and mitigate their sadness and sorrows; and instead of driving them, lead them by tenderness and love into the pleasant pasture and quiet waters when death is inevitable. Many such I have seen, whose visits are daily expected when life is ebbing, whose appearance is hailed with pleasure, and whose absence is a sad disappointment. Surely this should be sufficient to teach all visitors to the bedside of the sick the value of cheerfulness, and to beware of that demeanor that saddens the patient, tends to nullify the effects of all medicine, and to deprive the weary one of that hope which points to heaven and leads, through Christ, the way.—Exchange.

A Good Character is Best.

"It is a jolly knife," said Ted, admiringly.

"There are three blades, besides the cork screw," said Tom. "It could not have cost less than half a dollar."

"What made him give it to you?" asked Ted, curiously and suspiciously. "I wish he had taken it into his head to give it to me."

"Why, I'll tell you," said Tom, laughing. "I gave him my red alley for it and an old medal. I told him the medal was silver and the alley was real marble; and he thinks he got a bargain. He's awful green."

"Oh," said Ted, "that alters the case. I would not have it at that price if you gave me a hundred dollars as well."

"Why not," said Tom, "if he's such a dunce to believe everything you tell him?"

"He's welcome to sell his knife how he likes," said Ted, turning on his heel; "but I would not sell my character for all the knives in the world."—Exchange.

The Deaconate.

Mr. Editor:—I was glad to see in your last issue a discussion of the Deaconate. It needs discussion.

It is of momentous consequence that God's will, in church organization and church work, should be rigidly adhered to and executed.

The church, of necessity, has a two fold relationship, first, to God, second, to the world.

Natural reason would dictate that what is separate and distinct should be kept apart from what is separate and distinct. Hence, "the relationship to God" should be kept separate and distinct from the "relationship to the world."

All governmental analogy, responsive to this dictate of reason, puts over every separate and distinct relationship an officer, qualified by endowment, by training, by experience, to discharge effectively the duties of the relationship: for example, matters between nations or states require a foreign or state department, and the supervision and management of an officer adapted to, and qualified for, its duties. Hence, according to reason and analogy, the relationship which the church sustains to God should be separate and distinct from the relationship it sustains to the world, and an officer should be put over each fully qualified to discharge the duties of each.

Therefore, reason and analogy would warrant us in expecting in the church as many kinds of offices as the church has relationships, to-wit, two, one over the relationship to God, and one over the relationship to the world.

Again. Offices derive their just power and authority from the sovereign will. The church is sovereign; therefore, church officers derive their just power and authority from the church.

The church has two departments, one growing out of the relationship to God; the other, out of the relationship to the world.

The church, in the exercise of its sovereignty, appoints an officer over each department.

Now, as each department or relationship, being separated distinct from the other, is to be so kept so the officers thereof must be separate and distinct, which proves that no official relationship exists between them; for each is appointed directly by the church, and each must be responsible to the church only.

The conclusion of natural, analogical reasoning is then, that a church has two kinds of officers entirely separate and distinct from each other, each appointed by the church, and each responsible to the church, with no official relationship whatever. This conclusion is apparently natural, logical, and politic.

Now, what do the Scriptures teach? Do they affirm the natural argument, or do they disaffirm it?

So far from the official duties of deacons not being specified in the New Testament, as your correspondent asserts, they are expressly and definitively prescribed. They are "to serve tables." The necessity of this service originated the office.

The "general law of service" given in the sixth chapter of Acts defines and limits the duties of deacons. That general law commands them "to serve tables."

So that in fact the official duties of deacons make up the law, while the law defines and limits their duties.

What, then, is the law? Serve tables. What are the duties? To serve tables.

The deacons, therefore, are to serve tables, nothing more, nothing less.

What is meant by serving tables? A correct answer will level all obstacles and solve all difficulties.

When deacons were first appointed, there was no room for difference of opinion, here, because it was plain and apparent what serving tables meant.

Can there be two opinions now? Let us see.

A church has two kinds of officers, to-wit, bishops and deacons; each kind appointed to preside over a separate and distinct departments or relationships—the bishop over the spiritual department, the ministry of the word and prayer, and the deacons over the temporal department, serving tables.

There are no other officers than bishops and deacons, and no other business than the ministry of the word and prayer, and serving tables. These two comprehend all the officers, and the whole business of a church.

Does a church have spiritual affairs? Yes. Does a church have temporal affairs? Yes. Has God made provision for the oversight and management of each? Yes. God's plan is perfect, because it is the product of the perfection of attributes. What officer presides over each? Does each officer have much or little to do with each other? Now for God's word.

1st. "It is not reason that we should leave the word, and serve tables." What was serving tables? A provision for the body. What was the nature of that? Temporal. Should a bishop attend to that? Should he have anything to do with it? No. Why? Because it is not reason that he should leave the word and serve tables. He must not leave the word—that is spiritual. He must not serve tables. Why? Because it is not reason that he should serve tables. He must not leave the word, which is spiritual, and serve tables, which is temporal, because it is inconsistent with his office, and all contrary to reason and common sense.

Here, then, is the principle, which draws the line between that which is spiritual and that which is temporal. The bishop is to stick to the word. Why? Because reason demands it. The bishop is not to serve tables. Why? Because reason forbids it.

God, therefore, has put the bishop over affairs spiritual; and has declared it unreasonable for him to attend to anything else—he must not leave the word.

2d. "Look ye out among you seven men of honest report, full of the Holy Ghost and wisdom, whom we may appoint over this business. But we will give ourselves continually to prayer, and the ministry of the word."

Here the idea is repeated and emphasized. It is not only unreasonable for the bishop to serve tables or temporal affairs; but he has not the time. Prayer and the ministry of the word demand, and must have his constant, uninterrupted, continual service.

The bishop, then, is uncontrovertibly God's officer for the spiritual affairs of the church. It is unreasonable for him to leave them—leave the word—and he hasn't the time if it were not, because they (prayer and the ministry of the word) demand, and must have, his constant, uninterrupted, continual service.

But what has become of the deacon? What has become of the temporal affairs of the church? Was not the deacon appointed to serve tables? Yes. What do you mean by serving tables? Simply this—no more, no less:—

The church has a two-fold relationship—first, to God, second, to the world. The bishop is the officer of the first, for he must not leave it, must give his whole time and attention to it; and the deacon is the officer of the second, for he was appointed for that purpose, and that the bishop might give his whole time and attention to the former.

Now for the conclusion, suggested by reason, analogy, principle, and the word of God. "Serving tables" is what is not comprehended within the terms, "word," "prayer, and the ministry of the word"; and as to serve tables was originally to perform a temporal service, which was unreasonable for the bishop, and which he did not have the time to perform; and as the bishop was not to leave the word, but give himself continually to prayer and the ministry of the word; and as thus the temporal affairs of the church remain unadministered; and as the principle and the original design assigned the deacons to the discharge of temporal duty; so now must the deacon be charged with the duties growing out of the relationship of the church to the world, that the bishop may discharge the duties growing out of the first relationship, of the church to God. In other words, the official duties in the church are two fold—first, spiritual, second, temporal. The bishop is charged with the first, the deacons with the second.

To serve tables means to serve the temporal affairs of the church, contradistinguished from the spiritual. The bishop is the officer for the latter and the deacon for the former.

Where can there be found a line of Scripture which militates against this conclusion?

Reason and analogy, therefore, run hand in hand with the word of God. In the world, temporal affairs must be administered—the relationship to the world. So in the world, which is fast hastening to the eternal purification, eternal affairs must be administered—the relationship to God. The sovereign church, with Christ as the head, governs all; but according to reason, analogy, and the word of God, the one relationship has its officers, to-wit, the deacons, and the other its officers, to-wit, the bishops.

What, then, is a church, according to God's plan?

A church is an organization of baptized believers, with scriptural doctrines and ordinances, and its officers, bishops and deacons. Such organization has a two-fold relationship, first, to God, second, to the world. The bishop presides over the former, the deacons, the latter, thus securing the most harmonious, efficient service, and enabling the church to move and act, under God, according to the eternal fitness of things, in the achievement of his all-wise, glorious purposes.

Has the bishop anything to do with the deacons as such? No. He is the church's deacon; and vice versa—no official relationship—appointed by the church, responsible to the church. How puny and insignificant the habitual phrase of the present unstable time, "My deacons!"

One or two more observations, and I have done.

1st. Our conclusion secures men qualified for the respective offices. Men of "honest report" were to be deacons—men who, in their business relations, dealt justly by all men, and whom all men could trust in business affairs—men of honest report. The temporal affairs of a church require the management of just such men, and just such ought to be selected—men qualified by endowment, by training, by experience for just such business. What do preachers, as a rule, know about business?

2d. The bishop is to give himself continually to prayer and the ministry of the word; he hasn't the time for anything else. Yet "my deacons" can't hold a meeting without the bishop. No scheme, no plan, no enterprise, no repairs, no improvement, no entertainment, no suggestion, in reference to the temporal affairs of the church, but what the bishop must lead off. You can't put a weathercock in a church steeple, but the bishop must have a hand in fashioning its breeze-noting proportions. You can't have a financial plan for a church, unless it be the handiwork of the bishop, or, at least, have his approving stamp upon it. And yet, and yet—AND YET—he is to give himself continually to prayer and the ministry of the word! The Lord thought his time would be taken up altogether with that—he doesn't think so.

3d. Why these conclusions in reference to deacons can't be correct, because their qualifications prescribed by the great Apostle, negative any such idea. Well, the Lord doesn't think so, anyway, no matter what learned theologians may say. Why? Because the Lord says "to serve tables" requires men full of the Holy Ghost and wisdom. Full! Does coming up to the qualifications prescribed by the Apostle make a man already full of the Holy Ghost any fuller—full of wisdom, any fuller?

The fact of the business is, the Lord knows what's best; and we had better not try by our supposed power and right of adaptability to advancing civilization, and such like tomfoolery, to alter, amend, improve, supplement or tamper with God's plan.

CONSERVATIVE.

Reciprocal Indwelling.

The orator is conscious of the presence and appreciation of his audience, even when his intellect is most busily engaged in furnishing the thought which he is uttering. The business man, absorbed in counting up his books, whilst his wife is quietly occupied with her work by his side, is aware of her sweet presence at the very moment when he is adding up the longest column of figures. The young mother may be very busy about the house, arranging the rooms in the upper stories, but her heart is always on the alert for the cry of the babe, whose crib is beside the kitchen fire. So we may be fully occupied in thought and act, and yet our heart may be abiding in holy and blessed communion with the Lord as a "living, bright reality."

"More present to faith's vision keen
Than any earthly object seen,
More dear, more intimately nigh,
Than e'en the closest earthly tie."

But before this blessed consciousness of the presence of Christ can be ours, we must know experimentally the meaning of the apostle's words, "Christ liveth in me" (Gal. 2: 20.) In point of fact there is a lovely reciprocity in this indwelling. We abide in him because he abides in us. In the translucent depths of Southern seas the voyager is aware of the infinite variety of sponge-growth waving to and fro with the gentle movement of the tide; and the ocean is in the sponge, while the sponge is in the ocean, illustrating the reciprocal indwelling of the believer in Christ and Christ in the believer. Take the common iron poker from your fireside and place it amid the fiery bed of burning coals, and soon it becomes red-hot because the fire is in it whilst it is in the fire. Shall the time not come when we shall learn the secret of a life of ardent devotion and glowing zeal, because we have mastered the lesson of the reciprocal indwelling of the saint and the Saviour? This was the secret of the human life of Christ. He dwelt in his Father's love whilst there rang through his being the glad consciousness that he did always those things which gave pleasure to his Father's heart. And the Father dwelt in him, manifesting his divine presence by words of grace and works of power. Have you ever truly realized that Jesus Christ is literally within you—the divine tenant and occupant of the inner shrine? Do not feel obliged to dilute or water down this wondrous fact as if it were too marvelous to be accepted in its literal force. We can not understand it; we can not reason it out with our poor logic; we can not account for it; we can only sit down in amazed wonder and exclaim, "Wherefore is this come to me that I should be a temple for the Lord God of Hosts?" And when once we can realise the literal force of "in you," we shall enter upon the glorious and perpetual enjoyment of "ye in me." The two are reciprocal; and the measure of our appreciation of the one is the measure of our enjoyment of the other.—Rev. F. B. Meyer, B. A., in "Christian Living."

The Great Obstacle to Missions.

There is no nobler enterprise than that of christian missions. It is invested with a grandeur and importance whose contemplation should expand and elevate every intellect, warm every heart, fill every mouth with argument. It inspired with divine ardor the heart of Jesus. It fired the soul of his great Apostle to the Gentiles, Paul, and the souls of all his brave, self-sacrificing coadjutors. It was the passion of Carey and of Judson, of Schwartz, and of Henry Martyn. It furnishes the mightiest motives and incentives to high and sublime endeavor on the part of every true church and of every true believer.

What is the great argument for foreign missions? It is not that myriads and millions of pagan people are in a deplorable state of individual, social, civil and moral degradation, and need our civilization, our literature, our laws, our philosophy and science, our art, our manners and customs, our superior political institutions to ameliorate and improve their earthly condition. These things, however important in themselves, are comparatively trivial. If the present scene of things were the boundary of our being—if it were all of life to live on this earth, and all of death to die and be buried in it, then were there little to choose between the heathen and ourselves. This brief span of life being measured, this little and life's fitful fever being over, all, both they we, would sleep equally well the sleep that knows no waking. But "it is not all of life to live, nor all of death to die." We are destined to the infinite and the everlasting.

What, then, is the great argument for foreign missions? Is it not that the heathen are benighted and lost, and need to be saved? That they are in constant, imminent, pressing peril of being "punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from all the glory of his power," and, as nations forgetting God, of being "turned into hell?" That the gospel provides the only means of rescuing them from that unspeakable, inconceivably dreadful doom? And that its Divine Author commissions and commands those who have received the gospel and enjoy its inestimable blessings, gratefully and magnanimously to give it to all the destitute and the perishing; to go into all the world and make proclamation of it, telling all men that whosoever believeth and is baptized shall be saved, while he that believeth not shall be damned?

But in these sceptical times of ours, this great argument for missions is being shorn of its power. Indeed, with many, its force is already broken and spent. And this, we think, is the great obstacle to the successful prosecution of the missionary enterprise. Many openly oppose the Bible doctrine of future retribution, ridicule and denounce it; others secretly and silently reject it; while others, still, not a few, with commendable honor and candor express strong hope that it will be ultimately found untenable. They cry out with Tennyson,

"O yet we trust that somehow good
Will be the final goal of ill,
To pangs of nature, sins of will,
Defects of doubt, and taints of blood.

That not one life shall be destroyed,
Or cast as rubbish to the void,
When God hath made the pile complete.

——That good shall fall,
At last, far off, at last, to all,
And every winter change to spring."

And, to reinforce and strengthen their warm and generous, however illogical and unscriptural, trust, of whose validity they still stand painfully in doubt, they sophisticate their minds, and solace their hearts with the grateful and reassuring thought that, if their "larger hope" be fallacious, the light that leads astray is light from heaven, again exclaiming with the poet,

"The wish that of the living whole,
No life may fail beyond the grave,
Derives it not from what we have
The likest God within the soul?"

The greatest essayist of our times, John Foster, and, as we have just seen, the greatest poet, Tennyson, illustrious scholars and preachers like Dean Stanley and Canon Farrar,—not to speak of the famous American pulpit and platform orators, Theodore Parker, E. H. Chapin, Henry Ward Beecher, and many more,—have all been sceptics upon this subject. And the effort to break the force of the doctrine, if not utterly to set it aside, by the device of a second human probation and other sophistries, is familiar to all. The popular evangelist talks perpetually of the love and tenderness of God, hardly ever of his severity and wrath; much of the glory of heaven, little of the gloom of hell. And the pastors of the churches are becoming, in this respect, more and more like the loose and superficial evangelist.

In regard to all of which it may be summarily and justly said, that questions like this, essentially logical, judicial, and scriptural, are to be determined not by the sentiment or sympathy of the philanthropist and man of feeling, the fancies of poets, or the speculations of philosophers, but by the standards of truth and law, the sovereign and immutable decrees of God. "To the law and to the testimony: if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them."

This failure of faith in the Bible doctrine of future retribution, is, doubtless, the leading cause of the flagging zeal and the meagre contributions of so many of our people. And, unless their faith shall be renewed and revivified, we may not hope to see a sustained and triumphant progress in missionary work, and the glorious consummation of the conversion of the world. In this, as in all other things, it is true, that while all things are possible to faith, to unbelief nothing is possible.—T. G. Jones, D. D., in Western Recorder.

We find in the Christian Worker the following suggestive paragraphs taken from an article by Rev. Frank Russell, D. D.: "The Greeks had three words which in the New Testament were translated 'neighbor.' They were very much alike. One used four times means the 'person on the border;' one, used but once, means 'those living round about;' and another used sixteen times, 'those living near.' * *

"Our christian religion has no burden that can be compared with our duty to our neighbor, 'those living near,' and our christian history shows no neglect so great. Our communities do not engross the attention of the churches to any degree commensurate with this scripture teaching and command. By no means have we anywhere overdone the work in remote fields, but when we are informed that in the Sandwich Islands more than sixty per cent. of the population are, every Sabbath, in the pews of christian churches, and in the Fiji Islands, that more than eighty per cent. are communicants of christian churches, it is time that we busy ourselves in the consideration of the religious condition of 'those near us' in every community.

"The 'reforms' that have gone out from the churches have become largely independent of them, and largely antagonistic to them. Likely the churches have been too conservative. The genuineness of the kingdom was evidenced when Jesus was on earth by the poor having the gospel preached to them. Preaching and healing social disorders were to go together. But the reforms have drawn away from the churches and are seeking to heal the community, with no particular aid from the churches excepting pecuniary aid, and the great number of neighbors who seek the healing from their disorders are commonly seeking more from other directions than from the churches.

"The churches busy themselves in their own sanctuaries and about their own affairs, but mostly with affairs that do not engross the neighbors. The Christ that is the object of worship within the church walls seems other than the one who went about among people, who never found the faults of society among the toilers, the poor and the ignorant.

"The churches are divided and many stand apart while the neighbors have more and more come together for their own defense. The Apostle said he heard of divisions. Alas! it would not be hearsay now. It is a downright fact. Multiplying and fostering divisions so engrossing that the neighbors are neglected. * * The field to which the churches must turn with united forces is open. It cannot be worked without the combination of our forces. It is too large.

"The unreached neighbors are too many, and their wants too many and pressing. Nearly a dozen "people's churches" have grown already out of the cry that comes from their neighbors. (Are there any real churches of Christ that are not "people's churches?") Nearly a dozen theological seminaries are struggling for church sociology. It is forced upon the platforms of nearly all great religious gatherings. The Kingdom is coming, but it will not come until the churches open the way into the field of those living near, and love neighbors as themselves."

Variety in Serving.

The service of God demands variety. Religion does not signify that the energies of the soul should operate forever through the same channel. Duty is not an endless round of repetitions. To be zealous of good works is not to do the same thing over until it becomes mechanical. Stereotyped prayers repeated in every prayer-meeting for twelve months will bring the spiritual thermometer to zero. The brother who has nothing to tell in the love-feast but that he was converted thirty years ago discredits progressive religion. Others will think that the curse attached to adding anything to the Bible rests upon adding anything to one's experience. A fertile garden yields fruit in rich variety. Every branch of the true vine is expected to bear fruit—rich, ripe and various. A barren fig-tree is another name for a barren nature. The fate of each is the same—"Cut it down; why cumbereth it the ground?"—Rev. J. M. Hawley, in Richmond Advocate.

Shabby Ways.

We once overheard a conversation between two ladies who were returning from a large and fashionable church. The sole topic of conversation was the singing of the choir. One singer was praised, and another was criticised, and if we had not known they had been to church, we would have concluded they had been attending an opera. If it is not the singing that is talked about on the way from church, it is [illegible] weather, the bonnets, the dresses, [illegible] dulgence of such [illegible] talk, which [illegible] Sunday is doubly wrong and sinful. In best way Satan could devise to [illegible] effect of a good sermon.—E.

BAPTIST AGREEMENT IN DOCTRINE.

As a people there is, and there has been for centuries, a remarkable agreement among us in Scripture doctrine. So true is this that one who is a good judge of the creeds and faiths of the day will generally know a Baptist preacher simply by hearing him preach. This is as it should be. "If the trumpet give an uncertain sound, who shall prepare him for the battle?" There must be a uniformity of faith among a people that take the Bible alone for their guide and the foundation for their religious belief. We have claimed before what we now claim, that if all denominations of christians would lay aside formulas, written creeds, decisions of councils, &c., and make the word of God alone the rule of faith and practice, as well as the ultimate standard of appeal in deciding controverted points, there would be "one Lord, one faith, and one baptism."

For this uniformity of faith among our Baptist people we are profoundly grateful to him who has led us through the wilderness of trial and persecution to religious liberty, and to the goodly land that is now our heritage. Time is too precious, and souls too valuable, for us to be wasting time and jeopardizing souls by continual theological disputes among ourselves. We should never forget the force of the Scripture passage, "How can two walk together except they be agreed?"

From time to time there arise among us, however, young and well trained men, or older men, with a broad streak of controversy running through them; and these brethren are rather prone to disturb the peace of our sion. In one way or another they are at the bottom of the controversies that spring up here and there. Several reasons, we think, can be assigned why they pursue this course. One is that some of these men are fresh from the halls of literary institutions, where they have enjoyed first-class literary advantages, have graduated perhaps with honor, and have entered the ministry with little or no theological training. Some of these become fine preachers. They study theology after entering the ministry. But others are not so well informed, especially in theology; and carrying the habits of the lyceum, or the literary society, into the ministry, it is not long before they are handling some well established denominational doctrine with gloves off. We honor these young men, and we thank God for their talent, but we would sincerely caution them to be careful how they attack a well established denominational doctrine or tenet. There are others among us with both literary and theological training, or neither, who are disposed at times to take issue with their people on some well-defined doctrine or on points of denominational usage. We thank God for every true preacher of his gospel. To the trained and the untrained, to the learned and the unlearned, we would say be careful, brethren, how you cross lances with your brethren. The inclination to do so is at times very strong, especially among young and brilliant preachers. But we insist on caution here, for several reasons we may mention:—

One is, that the consensus of good and pious men for centuries past as to what the plain teaching of the Bible, especially on vital questions, is apt to be right. It is not reasonable to suppose that God would have given, for the guidance of his people in all ages, a book beyond the comprehension of even plain, unlettered men. Particularly is this true as to the commands he would have them obey and the statement of those doctrines on which their salvation depends. It is to be remembered, too, that some of our young men are educated partly at the expense of the horny-handed sons of toil, and it does not show a lively sense of gratitude for them to expend their intellectual and theological ammunition in trying to batter down the solid walls of their fathers' faith.

Another reason is, that when young and brilliant preachers pursue this course, it is calculated to reflect somewhat upon the school at which they were trained, to grieve the professors who taught them, and deepen the groundless prejudice against [illegible] and even literary training.

[illegible] another is, new converts love to [illegible] among whom there is harmony [illegible] does add to the prestige and [illegible] any particular denomination to [illegible] well established system of faith [illegible] people, and such harmony and [illegible] from uniformity of doctrine and practice. Controversies must come from time to time, especially between the advocates of different creeds, but they should be conducted, as a rule, by experienced and devout men. We would guard our young and brilliant preachers against them, especially when they may divide and confuse their own people.

A FEW POINTS ON THE NORTHERN BAPTIST ANNIVERSARIES.

The recent session of the different societies under which our Northern Baptist brethren are working was held in Philadelphia, Pa., May 24th to 28th. Concerning this great gathering of Baptist hosts, we make a few notes:—

When Dr. G. W. Northup, President of the Missionary Union, read the list of committees, there was not a single lay member on the list. Dr. H. L. Wayland promptly protested against laymen being ignored in the appointment. A motion to approve was promptly rejected, and the list was referred back to the president, who excused himself for neglecting the laymen in the first appointment by saying "he had but a minimum of responsibility in the matter." This is quite interesting reading. Has not the "cut and dried" method about run to seed among our Northern brethren? Is there a tendency among them toward clericalism? Why should the president of an august body leave to others the appointment of important committees? Who is the power behind the throne? Quite interesting, all this!

The Missionary Union proposes work this year involving an expenditure of $600,000. We thank God for the numbers and the liberality of Northern Baptists. They are not so numerous as Southern Baptists—especially when we count the colored Baptists—but they are superior to us in liberality. This can be easily explained. They have more means, and a larger proportion of their membership are educated men and women.

The most successful mission of this Union is the Telugu Mission. Dr. Clough, one of the most remarkable missionaries of modern times, has recently raised in America fifty thousand dollars for the enlargement of the mission work among the Telugus, and fifty thousand dollars for the endowment of a high school at Ongole. The Union is also meeting with gratifying success in Burmah, Assam, China, Africa, and in Germany, Denmark, France, Russia and Spain.

It is also gratifying to note that the receipts of the Home Mission Society were over five hundred thousand dollars. This Society made a cheering report at the recent Anniversaries, and the program of the proceedings was quite attractive. The work that this great Society is doing for the evangelization of our own home people, including of course the large number of foreigners that are yearly reaching our shores is quite important, and commends itself to all who love our doctrines and who realize the important relation that America seems to occupy to the evangelization of the world.

It gives us pleasure to note that the receipts of the Bible and missionary departments of the A. B. Publication Society were about one hundred and forty thousand dollars; and that in the publishing department the total amount of sales was largely over five hundred thousand dollars. We are glad to see the Society thus prospering, though of course it has lost some of its Southern patronage since our Convention has put its Sunday-school series on a firm basis. Well, well, there is no need of jealousy here. Our Convention is abundantly able to sustain such a series, and at the same time give the Publication Society at Philadelphia much encouragement, especially in the line of its books. The Baptist Book Concern at Louisville, Ky., no doubt is also a worthy enterprise, and should receive the encouragement of our people. It is not wisest, we think, to have all of our Sunday-school and general denominational literature prepared by one house.

Rev. E. G. Beckwith, Assistant Professor of Mathematics at Wake Forest College, died Saturday, June 25th, 1892. His body was taken through this city Sunday on the way to Clayton, where the funeral services were conducted on Monday by Rev. Dr. Wm. Royall. Brethren W. H. Pace, W. G. Upchurch and C. Durham, members of the Board of Trustees of the College, with Bro. T. H. Briggs, Treasurer, and other friends from this city and other places, accompanied the remains to Clayton. A more extended notice appears elsewhere in this paper from the pen of Dr. C. E. Taylor.

Rev. Dr. R. R. Overby will preach in the new Baptist church at Indianton, Camden county, N. C., on his next regular appointment, and on the second Sunday evening in July at half past two o'clock.

FROM OUR TRAVELLING AGENT.

EDENTON.

A ride on the boat from Franklin, Va., to Edenton affords plenty of opportunity to reflect. I was the only passenger, except a colored friend, who took passage, and he seemed to be enjoying his ride to an alarming extent, when he was informed by the colored porter that the ticket he held sent him to the other end of the boat, and this left me in undisputed charge of the cabin. However, after I had tried all the sofas and most of the chairs, examined the organ, read over the rules for pilots, and about everything else I could get my hands on, the boat had reached Tunis, and there I found Dr. Winston, who was waiting to go on our boat to Edenton. He had made up his mind to revel all alone in the memories of the scenes of his boyhood along the Chowan where he once worked among a school of herring instead of a school of North Carolina boys. But he very generously abandoned this anticipated luxury, and entertained me in a most royal manner for the entire trip to Edenton. We both felt very much at home in this pleasant little city by the water's edge—he, because he was constantly meeting his old friends and receiving the most flattering evidences of pleasure at his coming,—and as for myself, I remembered I was at the birth place of the Biblical Recorder, and where the interest and appreciation of it have been sacredly preserved as it has come down from sire to son. This, when added to a pleasant personal acquaintance with a good number, of course made me feel quite at home. The fine catch of fish here in the spring has put everything in good shape, and I heard very little complaint at the scarcity of money. In other words, the people have had unlimited coinage here because they have had something to sell. I should not wonder, after all, if one of the secrets of the want of money with a great many is, that they have nothing to give in exchange for it, and therefore don't have any.

My eyes have feasted for the last week upon the finest fields of corn I have ever seen—hundreds and hundreds of acres that nothing but floods or hail-storms can prevent from making a splendid crop. Then as you pass the wharfs on the rivers and the depots on the railrords, the platforms are crowded and jammed with potatoes, cabbages, peas and beans. The catch of fish has been unusually fine at all the fisheries in this section. This, taken with the fine prospect of the growing crop, has done much to put people in a good humor.

Dr. Pruden, who is always clever enough, but just now is unusually felicitous, has for some months been engaged in the arguing of a very important suit, which has been decided in his favor.

Several of the young men in Edenton were away on a pleasure trip to the Northwest, so we saw little of the boat sailing and other amusements, which adds so much to the pleasure of a visit to Edenton. Bro. Jones, the new pastor, has already gotton into his work. He is busy visiting and getting acquainted with his people. The brethren speak well of his preaching ability, and are delighted with his enthusiasm in his pastoral work. Bro. Jones is quite a young man. He has the best physique of any preacher in the State, and seems to be a student. This is fortunate, for the man who follows R. T. Vann, needs all the help he can get. Bro. Pendleton was very kind to me; he left his work to help me work for the Recorder.

From here I go to Elizabeth City. Somethings I saw and heard there will appear next week. J. C. C.

PERSONALS AND OTHER ITEMS.

....Dr. A. E. Owen delivered the oration at Blacksburg College the 21st inst.

....We are pained to hear of the continued serious illness of Bro. R. McBrayer.

....Rev. L. M. Curtis reports everything moving along hopefully in his part of the vineyard. He says the brethren are getting ready for the campaign of missions in the West Chowan, and the laborers seem to be busy and contented.

....The brethren had a splendid session of the Elkin Sunday-school Association at Rock Creek church, June 11th and 12th. They had fourteen schools represented and engaged Rev. E. N. Gwyn as their Associational Sunday school missionary.

....Rev. C. M. Billings of Wake Forest preached two good sermons at the Leaksville Baptist church, Sunday morning and night, 19th inst. After the service at night, the ordinance of baptism was administered by Rev. A. L. Betts to five converts.

....The rite of baptism was administered by Rev. J. H. Edwards Sunday evening at Neuse river to twenty five candidates in the presence of a very large audience. Seventeen more were baptized at the church that night.—Goldsboro Headlight, June 23.

....Rev. Dr. J. L. Burrows, "the old man eloquent," of Augusta, Ga., is visiting at Dr. J. H. Redd's, and will preach at the Baptist church next Sunday at 11 a. m. We bespeak a large congregation for the noble old soldier of the Cross.—Webster's Weekly.

....Missionaries sent out by the Baptists of the United States have received into the fellowship of Baptist churches more members than have been received into Pedobaptist churches by all the missionaries sent out by all the Pedobaptist churches in the United States.

....We were glad to see Prof. George W. Manly of Denison University. He represents the University as in fine condition, having just received an addition of $65,000 to its funds. Dr. Manly will spend his vacation among his old friends in Kentucky.—Western Recorder.

....Rev. J. W. Wildman of Virginia has accepted the call to the pastorate of the Baptist church here, recently extended to him by a unanimous vote of the congregation. He will arrive here and take charge of the church about the first of August.—Wadesboro Messenger and Intelligencer.

....We have a circular on our table announcing that the tenth general conference for the promotion of christian life and service will be held at East Northfield, Mass., from Aug. 1st to Aug. 15th, 1892. In the absence of Dr. Moody, Dr. A. J. Gordon of Boston will conduct the conference this year.

....Rev. Mr. Hildreth of Wilmington has been assisting Rev. Mr. Howell of the Baptist church at Southport, for the past two weeks, in a series of revival meetings. A number of conversions have been made and several additions to the church. The meetings have been very successful and productive of great good.—Southport Leader, June 23, 1892.

....Rev. Dr. H. T. Hudson died suddenly Monday morning, the 20th inst., at Morganton. Dr. Hudson was one of the most prominent Methodists in the State. He is the author of two very popular works on Methodist doctrine, "The Methodist Armor" and "The Shield." As editor and associate editor of the Raleigh Christian Advocate, his writings have been praised.

....On Thursday night, the 23d inst., a reception complimentary to Sisters Fannie E. Heck and Mrs. J. A. Briggs was given by the Ladies Mission Society in connection with the First church in this city. This action was owing to the promotion of the two sisters—Sister Heck being elected President of the Woman's Missionary Union at the late session of that body in Atlanta, Ga., and Sister Briggs the Vice-President from North Carolina. Only sisters were present, and the occasion was a pleasant one.

....The First Baptist church revival, which has been conducted by Rev. J. L. White for the past two weeks, increases daily. Last evening's service was attended by an audience that packed the large auditorium. The conversions amounted to between thirty and forty, and nearly two hundred people requested prayer. The subject was "The sin against the Holy Ghost," and was treated by Mr. White in a masterly way. At this service there were six baptisms. Fourteen persons joined the church yesterday.—Asheville Citizen, June 20.

"The receipts from the Nashville Christian Advocate were only one thousand and eight hundred dollars above the cost of its publication."—Arkansas Methodist. This will surprise nearly everybody but the men engaged in conducting church papers. But the purses that pay the printer and the paper-maker are seldom as fat as a fretted frog. The "Old Richmond," with Lee by the inkhorn and with Early, Smith and Cowles as managers, sunk nineteen thousand dollars despite a larger list than has now!—Richmond Christian Advocate.

....Rev. J. B. Boone made a visit to Salisbury on Sunday, the 19th inst., and preached morning and evening to his old church, which he organized in 1877, and of which he was pastor till 1883, when he left to take charge of Judson College. He reports commendable progress in the church; the building has been improved; and the church property has been greatly enhanced by the addition of a parsonage. It is located on an eligible lot, contiguous to the church, and is a well constructed home containing seven rooms. Rev. N. S. Jones, the pastor, has displayed sound judgment and good taste in the location and construction of so convenient a parsonage. He has built a pretty cage for some bird.

....On last Sunday morning Rev. J. L. White and his people entered the spacious audience room of their new building. It is the largest, as it is by far the finest, room of its kind in the State. Its capacity is fifteen hundred seats, and it should be said to the credit of the popular pastor that he filled the room at the first service, and at night had to bring in extra seats. The pews are circular and of a stately hardwood finish. There is a fine gallery in the front, but the choir is behind the pastor, while the baptistry is at his right. The whole finish is pleasing in the extreme, and cost about $35,000. Great credit is due the membership of the church for undertaking such a laudable enterprise. The Baptists of Asheville are in the front and still moving.—Asheville Baptist.

....The Baltimore Baptist of June 9th editorially denounces the men and the aims of the Baptist Congress as follows: "It is an institution gotten up by certain ecclesiastical mugwumps of the North, which they seek to palm off upon the public a lot of sickening and damning heresies. The inspiration of the Scriptures, the atoning sacrifice of Christ, the regenerating influence of the Holy Ghost, doctrines as dear to the christian as life itself, are hawked by them with as much indifference as the weather predictions of a last year's almanac. . . . It is time that the mask was torn from this child of the devil, misnamed 'Baptist Congress,' and we here and now warn the brethren of this insidious enemy. The thing for these men to do is to leave our denomination, with whose doctrines they are not in accord, and forever cease to use its name for their nefarious purposes."

Meeting of the Centennial Committee of the Southern Baptist Convention.

Dear Bro:—The Centennial Committee of the Southern Baptist Convention met in Richmond June 22d and 23. All were present except Dr. Pritchard. A resolution was passed to correct the impression that the proposed centennial fund, $250,000, ($125,000 each for the Home and Foreign Boards) for permanent work, an endowment fund, only the interest of which can be used. Calling it a permanent fund has led to this mistake. It is not an endowment, but it is for Bible translation, chapel buildings, church edifice fund, and other permanent work, as distinguished from the current work of supporting missionaries. If, however, any one shall contribute a special sum, designating it as a permanent fund, his wishes will be respected.

Dr. H. H. Harris was made chairman pro tem. during the chairman's absence abroad. Dr. T. P. Bell was made treasurer.

A programme was adopted for the Louisville meetings, which were fixed for October 2d, 3d and 4th.

Drs. F. M. Ellis, J. B. Hawthorne and W. D. Powell were chosen to travel during October, November and December to raise the $250,000, and also to arouse missionary zeal and increasing the number and size of the contributions along the regular channels. For the regular work is to be enlarged in addition to the special Centennial fund of $250,000 for permanent work.

Fraternally, T. T. Eaton.

Asst. Prof. Exum Gray Beckwith.

Sunday, June 26th, the chapel in which we gathered morning after morning during the past session, and where we worship to-day, is hung with mourning. Our beloved brother, Prof. Beckwith, is dead. Last night, about 11 o'clock, his spirit passed from earth to heaven. Our hearts are heavy, and the somber drapery is a fitting emblem of the gloom that hangs over our whole community. But as the sable hangings are interwined with white, so our sadness is mingled with sweet, inspiring, hopeful thought. For the glory of his triumph in death irradiates even our sense of irreparable loss.

Brother Beckwith had been in rather feeble health for some days, but completed the session's work, finished looking over his examination papers, attended the last faculty meetings held before commencement, and then succumbed. He was not able to attend any of the commencement exercises, and was compelled reluctantly, to call upon one of his colleagues to perform the duty which devolved upon him, as Keeper of the Rolls, in making out the term reports. But his illness (gastritis) was at no time alarming until Friday, when very serious symptoms appeared. All that skill and tenderness could do for him was done. Dr. Burke Haywood was summoned from Raleigh for consultation, but he could do nothing more than approve the remedies already prescribed.

All day Saturday he was aware that his end was near, and he looked death calmly and fearlessly in the face. His suffering at times was very great, but was patiently borne. Again and again he turned his thoughts from himself and expressed grateful recognition of services rendered by his attendants.

Before the end came, he talked freely, and, as one who knew him well says, more eloquently than he had ever heard him speak. He bid his sisters and brother and other friends good-bye, exhorting all to holy lives and to preparation for heaven. He spoke of the good influences which had been about him at Wake Forest, and expressed gratitude for kindnesses which had been shown him. His physician asked him if he was perfectly conscious of all that he was saying. He replied that his mind was entirely clear and that, if he had the strength, he could solve a problem in mathematics as well as he ever could. He was then asked if he knew of his real condition and was satisfied. He said that he knew that he was dying; that he was not satisfied with his life as a ground of confidence that he had trusted in Christ as his Savior and trusted him still; that if it were the Lord's will he would like to preach to the people again about heaven and hell and the Saviour, but that he did not fear to die. These are but a few of the expressions used by him, as reported to me, which show that his faith was strong and his hope firm as he passed out from among us.

"O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?"

These closing scenes were the natural and fitting end of a singularly pure and consecrated life. Prof. Beckwith was the son of christian parents, and was reared in the atmosphere of a sweet christian home. In early life he gave his heart to Christ and followed him faithfully to the end. From 1877 to 1882 he was a student at Wake Forest, and few students have ever been more assiduous in labor or punctual in duty. In 1882 he represented the Phi. Society as one of the anniversary debaters, and received his degree as Bachelor of Arts. During the two following sessions he was both Tutor and student. In 1884 he took the Master of Arts degree. The next session he spent at Johns Hopkins University, Baltimore, in the special study of Physics and Mathematics. During 1885–6 and 1886–7 he was Principal of an Academy at Clayton, N. C. In the latter year he was elected Assistant Professor of Mathematics in Wake Forest College, and held the position until his death. On Dec. 16, 1888, he was ordained as a minister of the gospel at Mount Moriah church, where he has since served as pastor. Other churches in Wake and Franklin counties have also enjoyed his services.

Prof. Beckwith was not a showy man, but he was true to the core. He could always be depended on as a friend and a helper. He was quiet and unobtrusive in manner, but prompt and efficient in the discharge of every obligation. Hundreds of young men who have passed under his instruction will bear testimony that he spared not himself in his efforts to help them. Everybody was compelled to respect his religion. He lived it as well as preached it. There was no taint of agnosticism in his convictions. His faith was old-fashioned in its objects as well as in its intensity. Few of us will ever forget the prayers he offered at our morning devotions in the chapel—how he seemed sometimes in utter oblivion of self, to be pressing through the presence chamber of the King right up to the throne!

How little I dreamed, last Sunday, that I should be writing this. We had hoped that he would soon be able to leave his room and carry out the plans he had formed for the summer. And now his chair and his pulpits are vacant, and his work on earth is forever done. But his influence has not ceased. In many a heart, as this letter is read by those who knew him, and as he is remembered in after days, will rise aspirations for better lives and purer characters, and many will offer the prayer, "May my last end be like his."

Prof. Beckwith's funeral will be preached to-morrow in Clayton by Dr. Wm. Royall, and his remains will be laid to rest by the side of the wife and babe who went before him to the better land.

CHARLES E. TAYLOR.

Bro. T. Dixon pleaded not guilty of libel of Koch, June 27th, before the court of general sessions of New York, and was allowed until July 5th to submit his demurrer.

"A Kindly Remembrance."

The kind way which Bro. R. H. Gower of Mount Moriah church and Sunday-school thinks of his brethren under a financial burden, is worthy of mention and imitation. His own words best explain what we wish said:

"I enclose you money order for four dollars and twelve cents. The school ordered the sixty-two cents more than the amount required for a window in the church sent also. A special prayer was also offered that God's blessing might accompany the gift. I feel that the giving was a blessing to the school, and trust the receiving may be a blessing to you and the cause at Princeton."

How kindly the brother writes, and backs up what he writes with a prayer-accompanied contribution to those in need. Bro. Gower added many other encouraging words; but the above speaks his feeling and help. I know the little true and tried flock at Princeton will join me in the desire that heaven's richest benediction may rest upon Brother Gower, his school and loved ones.

THERE ARE FORTY OR MORE SUNDAY SCHOOLS within the bounds of the Raleigh Association, and if each would follow the example of Bro. Gower's school, the aggregate would lift much of the burden resting on the tired shoulders of the little church in Princeton. Will not each superintendent bring our needs before his school and give those who will an opportunity to help us? We have spent about four hundred dollars on our house, and still lack about two hundred more to secure windows, doors, floor, ceiling and seats. We have been moving slowly on the work because we wished to keep out of debt. We are very much in need of our new house, because the house we have been and are still worshiping in will not seat more than one hundred persons when packed to discomfort; and there are more than double this number in the little town. Help, help, help, is what we need now from Sunday-schools, churches, individuals, until we say enough.

We have a very small membership, and they are very much like the Lord usually converts and calls into his service, namely, poor men and women, but they are rich in faith and good works. They have done nobly to get as far as they have with this work, and they are worthy of help. Because few in number, poor and not located in a large city, are not reasons why they should live out in the cold, or worship all their earthly existence in a little borrowed or rented house. We want a meeting of days in August, but it is not worth our while to make the effort unless we can have more room for the people. Hope the Lord will move the brethren to sympathize and help us with their money until we can get in our house. All amounts sent us will be acknowledged in the RECORDER, and the givers shall have a place in our gratitude and prayers.

Any wishing to help us, can send money to me by postal note or money order, Selma, N. C., or by registered letter to N. D. Wells, Princeton, N. C. O. C. HORTON.

Selma, June 22, 1892.

Resignation of Rev. D. W. Herring.

At the meeting of the Board held June 7th, the resignation of Rev. D. W. Herring of our Central China Mission was accepted by the Board. The circumstances leading to this action are in brief these:

Last fall Bro. Herring wrote, asking permission of the Board to return to this country. As some time would intervene before there could be a meeting of the Board, the Corresponding Secretary wrote, urging that he postpone his return, as it was certain that quite a number of missionaries would be in this country during the year, forced home by sickness. This letter Bro. Herring received. Meantime the Board met and endorsed the Secretary's action by declining the request of Bro. Herring, on the same grounds assigned by the Secretary. Bro. Herring did not await the action of the Board, but decided to come anyhow. The proper course in such case would have been to obtain the consent of the mission to his return, provided any sufficient grounds therefor could be assigned. This Bro. Herring did not do. A telegram from a station near Washington made known to the officers of the Board that he had arrived in this country. After sometime he came to Richmond and requested a hearing for certain views and plans of work which he had conceived. A large committee, composed of the members of the committee on China missions and some other members of the Board was called to give to Bro. Herring the hearing he desired. This was done for hours. He had his views printed, and on this printed matter he enlarged as he felt advisable.

The paper presented embraced about these points: A number of missionaries were to be enlisted who should go into the interior of China, live in Chinese style as to homes, clothing, &c., and by constant itineration preach the gospel far and wide, no chapels or schools were to be erected and established, and no native helpers of any kind employed.

Probably the Board might not have been unwilling for brethren to try this new plan of work, even though in their judgment it was not specially promising of permanent results. If some brethren felt that they could probably do good work in this way, it might be worth the experiment. And the Board's policy has always been to allow its missionaries the widest liberty as to methods to be adopted on their fields, believing that they are in their respective fields, other things being equal, the best judges of such methods.

But Bro. Herring added to his plan this—that these missionaries were to be directly supported by individual churches or groups of churches, entirely independently of the Board, which should have nothing to do with the money—unless to forward it to the missionary "without cost," and have no control over or direction of the missionaries. In short, the Board was to endorse and assist him in special work, which should be entirely independent of itself either as to support or direction. It must assist him in the inauguration of a work which in its ultimate results would be to disintegrate the work of the Southern Baptist Convention, and open the way for the destruction of all organized work by our denomination, by doing away with all Boards and remanding all missionary work to individual churches, dealing directly with the individual missionary—just the idea advanced by Dr. T. P. Crawford in his tract, lately noticed in the Journal, "Churches to the Front."

The next day after the presentation of these views, Bro. Herring addressed a letter to the Board, stating that if they declined to adopt his views and carry out his plan, his resignation was before them and he would consider his relations with them at an end. The Board has not held a regular business meeting since, until the one held on the 7th of June, and at that meeting, as before stated, his resignation was accepted, as the Board was not prepared to enter on any such scheme of evangelization.

The Board parts with Bro. Herring with sincere regret, as he has always been held by them in high esteem, and their best wishes will ever accompany him.—T. P. Bell, in Foreign Mission Journal.

Death of Rev. James Brumfield.

Just after two o'clock last Saturday morning this aged servant of God breathed his last. When the morning sun next beamed upon his vision it was the Sun of Righteousness flashing the white splendors of heaven upon his spirit, beating upon him, around him, and above him with great billows of surging light; and his oft-prayed petition was heard: his soul was filled "full of unutterable glory and of God."

He was an aged minister of God. For many years he has been infirm, but he spoke for the Master and prayed for his people as he could summon strength to come to his sanctuary. For several weeks his strength had been slowly failing and his end was not unexpected. Death came to him as the crowning day of his life.

Rev. James Brumfield was born July 1, 1806, in Pittsylvania county, Va. His youth was spent in that State. In early youth he went to Richmond and learned the trade of cabinet making. The first outfit of type cases used long ago in the Religious Herald office was the work of his hands. In our own office are several cases made by him many years ago for the Yorkville Inquirer. In his young manhood he became a licensed minister of the gospel and through the prime of his life and the evening of his days he proclaimed the blessed words of life from Virginia, through the Carolinas, to Georgia.

His last days were spent in retirement here with his children.

The foregoing is but an imperfect sketch. In fact, we have not attempted to make it full, since a more worthy memorial of him is contemplated in the near future.

The funeral services were conducted at the Baptist church last Sunday morning by the pastor, Rev. F. C. Hickson, in lieu of the regular service. The children, grandchildren, and great grandchildren of the deceased were present, and a vast concourse of other relatives and friends.

At the last meeting which he attended he spoke of the brightness of his hope and his nearness to the eternal shores, and closed by exhorting all his hearers to meet him there. Very appropriate then was the hymn "Meet me There," with which the service opened. The text on which the funeral discourse was based is found in 2 Timothy, 4:7, I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith.

In the course of his sermon the pastor paid a striking and eloquent tribute to the pioneer ministry—these men of God who had wrought in the very vanguard of American civilization and made possible and effective the work of Patrick Henry and Washington. The pastor also presented an outline of the labors of his co-worker in the gospel, gave an incisive analysis of his character, and in strong and pathetic words pronounced a most just and tender eulogy on his unselfish goodness.

Dr. E. E. Boyce followed with a few words, full of the hope that is in him. He spoke reminiscently of his dead friend, and mentioned especially a conversation the two held some time since under the shade of a tree. It really seemed that when the holy gates swung ajar to admit the soul of the saint just departed gleams of the heavenly glory within had flashed upon Dr. Boyce's soul and made it rejoice in hope.

Rev. C. W. Robinson followed and by means of an impressive illustrative incident paid a brief but beautiful tribute to the character of his departed friend.

The body was viewed by the friends of the family and lay in the church until the afternoon. It was then born away to Dallas where a brief service was held in the Presbyterian church. In the public cemetery of that church his ashes were laid to rest beside those of his sainted wife, there to repose in peace until the trump shall call them forth to a new and eternal life.—Gastonia Gazette.

Souppernong Union.

The Souppernong Union Meeting commenced with the church in Columbia, Tyrrell county, on Saturday before the fifth Sunday in May, 1892.

The introductory sermon was preached by Rev. J. Tynch from Isaiah 52:1.

The session was a very profitable and interesting one.

Several queries was discussed which will be profitable to the churches composing the Union Meeting. The pastor of most of the churches in the Union Meeting, Rev. W. V. Savage, is doing good work.

The next session will convene with the church on Roanoke Island on Saturday before the fifth Sunday in July, 1893. Rev. W. V. Savage is to preach the introductory sermon, Rev. J. F. Tuttle alternate.

Meeting at Southport.

We have just passed through a feast of good things from the Lord. It was a great refreshing and reviving work of the Holy Spirit.

Bro. Jenkins preached the word for one week. We then rested one week, but saw the harvest was ripening; so Bro. Hildreth came and the Holy Spirit with him, and he preached the word for two weeks. The results are, the church was revived. Six joined on profession of faith, and two by letter. Others are deeply interested in their soul's salvation. Bro. Howell baptized five happy converts last night in our new pool built in the church, and we are looking forward to the baptizing of others soon. The Lord be praised for all his goodness and mercies.

Bro. Howell is a fearless worker for the Lord. He is doing a great work for God in this field, and he needs more help than he is getting. The Mission Board has cut off from this field when at the very time there was a probability of carrying this section for the Baptists.

Bro. Howell preaches and lives the Bible, and hence Baptist principles are bound to be built up with such a godly man at the helm. Our Pedo brethren don't like him, he preaches the Bible too plain. He is making greater sacrifices than any minister in North Carolin. The Board should aid him in his work.

The church has spent a good deal of money on their house since Bro. Howell has been here. The ladies have given the church a nice communion table and silver set. We are few in numbers, but energetic for the Lord. D. I. WATSON.

Southport, June 24, 1892.

Commencement of Washington and Lee University, Lexington, Va.

Washington and Lee University completed on Wednesday, June 15th, the most successful session for twenty years; and the commencement was of unusual interest.

On Sunday, June 12, the Baccalaureate Sermon was preached by Bishop G. W. Peterkin of West Virginia. On Sunday night, the address before the Young Men's Christian Association was delivered by Senator A. H. Colquitt of Georgia.

The Annual Regatta between crews of the Harry Lee and Albert Sidney Boat Clubs took place Monday evening, and the prize cup was won by the Harry Lee crew.

The contest betwden representatives of the Graham-Lee and Washington Societies for the Society Orator's Medal occurred on Monday evening. The judges awarded the medal to Mr. J. B. Andrew, A. B., of Missouri, the representative of the Graham Lee Society.

The event of Tuesday was the address before the Literary Societies by Prof. Edward S. Joynes, LL. D., of the University of South Carolina. His subject was "The Uses of the Literary Society," and it was handled in a manner that elicited the admiration of the large and cultivated audience.

Wednesday, the 15th, was commencement day proper. Degrees were conferred by the Trustees on forty-two graduates, of whom eighteen were in the Academic and Engineering Departments, and twenty-four in the Law School. The diplomas were delivered by the President, Gen. G. W. Custis Lee. Then followed the Alumni Oration by Hon. James Hay.

An elegant banquet was given by the University to its Alumni and friends on the afternoon of Wednesday. Hon. J. Randolph Tucker, Professor in the Law School, presided, and toasts were responded to by Ex-Governor Fitzhugh Lee, Hon. H. St. G. Tucker, Hon. W. A. Anderson, Prof. E. S. Joynes, Prof. H. A. White, Prof. James A. Fishburne, Col. A. Marr, and others.

The honorary degees of Doctor of Divinity was conferred by the Board of Trustees on Revs. R. H. Fleming and J. H. Hundley of Virginia: Revs. Scolly Moore and A. M. Cackley of West Virginia; and Rev. John A. Preston of Alabama. The honorary degree of Doctor of Laws was conferred on Bishop E. R. Hendrix of Missouri; Bishop G. W. Peterkin of West Virginia; Judge W. J. Robertson of Virginia; and S. M. Jackson, Esq., of New York. COM.

Joyful Experience of Goldsboro Church.

Dear Recorder:—I write a line to tell you of our joyful experience as a church. Over eighty cards of preference for the Baptist church were handed me at the close of the Fife meeting. Fifty-nine have been received and a number of others are to follow. At least two thousand people assembled to witness the baptism in Neuse river yesterday afternoon.

I shall try to give you next week some account of the most wonderful revival meeting that it has ever been my privilege to labor in and enjoy. Yours truly,

J. HARTWELL EDWARDS.

Goldsboro, June 20, 1892.

Letter from Rev. Jonathan Wood.

Dear Bro. Bailey:—I arrived here all safe but tired out, about four weeks ago. I have accepted the charge of the church here, and am right much pleased. The Baptists here will compare well with our people in the South. I find the church here sound and quite stable.

My health, I think, is improving; indeed, I am much better than for sometime, and I am exceedingly hopeful over the prospect of being benefitted, if not cured. Bro. John E. Ray and the friends in Colorado have never told half the wonderful things that have been done here. Please send my RECORDER to this place. I can't tell you how lonely I feel out here and how much I miss the paper. I will be glad sometime to tell you more about this great country.

Love to all the brethren and remember me and my work in the West to our Father.

Truly yours, JONATHAN WOOD.

Raton, New Mexico, June 22, 1892.

Letter from Rev. C. W. Matthews.

Dear Bro. Bailey:—I have been on this field a year and a half. Looking back over the past, I can see where progress has been made. My churches are now in a prosperous condition, for which I praise the Lord.

I leave here Aug. 15th. On Sept. 27th, I expect to go to Crozer Theological Seminary. You may say in the RECORDER that between Aug. 15th and Sept. 27th, I shall be glad to aid pastors in meetings in North Carolina. They may address me at Creeds, Princess Anne county, Va.

I am truly glad that I have this little privilege of going to the Seminary. The way looks a little dark, but God whose I am and whom I try to serve, can turn the darkness into light. How consoling are his "exceeding great and precious promises,"—"I will guide thee with my counsel;" "I will guide thee with mine eye," and "I will never leave thee nor forsake thee." I must go, so pray for me. Affectionately yours,

C. W. MATTHEWS.

C. W. SCARBOROUGH, Mod. Mis. Conf.
B. CRAIG, Clerk.

It is instructive to consider the opinions of leading men of the world on religious and ecclesiastical questions. Speaking of the fact that the Baptists of New York City have not kept pace with the population, and so have been getting relatively weaker year by year, the New York Sun says some noteworthy things. The editor attributes this falling back to a "steady decay of doctrinal conviction," and to a desire for more æsthetic worship. We commend this view to the Christian Inquirer, if the editors are in such a frame of mind that they can bear reading the editorial in question. It is in the New York Sun of June 15th. Editor Dana says of the New York Baptists: "They need the spark of genuine religious faith and zeal to kindle them into activity, not the favor of men." Baptists can make but a poor fight along the æsthetic line. It takes the Gospel and earnest faith to enable Baptists to succeed. Some denominations can succeed, according to their style of success, without much religion, but it takes a good deal of sure enough, old fashioned, love-God-and-hate-the-devil religion to enable Baptists to succeed. Editor Dana, shrewd man of the world that he is, sees this, and it would be a good thing for our cause in New York if the Baptists there could be brought to realize it.

In the same connection Editor Dana speaks of the Presbyterians of the metropolis, and says: "Briggsism and Parkhurstism are destroying their vitality. We expect to see a steady defection and a rapid decline among them from this time forth. When a christian church questions the very foundations of the christian faith and tolerates the most wanton violation of the essential principles of christian ethics, its day of doom is near at hand." Again: "The Protestant outlook in New York will not be hopeful until the Protestant churches learn that only by changing the hearts of men can religious agencies be made effective." Still again: "Their first need is that they shall really and sincerely believe in the system of doctrine and the way of salvation they preach. They need a revival of true and genuine and enthusiastic faith."

This is not the language of a "narrow and bigoted zealot for orthodoxy," but the view of a clear-headed man of the world, who has evidently thought much on the subject. What is needed is not more æsthetics, or more "liberal views," but "a revival of true and genuine and enthusiastic faith." The trouble is that a man who holds to a doctrine with any firmness of grasp is considered by some to be "narrow" and "old fogy;" while the man who believes least and holds to that with least tenacity is "advanced," "liberal," "broad," "abreast with the times," etc., etc. No solid achievement is possible to persons in that state of mind. A creedless, æsthetic church is no match for human depravity. The promise is "according to your faith be it unto you," not according to your fine philosophy or your fine taste. All history is one long confirmation of this truth. Froude says: "A living, genuine belief is the best of all possessions." Sir Humphrey Davy said: "I prefer a firm religious belief to any other blessing." Even Prof. Huxley says: "No man who has studied history, or even attended to the occurances of every-day life, can doubt the enormous practical value of faith." And, of course, the stronger and firmer the faith, the better.—Western Recorder.

HIS PLACE.

"That he might go unto his own place."

The old saying that has been in the world for a long time must be a true one, at least I have never heard it disputed, and that is, "Birds of feather will flock together." Like will attract like. Bad fellows are very apt to keep company with other fellows as bad or worse than themselves. People are very certain to go where they feel free and easy. I think a man who has Christ in his house would feel very mean if he should catch himself in a whiskey-shop. I don't know, but it strikes me that he would feel about as bad as Jonah did in the whale's stomach. I think the poor fellow would soon be "vomited" out to a place that would be more congenial to that "heaven-born" principle within. A person is pretty certain to go where he has a strong desire. I think every fellow has his own place in this world, and I guess he will be certain to have it in the next. The drunkard's place is in the bar-room, and that place very often leads him to other places made up of like fellows, such as the jail and the "big pen," and he generally visits "down the country," and the poor fellow never gets able to pay his "fare" back. Some fellows have a great thirst after all kinds of amusements and worldly pleasures, and they are very glad to have church members tell them that there is no harm in a nice dance where both sexes take part; no harm in a civil game of cards, and no harm to take a middling-size dram. It appears to me that a christian in sight of Christ would not wink at such things. Some people are very hilarious when practicing gymnastics for the "old fellow." The card-player generally manages for Satan to win his soul, and the moderate dram-drinker very often prepares himself for that country where the citizens want water very much, but a single drop don't reach that hot and parched, miserable and "God forsaken" place.

I always had the idea that a christian would feel very lonesome in any place where the folks might be cutting up their capers to entertain old Satan. It seems to me that a lover of the Lord is very well satisfied when he is in company with others who are wanting to get nigh the Lord Jesus. There seems to be a harmony of spirits when such is the case. Christians are very apt to mix together, as they feel they are brethren in the Lord, are one in him, have a common interest, and heaven for their sure and final home. We generally can form a pretty good idea of the character of a man by watching the kind of company he keeps. Some people talk very nice when the sun is shining, but when night "darkens the streets," we might take them for the "sons of Belial" by their wandering forth in bad company, being filled" with strong drink and other meanness. Some church-members are well pleased when present at some social gathering, circus, or political meeting; but if they happen to "pop in" at a prayer-meeting, they look very uneasy and dissatisfied, and they appear to wish they were somewhere else.

Yes, every fellow has a place that he likes to go to in this changing world. Every one has "his own place" in this world, and has "his own place" in the next. I think a man fits himself for hell, or lets Christ fit him for heaven. Now a man may stay in good company in this world nearly all the time and be as mean as "Old Nick" wants him to be. Old Satan acts wonderfully dignified among good folks, and how he can talk religion is a sight, and he can preach big sermons, too. But he is very apt to find "his own place" in a short time. I have my mind on Judas as he kept the best company for three years that this world ever had, but I am inclined to think the poor fellow felt very much cramped. The other followers of Jesus seemed to place much confidence in Judas, making him treasurer. Some people think Judas done some big preaching, too, but I don't know about that. I guess he was very much like some preachers now-a-days going about and acting very religious, getting their names in the papers, but think more of the almighty dollar than they do of their Master and lost souls. Judas had a great itching after the "filthy lucre," and his sort have not found their own place in that other world yet. Judas didn't stay among good folks because he liked the company. I know it kept him in a very great strain to act so well for three years, but sometimes he would forget himself and show his covetous heart. I reckon Judas must have staid with Christ expecting some big office in his kingdom. I guess he thought he would "feather his nest well" if he could be treasurer or something else. My pastor says every man has the root of covetousness in his house, and the best thing to kill it out is to give. I think he is about right. Judas fooled lots of people for a while, but when he found out he couldn't do what he wanted, he flung off his mask and the people got a good look at him, and the poor fellow got very impatient to get to "his own place." He got there, and I have not heard of his getting out. I don't think that place was built for him, but I think he prepared himself for it by letting Satan be the biggest man in his house. The "bad place" was not made for man, but was made for Satan and his army, after he got very proud and thought himself bigger and more powerful than the Almighty, so much so, some say, he raised a big war in heaven, and the old rascal thought he would take the throne by storm. I suppose he soon found out the source of all power. Brother Poole says: "There is a disposition now among men to want to blot out hell, but still after all there is deep down in the heart something that say, 'if there is not a hell, there ought to be.'" I agree with the brother. It is as natural for an unsaved man to go to hell, "his own place," as it is for water to run down hill, for that is the proper place for him to go to, because his whole heart prepares him for the place. A person not washed in the "blood of the Lamb" would feel very uncomfortable in heaven; he would feel all out of place, and heaven would be a hell to him.

We are all living for heaven or hell. Both places begin in this world. Every one goes to "his own place" when he leaves this world—the place to which he is fitted to go. It will be as natural for the redeemed to go to "his own place," heaven, as it is for the "sparks to fly upward," because the heaven-born nature within can't be satisfied with anything short of a fullness of Christ. He is the great magnet and will draw all to him that are a part of him, no difference how small the ones may be. The eternal fitness of things has decreed that like will attract like, that every one goes to "his own place."

Where will your place be?

First of a Series of Books on Old Testament.

The Preacher's Complete Homiletic Commentary on the Old Testament (With Critical and Exegetical Notes). By Twenty Distinguished Homilists. Vol. I., Genesis. By Rev. J. S. Exell, M. A., and Rev. T. H. Leale, A. K. C. Cloth, 8vo, 747 pp. Price $3 00. New York: Funk & Wagnalls Company.

This is the first volume of an extensive work of twenty volumes on the Old Testament, printed from imported plates obtained from the publishers in London, where the entire work has been issued after years of preparation. In this great Commentary, by various authors, is found a sermon outline or homiletic suggestion on every paragraph or verse of the Old Testament that can be turned to use in the preparation of a sermon. Abundant choice selections of illustration, etc., from many eminent sources other that the authors of the volumes, are the volumes, are also given. Except in some introductory, critical, and explanatory notes preceding each chapter, no foreign words, such as Hebrew and Greek, are used. The type is large and clear, and books convenient to handle.

Dear Shut-In Friends:—As I read your letters each month, my heart goes out in sympathy to you, and knowing so well how hard it is to bear all this pain and weariness, I feel as though I must tell you of that wonderful curative agent, the Electropoise, which is so successful in bringing strength to long unused limbs, and peace and quiet to tortured nerves. Perhaps I can best tell you what it will do by telling you about some of the cases I have used it on. One, a little girl who had hip disease. She had had it four years, and was almost a helpless cripple. When first taken sick, she was under the care of one of the most successful physicians in New York State for several months; he kept her on a stretcher for sixteen weeks with a four-pound weight on her foot. Then he and six other prominent physicians pronounced her incurable. By the treatment with the Electropoise the limb was strengthened and lengthened, it has filled out with hard, solid flesh, and she is fast outgrowing her lameness.

Another case is a man sixty-five years old, bent nearly double and drawn nearly out of shape with rheumatism. He suffered terribly, could not labor or walk but little. Now after treatment with the Electropoise, he can straighten up, work all day and walk without any pain. I have other cases of rheumatism, spinal injuries, nervous troubles, &c., that I am treating, and knowing how much I help them, I hope that none of the "Shut-in" Friends will give up till they have tried the Electropoise, for it will do all that is claimed for it.

Very truly, MRS. K. M. ELLIOTT.

For all information regarding the Electropoise, write to the Atlantic Electropoise Co., Washington, D. C.

"Natural Fruit."

A farmer who had neglected the mental and moral training of his only boy, and excused himself for it on the ground that the boy would make a stronger man if left to form his own character, had his attention called one day to the one tree in his orchard that bore "natural fruit." It had grown up unwatched and uncared for; it was broken by the storms and scarred by rude treatment; it had never been grafted or pruned, and the result was a tree that marred the beauty of his orchard, and fruit that could only be used in making vinegar. Looking upon it with disgust, he thought: "If my boy is left to himself, he will one day bear fruit like that; and, as in the case of the tree, the fault will be mine. He needs grafting and pruning, and a good rich soil in which to grow, and loving care and protection; one natural fruit tree is enough. God help me to be a better husbandman and father."—Exchange.

Many a poor sufferer who submits to the surgeon's knife, in consequence of malignant sores and scrofulous swellings, might be cured, without an operation, by taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla. This remedy expels from the blood all the impurities by which disease is generated.

Fear of Sin.

One of the evidences of regeneration is a fear of sin. Little regard is paid to the earthly parent who is ready to overlook offences. But God's mercy leads men to fear him. "There is forgiveness with thee, that thou mayest be feared." When God forgives, we are impressed by the sense of his holiness, and we see sin in its most terrible aspects. When we realize that without the shedding of the blood of his Son there is no remission, then sin becomes to our view exceeding sinful, and we shrink from violations of God's law.—Christian Inquirer.

POKINE.

I have used the within remedy (Pokine) with great success. JAMES H. LASSITER.

I have used the Pokine Remedy (prepared by W. T. Cheatham, Jr.) in case of Sciatica with the result of positive relief in a few hours, and believe if used as directed is will effect a permanent cure.
J. L. H. MISSILLIER.

MARCH 6, 1891.

For the benefit of the public, I unhesitatingly recommend Cheatham's wonderful remedy, "Pokine," to all sufferers of rheumatism. It has produced marvelous results in my case. I was a sufferer of the malady for five years, and after taking a few bottles was entirely cured.
Very respectfully,
W. W. DOWTIN.

HENDERSON, N. C., March 7, '91.

MR. W. T. CHEATHAM:
Dear Sir—My wife was down in bed with rheumatism, and the Pokine I bought of you gave her relief after taking four doses. She has not been troubled since. It is the best medicine she ever took for rheumatism. Respectfully,
ZACK DAVIS.

MR. W. T. CHEATHAM, JR.:
Dear Sir—I have been afflicted with rheumatism time and again, for the past thirteen years. I have received more relief from Pokine than any medicine I ever took, and therefore take great pleasure in recommending it to all sufferers of rheumatism. Very respectfully,
F. G. MITCHELL.

JANUARY 19, 1891.

W. T. CHEATHAM, JR.:
Dear Sir—I desire to say that in January last I was down with rheumatism; my suffering was great, and I was completely prostrated. One bottle of your Pokine completely relieved me, and I have not had any rheumatism since. My son also was relieved of rheumatism by Pokine.
Yours truly,
CHARLES G. BURROUGHS.

HENDERSON, N. C., Sept. 16, '91.

MR. W. T. CHEATHAM, JR.:
Your rheumatic cure, Pokine, has completely cured me. I. M. GREEN.

MR. W. T. CHEATHAM, JR., Henderson, N. C.:
Dear Sir—Being asked my opinion of your rheumatic remedy, Pokine, will gladly state I deem it the only medicine of its kind on the market that will accomplish that which is exclusively claimed for it. Being a sufferer of rheumatism, I consequently tried many remedies, until finally relieved by Pokine. Very respectfully,
J. A. KELLY.

Sunday-school Convention.

The Brier Creek Sunday-school Convention met with Mt. Vernon church, North Iredell, May 28th, 1892, at 10 o'clock a. m. The Convention opened by reading and singing, and prayer by Rev. J. P. Gwaltney.

On motion, the officers were elected, viz: Rev. I. Holler, chairman; M. A. Mitchell, secretary.

Reports from the various schools were brought forward and read—from Cranberry, Damascus, Grassy Knob, Holly Springs, Lewis, Mt. Pisgah, Mt. Vernon, New Prospect, Shady Grove, Sweet Home, Shiloh, Rocky Springs, Rock Hill, Union, Zion, and a branch school of Mt. Vernon—all of which showed excellent work on the part of said schools. There were verbal reports from Mt. Sinai and Denniville.

The queries were considered and discussed respectively by the leaders, W. A. Myers, W. M. Goforth, R. W. Wooten, J. P. Gwaltney and T. W. Paris. In the discussions other speeches were made by Rev. I. Holler, J. E. Myers, M. A. Mitchell and T. L. Jennings. The speeches were interspersed with good singing, which made the meeting one of much interest.

Rev. S. S. Goforth, one of the committee, reported on the propriety of having colportage instituted among us. The matter was deferred indefinitely.

The chairman appointed S. S. Goforth, W. A. Myres and W. A. Goforth a committee on queries, who are expected to report at the Association.

No other Convention will be held this year, but Sunday-school mass-meetings will possibly be held with some of the churches.

Rev. J. P. Gwaltney, the excellent pastor, in co-operation with the church at Mt. Vernon, well did their part in making this an interesting and beneficial Convention.

There was preaching Sunday by Rev. W. A. Myers, after which they held the church communion.

Can't Help It.

A little girl often followed her father around, when he came into the house with this question, "Father, what can I do for you?" And never was she happier than when he gave her something to do for him. Once he said, perhaps tired with her asking, "Child, why do you ask that question so much?" "O father," she answered with tears in her eyes, "Because I can't help it." It was love that put the question; and her readiness to undertake whatever he set her about, was proof of the genuineness of that love; she wanted always to be doing something for her father.

People sometimes are in doubt whether they love God or not. I will tell them how they can find out. Are you often asking your Heavenly Father the same question this little child was asking her earthly father? Is it one of your first thoughts, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" And do you keep on asking, because you can not help it? It so fills your heart that it must come out. And you not only ask, but are on the look out all the time to hear what he says, and do what he bids. This is the way to know whether you love God or not. And if we love him, and trust in the Lord Jesus Christ who died for us, we shall keep his commandments—that is, do what he says. This is the proof of the genuineness of our love. Can not all the children try themselves by this test, and learn if they really love God?—S. S. Baptist.

Recommendations of Foreign Board.

The following are the recommendations of the Foreign Board to the Woman's Missionary Union, S. B. C., adopted at Atlanta, May, 1892, as a basis of Foreign Mission work for the present Conventional year:

1. That all the female missionaries of the Southern Baptist Convention, in foreign lands, be presented to the Woman's Missionary Societies for their support. Number, 54. Total of salaries, $32,400.

2. That Woman's Mission Societies assist in collecting the Centennial offering of $125,000 to be expended in chapel building, Bible translation, and other permanent work; and that this general effort be considered as including the special effort already making for chapel in Rio Janeiro, Brazil.

3. That the object for the next Christmas offering be the increase of missionary force in Japan.

The following letter from the Foreign Board more fully explains the purport of the recommendations:—

RICHMOND, VA., 1892.

To the Woman's Missionary Societies:—

DEAR SISTERS:—The Foreign Mission Board has asked several things of you this year, some of which are quite large. And we made these large requests because we have confidence in your zeal, enthusiasm and consecration to the work and, as well, in the wisdom and enterprise of those who have the direction of your work. Our first request of you is that you will provide enough money to meet the salaries of all the lady missionaries on our various fields of labor. This will involve the raising of something over $32,000, as our force now stands, with a steady increase, as new missionaries are from time to time sent out. This may seem a large sum, but not an impossible one to those who have made up their minds to attempt great things for God, even while they expect great things from him—expectation and effort mutually reaching upon each other. We trust that this general work of providing for the current expenses of our missions will not be lost sight of in the special efforts that are to be made during the year. If we should have a permanent fund in hand at the end of the year, yet have to report a large deficit on our current work, it would be very unfortunate. Please remember that all along through the year your missionary sisters will have to be fed and clothed and housed as every year.

Another request we have made of you is that you will assist in raising the $125,000 special fund, which is needed by our Board for the erection of church houses. Our little bands of brethren and sisters, in many places, are destitute of the church home which we find so sweet a place as, from Sunday to Sunday, we gather to worship God. A part of this fund we shall need for Bible and tract work,—the work in foreign fields which at home is done by our Sunday-school and colportage Boards, with the additional expense attached to translating and printing. Still another part of the $125,000 we shall need for our permanent work, embracing a large number of items that constantly demand attention at our hands. Prominent among these ought to be a permanent invested fund to be held as an emergency fund by the Board,—interest only being used for current expenses—to save us from possible financial disaster in times of money stringency. Your good business sense will show you the necessity for this.

Our third and last request of you is for a Christmas offering this year for Japan. This is our baby mission, but is rapidly becoming a quite vigorous baby. Our two missionary brethren and their wives have just made their location, after learning the language, and already God is giving them blessing. Listen to Mrs. Brunson: "We are thankful to be able to send you good tidings. Sixteen men and women have been baptized and come into our ranks since the first of January. There are about twenty-five church members in all. There are others awaiting baptism and twenty-three or more enquirers. We have regular work in three cities and are preparing to go immediately into two other places."

These brethren are at work in a new field, little worked by any christians, in the island of Kinshin, where are upwards of 9,000,000 souls. They ask for seven men and some ladies to occupy the fields now open. The mission ought to be made a strong one at once. A strong mission now insures, under God, large results later on. Will you help us on the next "Gift-giving" day, by gifts to Jesus for this work?

Praying God's blessing upon our common work, yours and ours, I remain, for the Board, yours sincerely,

T. P. BELL.

Moravian Missions.

By the rescue of 1,500 souls from heathenism in the course of the past year, the number of converts reaches nearly 90,000. The income was £8,866 in 1890. There are 135 stations of the missions in Greenland, Labrador, among the North American Indians, in the West Indies, America, South Africa, Australia, North West India, Thibet and Alaska; the congregations numbering 87,263, of whom 40,000 are British subjects; of European and native missionaries, 355 are employed in the several fields. In 113 Sunday-schools are some 15,000 scholars, and in 285 day schools 20,629 children are under instruction. Four young Moravian missionaries are on their way to the newly established station on Lake Nyassa.

The Close of Judson's Life.

It is well known that Dr. Judson while in this country was ill at ease, and longed to be gone from scenes which distracted his mind from the work that had now become engrossing. The country was strange to him after an absence of nearly a generation; the men whom he met were personally strangers to him; even those with whom he had corresponded during the early days of his residence in the East had gone to their rest, while few of those connected with the American Board when he sailed from Salem were alive; he was somewhat averse to public meetings, in which he could take no part on account of the weakness of his voice; the strain of eulogy and laudation which was so common in all references to him and his work was distasteful to him; he was not as free as he wished to push on the work of the dictionary, and he was eager to complete his arrangements for the care of his children, and go back to the country of his choice and the scenes hallowed by trial, suffering and holy companionship, that he might finish the work which could be done better in Burma than anywhere else.

The story of his marriage to the gifted lady whose genius was exalted and refined by her association with him, need not be told here. She commemorated him as her "Angel Guide" in one of the sweetest domestic poems in the English language, and also contributed some of the most valuable personal notices of his character, opinions and work, which enrich the pages of the biographies of President Wayland and of his son, Dr. Edward Judson. Nor need I dwell longer on the brief years spent in suffering and toil after the return to Burma. The wiry frame was losing its tension, the step was becoming unsteady, the strength of former years was wasted, but he would not rest, and he could not die till his great work, the Burmese Dictionary, was in such a state of forwardness that his death could not diminish its value. And so he worked early and late until the spring of 1850 saw the dictionary practically completed. Alas for us that his life and his work were destined to close together! He consented to take a sea voyage in the hope of recruiting his wasted energies, but they were too far spent. The light flickered faintly in the socket, and finally, on April 12th, went out. So he literally died at his post, with the harness on. He died comparatively young, but if it be true that his brief stage expands into immortality. He went to the East to found a church of converted natives, and to translate the Bible into their language. The church that he founded abides on the Rock of Ages, and the word which he translated for its direction, upbuilding and sanctification, liveth and abideth forever.

"That life is long which answers life's great end,"

Most impressively are we reminded by the career of Adoniram Judson how great a thing a human life may be when consecrated to duty; how lofty in aim, how grand in action, how heroic in endurance, and how wide and high and beneficent in results. What monument does he need? His deeds will keep his memory fresh through all coming generations. Judson reared his own fittest memorial, of material more enduring than marble. No words of eulogy can add to the measure of his fame, which will grow with the lapse of years, while the results of his work will go on augmenting to proportions which only eternity can disclose.—Exchange.

Intelligent Home Testimony.

BURLINGTON, N. C., July 11, 1891.

After using the Electropoise for a month or two I can safely say that it is a great remedy for weakness and general debility. It certainly has helped me greatly.

MRS. H. B. EULISS.

The great bugbear of the medical profession is the disease known and classed as Female Complaints. They have long since been given by the general practicioners to the specialist, and yet how many women have sought and sought in vain for a cure that would relieve their ailments. In no class of disease has the Electropoise been more successful than in the treatment of chronic diseases of females, cases which have been pronounced as absolutely hopeless, and which have been treated by the most eminent physicians in the country; both with medicine and knife. Of these diseases, Uterine and Ovarian troubles largely predominate, and to the tonic effects of the Electropoise the success of the treatment must be laid. If the muscles of the parts affected are relapsed, artificial supports are worse than useless, affording only the merest temporary relief, usually followed by excrutiating agony when removed even for a brief space of time. Neither can drugs permanently cure with any degree of certainty and hence recourse is had to the surgeon's knife, in spite of the fact that medical statistics show that the fatality in operations of this discription is fearfully high, especially when the disease is located in the ovaries. Even the surgeon's skill, however, is not a radical cure, and many ladies have left the operating table invalids for life. The frequency and gravity of these diseases are not to be overlooked or neither should any remedy which can relieve or cure them be passed by without an investigation into its merits. In treatment by the Electropoise there are many points to be considered, first the theory, which is established upon scientific and philosophical facts, drawing as it does from the storehouse of nature, in the surrounding atmosphere, the vitality, without which, a cure cannot be effected. Next, the convenience of the treatment, without drugs, without mechanical appliance or support, it can be applied day or night. Next, the economy of the treatment. There are no doctors' bills to pay. No druggists' account to settle. No patent appliances, loaded down with royalties, to be bought. None of the incidentals which amount to a considerable sum to be purchased. All of the above are done away with, but the most important fact to be considered are the definite and certain results of the treatment. The Electropoise cannot be properly classed as "electrical." It does not generate electricity, nor does in conduct this force to the person under treatment. It is devoid of current, shock, and usually sensation, until the symptoms of change arise. Even if connected with a battery no current could be maintained as only a single cord is used, making it impossible to complete a circuit. A current would destroy the wonderful effects belonging to the Electropoise. It causes the absorption of oxygen through the skin and membranes of the patient, attracting hydrogen and causing combustion in the tissues of the body which generates vital force and stimulates every function of the body. We prefur not to publish testimonials of diseases of this private nature, but if you will call on us we will gladly give you advice and information relative to your own case and produce evidents of the most wonderful cures affected in others. We hold all consultations strictly confidential and never use name or testimonial except by permission.

HILLSBORO, N. C., June 25, 1890.

I have used the Electropoise in my family for over a year and am thoroughly convinced it is the surest cure for any disease that is curable, and it is better for women than anything else. I use it for every ailment and it has always given relief at once. I can recommend it to any one who is sick.

Very respectfully,
MRS. JOHN KIRKLAND.

STATESVILLE, N. C., June 13th, 1892.
MR. JOHN N. WEBB,
Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir:—For the past two years I have been a great sufferer from Asthma; my first attack lasted five months, second eight months. Two of our best doctors did all they could for me but could do me no good. I had been confined to my room and bed for about seven months when a friend brought me an Electropoise, but my faith was'nt as large as a "mustard seed," in fact I told my wife the next morning to take it back to your agent, that I would not use it; but after a considerable amount of begging I consented to try it longer. Next morning our little boy, five months old, was taken very sick with bronchitis, so bad that he would not notice anything, and had a high fever. I treated his bed according to directions and placed him in it and in fifteen minutes his fever fell six degrees and his pillow was wet with perspiration, slept nicely for an hour, awoke seemingly as bright as ever, next day as well as he ever was. Two of my neighbors children were taken the same way and were sick for two or three months. You may be sure my faith was as large as a mountain and I went to using the 'poise myself and in two months I was well, and as I have said to friends that ask me about it, it is the wonder of wonders. Please excuse this long letter and if you thing any part of it worth using as a testimonial you are welcome to it.

I have many acquaintances all over the country and if any should see this and need the Electropoise I hope they will not hesitate but get one at once. Hoping the Electropoise Company may succeed far above their expectations, I am, yours truely, THAD. SUMMERS.

For all information regarding the Electropoise, write to the Atlantic Electropoise Co., Washington, D. C.

The Dixon Case.

As most people know, Rev. Thomas Dixon, jr., of this city, has been prosecuted by Excise Commissioner Koch, for alleged criminal libel. This Koch has been noted as one of the worst of the Tammany officials with whom our city has been cursed; he stands charged, in judicial utterances, with wilful refusal to do his duty; and he was indicted for malfeasance in office, escaping trial only by a technicality. Mr. Dixon's description of Koch, which was purely incidental to his main purpose, may have lacked something in discretion, but he only said in Dixonese what Judge Barrett and other authorities have published to the world in judicial opintons. It is hard to believe, therefore, that the courts will pronounce his words libellous, when he can so easily prove them to be true, and when they were evidently spoken with a good motive. The law says that under such circumstances utterances damaging to a man's reputation are not libellous.

The preliminary hearing was held last week before Justice Grady, to determine whether there is sufficient evidence of a crime having been committed to hold Mr. Dixon for the action of the Grand Jury. And who is Justice Grady? A notorious Tammany politician—one of Koch's "pals," in short—who made himself so odious some years ago that Mr. Cleveland, then Governor, adopted the extraodinary expedient of writing a letter to the then Tammany boss, asking as a personal favor that Grady be retired from public life. This was done, and New York had a respite from Grady until Mayor Grant appointed him Police Justice, with a salary of $10,000 a year—a fair proportion of which, doubtless, goes to the Tammany campaign fund. This is the man before whom a reputable minister is compelled to plead his case. Why, it is as if Mr. Dixon had denounced a notorious buncosteerer, and was arraigned for his offence before a fellow-craftsman for trial. Such is the position to which the rule of Tammany has brought New York. No one can characterize the criminals that rule us as they deserve without danger of being haled before their fellow-criminals who have been made judges to answer for his offence.

Justice Grady showed that his "pal" Koch had not trusted him in vain. Mr. Dixon's counsel had provided plenty of justification for all that had been said against Koch in the shape of judicial opinions and other public documents. The learned Justice refused to admit any of this evidence, on the ground that only the decisions of Judge Barrett and others were competent testimony, and that no one had a right to use a judicial opinion to the defamation of another's character. This is a strange law, even for a Tammany police court—that the use of judicial opinions may be defamation of character and is not protected by law. If this ruling of Grady's ever gets before Judge Barrett, or any other Supreme Court Judge, it will be interesting to note what they have to say on this new reading of the law of libel.

Of course, the Tammany officials will in the end accomplish nothing by this prosecution. They can put Mr. Dixon to some temporary inconvenience and cause him some expence; but they will only make themselves more ridiculous than ever, establish more fully in the eyes of the public their own ill-desert, and promote that revolt of public spirit which will soon result in the downfall of the Tammany rule. That organization has enjoyed so long an impunity that it fancies that it owns the city. Some of its members forget what the more astute of its leaders know, that its power results only from the indifference and disunion of the good citizens of the town. A united and determined minority can almost always rule, save in those exceptional crises when the majority are forced by self-interest or in self defence to unite; then they become irresistible. One of those crises seems to be rapidly approaching in New York. It needs only a few more examples of reckless tyranny, of cynical defiance of public sentiment, of persecution of any and all who try to remedy things, to rouse the citizens of New York to united action. They only need to be roused to administer to Tammany a much needed defeat, and to dislodge that rapacious organization from the fat offices on which it feeds and by the proceeds of which it is held together. The persecution of Mr. Dixon will do much in this direction.—Examiner.

NEW YORK, June 22.—Justice Grady rendered his decision this morning in the case of Rev. Thomas Dixon, jr., who was arrested on the complaint of Excise Commissioner Joseph Koch, who charged him with criminal libel. The Rev. Mr. Dixon is held for the grand jury. He was, however, paroled in the custody of his lawyer. Justice Grady said he failed to find during the examination that Koch was individually responsible for the delay of the Excise Board in giving its decision upon saloons that were open on election-day.

NEW YORK, June 24.—The grand jury this afternoon found an indictment against Rev. Thomas Dixon, formerly of North Carolina, for an alleged criminal libel upon Excise Commissioner Koch. The libelous matter, which was published in circular form and also delivered during the course of the sermon preached May 29, declared that "Koch was the biggest scoundrel of all the board" and "should be in the penitentiary."

"Doctrinal Sermons."

Bro. Bailey:—I want to give my hearty approval of your editorial on "Doctrinal Sermons." I know from practical experience that you are correct in what you say. I remember on one occasion in my pastorate of a church, that for some time before I was called as pastor of that church the brethren had permitted a preacher of another denomination to have monthly appointments, and he had organized a church in the same church building. This was the condition of the church when I was called as pastor. Being young, and not knowing just what to do, and how to do it, I went to an old minister and asked him to tell me what to do, and he said, "Preach a doctrinal sermon and bring them in or drive them out." I went also to another minister and asked him to tell me what to do and how to do it, and he said, first get them to love me and to love to hear me preach, and then in my sermons make a strong point of doctrine and preach it in the love of the truth, and because it is the truth. I did as the last brother told me, and at the close of my protracted meeting that year, I baptized all of them but two.

I was called to the charge of a church, and the congregation at first was quite small, but the third or fourth appointment the house was packed, and the minister in charge of the church in the community of another denomination, being moved by a feeling of jealousy, made a strong talk on baptism, communion and final perseverance of the saints.

When I went to my next appointment, the brethren who had heard him began to tell me what he said. I said to them to keep quiet, and that his talk would be the cause of my baptizing some of his members. On my next appointment I preached a sermon from 1 Peter 1: 5, "Who are kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation ready to be revealed in the last day." I did not mention any denomination by name while preaching, and it was one of the strongest doctrinal sermons I have ever preached. At the close of the discourse, and as I was coming out of the pulpit, one of the leading members of this minister's church came to me and complimented my sermon highly, and that year I baptized several of the leading and best members of his church.

I commenced preaching in a settlement where there were no members of the church of which I was a minister, and at the close of the meeting I opened the doors of one of the churches of which I was pastor, and received members and baptized them into the membership of that church. The next year we organized a church. This being done, I felt it to be my duty to tell the people what was the doctrine of the church thus constituted in their midst, in order that they might know what it was. I preached a number of sermons on the doctrine of my church, and that church to day is one of the best of our country churches.

When, where, to whom, for what, in what spirit, and how to preach, are points that should be considered well before preaching what are called "doctrinal sermons."

DIED.

BAZEMORE—Mrs. Artimecia Bazemore, widow of the late Jesse Bazemore, fell asleep in Jesus, from an attack of paralysis of the brain, at her home in Bertie county, N. C., in the sixty-third year of her age. Sister Bazemore had been a devoted member of the Baptist church for forty years. She leaves three sons and four daughters and a host of friends and relatives to mourn her departure.

L. M. CURTIS.

WIXON—Died, Sunday, June 19th, at 3 a. m., Willie McDermott, infant son of Samuel and Ella Wixon, aged seven months and seventeen days. Little Willie heard the voice of Jesus saying, "Suffer little children to come unto me," and he has gone home to God. Services were held at the residence of the parents Monday, June 20th, at 10 a. m., conducted by the writer, assisted by Rev. Mr. Proctor, and the little body was laid to rest. May the divine blessing rest upon the bereaved.

C. J. JONES, JR.

Edenton, N. C., June 20, 1892.

SCOTT—On Thursday night, June 16th, 1892, our Sister H. P. Scott departed this life in the sixty-sixth year of her age, leaving to mourn her loss several affectionate children and many other relatives, and a host of friends. For more than two years she had been a sufferer, and death was really a relief to her. More than forty years ago she gave her heart to Christ and joined the Freewill Baptist church. Twenty years ago she united with the Missionary Baptist church of La Grange. Since her conversion she has lived a devoted christian, and while we shall miss her on earth, we rejoice to feel that our loss is her eternal gain. May God in mercy bless and comfort the sorrowing and bereaved children.

G. L. FINCH.

WHITE—Mrs. Olelia White entered into rest after a painful illness of ten days, in the thirtieth year of her age, leaving the fragrance of a good name and a noble record of christian service and devotion. She leaves a husband, two little children, and many friends and relatives to mourn her departure. "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord."

C.

PARKER—Fell asleep in Jesus, near Jackson, Northampton county, N. C., June 12th, 1892, our dear and beloved sister Sarah J. P. Parker, aged fifty-three years. Sister Parker was baptized into the fellowship of Mt. Carmel Baptist church when quite young, and there remained a consistent member until the hour the death warrant came and summoned her to her final and everlasting place of rest. She leaves a devoted husband and a number of relatives and friends to mourn her loss. She was a kind and affectionate wife. She was kind in disposition and obliging to her neighbors and friends. She was ever ready and willing to do what she could to relieve those who were in trouble and distress. She will be sadly missed by her husband and the many friends who knew her. During the number of weeks of her illness she seemed to be conscious of her death. She would occasionally call her husband to her bedside and talk to him and tell him that she would soon be gone to her long sweet home. She told some of her friends and relatives to meet her in heaven. She said all was well, and that she would soon be at home where there was rest for the weary. She lived the life of an exemplary christian. Her christian character was without spot or blemish, hence we have the assurance that she is in the land of bliss, where there is no more sorrow nor pain or death, and where parting is not known.

A fruit and vegetable train of the Atlantic Coast Line was wrecked near Weldon one night recently. Ten cars were demolished and potatoes, apples and other fruits were scattered in every direction. The loss was considerable, reaching into the thousands.

Capt. C. M. McLoud, a well known citizen of Asheville, died at his residence in that city on the 20th inst. Capt. McLoud served one term in the legislature, and was for a time chairman of the Democratic Executive Committee.

The Raleigh News and Observer says that a few days ago at Hillsboro a young colored boy about fifteen years old drowned himself in very peculiar manner. He had stolen some money from Mr. Parks, of that place and on being detected he ran to a pond and divesting himself of his clothing jumped in and drowned himself.

Two brothers, living in the western section of Stokes county, went to New York three weeks ago after green goods, and were met at the depot by the man they were looking for. They were conducted through miles of streets to an obscure building, and were taken into a room one at a time and relieved of $300 each at the point of a pistol. —Charlotte News.

At Lenoir Monday, the 19th, a colored well digger, started to clean out a well. While he was near the bottom of the well the rock wall caved in, and he was buried thirty-five feet under ground. A large force of hands set to work at once to relieve him. At intervals they could hear him speak. After eight hours of hard work they drew him up alive and almost unhurt. The wall caved below and above him, but two large rocks formed an arch just over his head, which kept him from being crushed.

The Home Circle.

The Morning Time.

The world was new in the morning time
And movement was rhythm, and sound was rhyme,
And we never dreamed of a sunnier clime
  Than our natal spot of earth;
The arching sky had a sweep sublime,
And bobolink's song was a sylvan chime,
And stars were lights God set to shine,
  O'er places of good men's birth.

In the morning time Jack and the Bean
Were gospel truth, and giants, I ween,
Were as real things as ever were seen
  By any human eyes.
And fairies, dancing around their queen,
In robes of flashing silvery sheen,
Were sprites that lived in the woodlands green
  On the borders of Paradise.

Our childish faith was content to think
That dew was made for the flowers to drink,
That the mountains blue were the furthest brink
  Of the universal world;
That garden odor was the breath of the pink,
That darkening night was the sun's huge wink,
As behind the hills we saw him sink
  Like a giant downward hurled.

In the morning time the thunder's peal
Was naught but the rumbling chariot wheel
Of the storm king's march for woe or weal
  Across the vaulted sky;
The rainbow arch was a solemn seal,
Whose blessed assurance all might feel
That the wrathful storm would bless and heal
  All things ready to die.

In the morning time the whispering trees
Were talking together about the breeze
That swept from the land where all things freeze,
  And prophesied of death;
Then mermaids lived in unknown seas,
And grandfather's stories were sure to please
As, with eyes wide open, about his knees,
  We listened with bated breath.

Oh, the morning time! the morning time!
When faith was simple and trust sublime,
And we never dreamed of a sunnier clime
  Than our natal spot of earth;
Then all things living were half divine,
And every dell was a sylvan shrine,
And stars were lights God set to shine,
  And life was endless mirth.

Does it Hurt a Boy?

"Does it hurt a boy to read novels?"

Take a clean sponge and dip it into a running gutter, and what is the result? The sponge can be cleaned and purified again, but only after much labor.

The human mine, my lad, is a sponge, and it soaks up the good, bad and indifferent with the same relish.

The great trouble with novels is the false ideas and vicious theories. It is the same with all serial stories in the so called boy's papers, and it is so to a certain extent in many of the boy books. In the first place, the boy, no matter what his age, is always made to perform feats of valor, which common sense teaches you is impossible. He never acts or talks like a boy. His adventures as a hunter, detective or runaway, are too improbable.

Nevertheless, as you read you find yourself half believing, at least, and the next thing is to wonder why you can't be a hero. The story makes you dissatisfied with school and home and family government, and the first thought is to run away or plan some adventure. Even if you say to yourself that you won't believe a word of the story, the mind will still soak up many of the false theories and absurd ideas, and later on in years it may cost you something to get rid of them.

If a stranger should tell you that as he was passing over a certain bridge spanning a creek, he saw a gold watch lying in the water, but was in too great a hurry to stop, you would probably believe the story. If you had positive proof that the man was a brazen liar you would still find yourself wondering how deep the water was, who lost the watch, and whether any one had secured it. Your common sense tells you there are no such beings as ghosts, but you have read and heard of them, and probably expected to feel them clutching at your throat.

A story which is put forth for a boy to read should, although it may be purely fiction, contain nothing exaggerated or improbable. The hero may be brave without overdoing the thing. You may find in the paper almost any day instances where boys have displayed great heroism at fires, or have risked their lives to save others. These things are possible and probable, but this making a boy drive off a band of Indians, or break up a gang of robbers, or capture a ship load of pirates, is against common sense.

Let me instance some other evils. In a book recently published by a very respectable Eastern house, and having for its author a person with a "Rev." before his name, he tells about a sailor falling down the "middle companionway." He meant hatchway, but some day some one of his boy readers will say something about the "middle companionway" and find himself the butt of ridicule. The same author speaks of a sailor in his hammock. Hammocks are never used aboard of a merchant vessel, but the men have births. He has the crew gathered around the man at the wheel to sing and smoke and yarn it, when every boy who ever heard of discipline aboard ship knows that no sailor is permitted aft unless called there by strict duty.

In another book put forth by an equally respectable house, the length of the Mississippi river is wrongly given. Arkansas is put on the wrong side of the river, and the distance from Vicksburg to Baton Rouge is not correct by thirty miles.

Such instances as I have related befog a boy's mind and lead him into error, and he had better have spent his time in playing marbles.

Let me ask you how much better off you would be to sit down to a grocery for three hours each evening and listen to some man tell lies, knowing all the time they were lies? Would that improve your mind? Many of the novels are no more improving than such grocery tales.

Now let me ask you what makes an intelligent, well posted man? School education, to begin with. If we learned nothing after we left school, the world would slip backwards. His mind goes on, day after day, week after week, picking up scraps of history, politics, travel, botany, astronomy, and so forth, and by and by he is a human encyclopedia. He may read love stories and adventures all his days and be no better off. Indeed, he will be far worse off.

"Well, what shall a boy read?"

There are one or two boy papers of good moral tone. The heroes are not exaggerated, and the adventures are not improbable. If the story is of mining, the author gives some valuable information in regard to minerals and how to mine. If it is of hunting, you are taught how to make snares and traps, and are given the principles of taxidermy. If it is of boating, you are taught the principles of sailing and rowing. If it is of the sea, you are given the correct names of ropes and yards and sails, and the habits and traits of the people of other countries are correctly stated.

There are a few books which are true to every-day life. Read these, and if you have further time take history, or something else which is certainly to return some benefit—a daily paper—with its news from every foreign country—its home happenings—its discussion of all matters of interest—its incidents and accidents, its geography, history, grammer and orthography combined.

Think of these things, my boy. If you were going to be a boy forever, the case would be different. No one would expect anything great of you. But, as the years roll on, you have got to pick up the colleges and factories and railroads and general business of the world and keep them moving. Will such trash as "Buffalo Bill's Last Shot" or "The Demon of the Gulch" aid in fitting you to carry out the trusts which will be turned over by and by? Your excuse that you read them to pass away time is a poor one. You have no right to throw away an hour's time to the detriment of your future. —M. Quad, in Free Press.

The Remedy for Worrying.

A correspondent of the Advance relates this incident with its lesson: "Last night I had a long talk with a lawyer, distinguished and able. He is now fifty years old. I remarked as to his apparently vigorous health. 'Yes,' he said, 'I am perfectly well. Two years ago I turned over a new leaf. I have broken down to or three times in my life, and I knew that unless I did something I should break down again.'

"'And what did you do?' I asked.

"'I made up my mind that I would not worry about my business.'

"'And were you able, by this act of your will, to stop all worrying?'

"'Yes,' he replied, 'I was. No matter how hard a case I have, or how discouraged the outlook is in any line of the business, I never let it trouble me out of the office. Why, the other night I slept twelve hours.'

"I stood in astonishment before this wise jurist and strong man, in admiration for such determination. Not every man, possibly, has this power of will; not every man at fifty can give up worrying. But I believe most men, by the supreme power of will, could cause themselves to worry much less than they do."

Salt for the Throat.

In these days when diseases of the throat are so universally prevalent, and, in so many cases fatal, we feel it our duty to say a word in behalf of a most effectual, if not positive cure for sore throat. For many years past, indeed we may say for the whole of a life of more than forty years, we have been subject to a dry, hacking cough, which is not only distressing to ourselves, but to our friends and those with whom we are brought into business contact. Last fall we were induced to try what virtue there was in common salt. We commenced using it three times a day, morning, noon and night. We dissolved a large tablespoonful of pure table salt in half a small tumblerful of water. With this we gargled the throat most thoroughly just before meal time. The result has been that during the entire winter we were not only free from coughs and colds, but the dry, hacking cough had entirely disappeared. We attribute these satisfactory results solely to the use of salt gargle, and most cordially recommended a trial of it to those who are subject to diseases of the throat. Many persons who have never tried the salt gargle have the impression that it is unpleasant, but after a few days' use no one who loves a nice, clean mouth, and first-rate sharpener of the appetite will abandon it.—The Household.

Things Worth Knowing.

Clean piano keys with a soft rag dipped in alcohol.

To clean a black silk dress use a sponge dipped in strong black tea, cold.

Take egg stains from silver by rubbing with a wet rag which has been dipped in common table salt.

To clean a tea-kettle, take it away from the fire and wash off with a rag dipped in kerosene, followed by a rubbing with a dry flannel cloth.

To clean ceilings that have been blackened by smoke from a lamp, wash off with rags that have been dipped in soda-water.

To mend cracks in stove-pipes, make a paste of ashes and salt, with water, and apply. A harder and more durable cement is made of iron filings, sal ammoniac and water.—Ex.

Dont's for Grammarians.

Do not say "He speaks bad grammar," but "He uses poor English."

Not "I am real ill," but "I am really ill."

Not "I feel bad," but "I feel badly."

Not "Hadn't ought," but "Shouldn't have."

Do not begin all remarks with an exclamation such as "Well!" "Say!" "Oh!"

Do not say "I'm going, I don't believe," but "I'm not going, I don't believe."

Not a "Free pass," but a "pass;" not "new beginners," but "beginners;" not "elevated up," but "elevated."

Not "I am through dinner," but "I have finished dinner."

Not "It is too salty," but "It is too salt."

Not "It is tasty," but "It is tasteful."

Not "light complected," but "light complexioned."

Not "He don't come to see me," but "He doesn't come to see me."

Not "Who are you going with?" but "Whom are you going with?"

Not incorrectly "She wrote to Nell and I," when you say correctly "She wrote to me." —City and Country.

Impure blood is the cause of innumerable maladies. Hence, one of the greatest benefactions to humanity was the discovery of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, which, more than any other medicine, has saved America from becoming a nation of invalids.

How One Physician Treats Burns.

The doctor hears a great outcry as he nears a boarding house, and some one calls, "Run for the doctor, quick!" but he is at hand, and goes within. A child had been playing near the stove while the breakfast was in preparation, and upset a dish of hot gravy. The result is a blister as large as a man's hand, extending from umbilicus to epigastrium; child is two years old. Its writhings are very similar to convulsions, its screams arousing every one in the house. The doctor, cool and collected in that babel of confusion, takes from the shelf an unbroken package of saleratus, pours half of its contents into a tin wash dish, adds enough water to this to make a thick paste, and covers the burn with the mixture, making the application half an inch thick. As soon as this is applied the child stops crying, and is free from pain. Leaving orders to keep the child quiet all day, and not to allow the soda to become dry for eight hours, he quietly leaves the room.—Dr. C. S. Cope.

Paul's Three Missionary Journeys.

"But the Lord said unto him, Go thy way; for he is a chosen vessel unto me, to bear my name before the Gentiles, and kings, and the children of Israel: for I will show him how great things he must suffer for my name's sake." Acts 9: 15, 16.

Paul was one of the most remarkable men that ever lived. He had all the elements of a great character. He possessed a burning zeal, unflagging perseverance, inflexible will, fixedness of purpose, decided convictions, unbounded enthusiasm, self-reliance, and genius of the highest order. He had all the endowments of a great leader. These very qualities, when arrayed against christianity, made him a no mean opponent. When converted to the cause of Christ, they made him one of the most influential and successful advocates of the christian religion. As a persecutor of the church, he was sincere, earnest, uncompromising and laborious. When he became a christian, we see these elements conspicuous in his character and conduct. He was unselfish and self-sacrificing. He was not a hypocrite. There was no duplicity in his conduct. His religion was no pretence. We discover perfect sincerity and an unquestioning faith throughout his whole ministry. "We believe, therefore we speak." He had an ardent love for Christ and his cause, yet he was no enthusiast. He could say, in justification of the zeal of himself and his co-laborers, "For the love of Christ constraineth us. Because we thus judge that if one died for all, then were all dead. And that he died for all, that they which live should not henceforth live unto themselves, but unto him which died for them and rose again."

He had the most implicit faith in the gospel. The truths of christianity were not dim shadows, but actual verities, and he consecrated all powers of his being for their defence and promotion. Great men are not needed on all occasions. Some one has said, "God does not need many tall cedars in his forest." America needed only one Washington, and God raised him up and qualified him for his work. All this and more was emphatically true of the great Apostle to the Gentiles. As God had a special design in the conversion of Paul, so he had in the training and preparation for his mission in the church. He was a chosen vessel when but a youth, while he was studying at school in his native city, Tarsus. His Greek training and Greek culture prepared him to grapple in after times with the subtleties of Stoic and Epicurean philosophers. His training under the far-famed Gamaliel made him master of the Jewish polity, Jewish theology, and Old Testament teaching. When converted to christianity, he was enabled by his profound erudition in the Old Testament Scriptures, to discover the true relation between the Mosaic economy and the Christian dispensation, as is clearly demonstrated in that master treatise entitled the Epistle to the Hebrews.

As a chosen vessel to carry the gospel to the Gentiles, he performed his mission, not seeking personal ease or aggrandizement. He was not above working at tent-making at Corinth and elsewhere. He inured himself to hardship, making journeys on foot through sandy deserts, over hills and valleys, across swollen streams, exposed to summer's burning heat and winter's icy cold. He did not shrink from dangers. He was often exposed to perils in the wilderness, perils by land and sea, perils from robbers, and perils from false brethren. No sinister motive could be impugned to him, for he coveted no man's silver or gold. As a missionary, he was a model for every missionary who should come after him. We turn now to our subject:

I. PAUL'S FIRST MISSIONARY JOURNEY.

The first regular mission for the conversion of the Gentiles was organized at Antioch. The church at this important city on the Orontes was destined to share with the church at Jerusalem the honor of sending out missionaries to preach the gospel in the regions beyond. It is somewhat remarkable that this city was the starting point of each of Paul's three missionary journeys. The mission enterprise conceived and put into operation by the church at Antioch was not quixotic or romantic in its origin. It had the sanction and command of the Holy Ghost. "The Holy Ghost said, Separate me Paul and Barnabas unto the work whereunto I have called them." There was a special conviction of duty that influenced those men of God in giving themselves to the work assigned them. On the other hand, the church was convinced of her duty in the premises, and hence by prayer and fasting and laying on of hands set Barnabas and Paul apart for the work.

Paul with his companion set out on his first missionary tour about A. D. 45. Sailing down the Orontes, they came to Seleucia, the seaport of Antioch, named after one of the generals of Alexander the Great. Hence they sailed to Cyprus, an island in the Mediterranean Sea, lying almost due south from Seleucia. Landing at Salamis in the southeast of the island, they preached the word of the Lord in the synagogue of the Jews. Here it may be remarked that Paul and his colaborers in their missionary journeys always availed themselves of the privileges of the synagogues. The Jews of the dispersion had their places of worship in every city, where they dwelt in sufficient numbers and enjoyed the protection of the Roman government.

Leaving Salamis and traveling west to Paphos at the western extremity of the island, the two apostles meet with their first opposition. It was from Elymas the sorcerer who sought to turn away from the faith the deputy Sergius Paulus. He was smitten with blindness by Paul. This miracle doubtless profoundly impressed the devotees of heathenism at Paphos where a magnificent temple, dedicated to Jupiter, existed at the time of Paul's visit. This man is but a specimen of all who deal in the black art. They have always opposed the gospel. Superstition, sorcery and necromancy can not stand the full blaze of gospel light.

The missionary partly having left Paphos and sailing a little northwest across the sea of Pamphilia, reach Perga on the coast of Pamphilia. Here we have the first intimation that John Mark, a nephew of Barnabas, had accompanied the apostles on their missionary tour. We are informed that at Perga he left them and departed for Jerusalem. Perhaps he grew weary in the work, or became discouraged as we sometimes become in our times. This was the ground of Paul's refusing to take him in the second missionary journey.

Leaving Perga and going due north into the interior, they came to Antioch in Pisidia. Here on the Sabbath day they went into the synagogue and Paul, by invitation, addressed the assembly. How gladly he embraced every opportunity to preach Christ and him crucified. We have a synopsis of this remarkable sermon recorded in Acts 14th chapter. Paul preached again the next Sabbath, as his preceding sermon had greatly moved his hearers.

But another enemy appears on the stage, destined to follow him up, mar his success, and even endanger his life. The apostles having expressed a prefence for the Gentiles as hearers, served still further to exasperate the Jews. This bigoted race stirred up the people against Paul and Barnabas, and compelled them to leave. They shook off the dust of their feet against them and came to Iconium. Here they remained sometime preaching the gospel with success, the Jews in the meantime opposing them and finally succeeded in their expulsion from the city.

They next came to Derbe and Lystra, cities of Lycania. At Lystra, Paul healed a cripple, whereupon the priests of Jupiter prepared to offer sacrifices to Paul and Barnabas. This was prevented with difficulty. Here Paul does not hesitate to antagonize boldly heathenism. There is no compromise of truth—no policy seeking—no hunting popularity at the expense of truth, duty and consistency, but a firm, decided stand for the right. The fickle populace come and go. They vacillate from one extreme to another. Awhile ago they took Paul and Barnabas to be gods, but now, influenced by the Jews, they take them for devils or impostors, and stone Paul, leaving him half dead. After his recovery, he and Barnabas came to Derbe. They now think of returning to Antioch. A few days after this, they pass again through Lystra, Iconium and Antioch of Pisidia, ordaining elders in every city and confirming the churches that had been established.

Thus we gather that they had abundant success, notwithstanding the violence of their enemies. And so the gospel faithfully preached will be crowned with success. This successful yet trying journey was but the harbinger of success in many a missionary tour undertaken since that day. From Antioch in Pisidia the missionaries travel to Pamphilia and come to Perga and thence to Attalia on the sea coast where they took shipping, and having sailed to Antioch, reported to the church by which they had been recommended to the grace of God. What was the nature of this report we can only conjecture. Thus ends the first missionary journey.

II. PAUL'S SECOND MISSIONARY JOURNEY.

The first missionary journey lasted about two years. It was about ten years later before the second was undertaken. During this interval the celebrated council, referred to in Acts 15th chapter, was held at Jerusalem. The decrees of this council were made known by the apostles and missionaries sent in the regions around. It was perhaps a short time after their return from the council, that Paul proposed to Barnabas to visit again every city and place they had gone in their first journey and see how the brethren were doing. During the ten years which had elapsed, these feeble churches had contended with much opposition, persecution, declension, and defection. They might well represent the condition of some newly constituted churches on heathen soil at this day. Paul knew what they had to contend with, hence his solicitude. Perhaps some of the feebler bands had become extinct, others were scattered abroad, and many of the young disciples had gone back to the beggarly elements of the world. A difficulty occurs just as they are about to set out. Barnabas wished so take Mark with them, but Paul was violently opposed to this. Hence, Barnabas, having separated from Paul, took Mark and sailed to Cyprus and the history of the missionary operations closes at this juncture.

Paul took Silas as his companion and colaborer and departed being recommended by the brethren to the grace of God. They travel by land up through Syria and Cilicia confirming the churches. Tarsus, Paul's native city, lay in his route, but we are not informed of his visiting it. His parents were perhaps dead, and in all probability most of his relatives were dead. He had a married sister living at Jerusalem. A prophet, however, is not without honor save in his own country, among his own people and his own kin. Be this as it may, Paul's zeal for his Master's cause transcends all love of home and kindred. He wishes to save souls and hence hurries on, regardless of social enjoyments and love of pleasure, across the mountains to Derbe and Lystra, that he may see the faces of his brethren once more and know how they stand.

At Lystra, Timothy whom Paul afterwards called his own son in the gospel and to whom he writes his last epistle, was ordained to the christian ministry. Afterwards extending their journey, they preached the gospel throughout Galatia and Phrygia and planted churches in those regions. To the churches in Galatia, Paul afterwards wrote the Epistle to the Galatians. Passing through Mysia, they came down to Troas on the sea-coast. From this place they essayed to go into Asia and Bythinia, but the Holy Ghost suffered them not. Here a vision of a man in Macedonia, crying, "Come over and help us," was seen by Paul and Silas. Convinced that it was their duty to cross the sea and preach the gospel in a new continent, they took ship and sailed for Philippi, a seaport on the river Strymon. The first fruits of their ministry here were the healing of the soothsaying damsel, the conversion of Lydia and her household and the jailer and his household. These were the original elements of the Philippian church to whom Paul afterwards wrote an epistle. Persecution awaited them also in this journey, for at Philippi Paul and Silas were cruelly beaten and cast into the dungeon. But they rejoiced that they were accounted worthy to suffer for shame for the name of Jesus.

Upon their release, they left the city, journeying along the northern coasts of the Ægean sea. Passing through Amphipolis and Apollonia, they came to Thessalonica, one of the most important cities in northwest Greece. Here entering the synagogue, they reasoned with the people three Sabbath days in succession from the Scripture and succeeded in forming a church to which his first two epistles, I. and II. Thessalonians, were written. Being driven by their common enemy, the Jews, from the city, they go by night—sent by the brethren—unto Berea, where the people were more noble than those at Thessalonica, inasmuch as they search the Scriptures to see whether the things spoken by Paul were so or not. But the Jews of Thessalonica came hither, stirred up the people so that the brethren sent Paul away to go as it were by sea, but Silas and Timothy abode there still. Paul's journey was now due south, down the coast of the Ægean sea as far as Athens, whither he was brought by the brethren. Here he was surrounded by Grecian idolatry, the statues of gods and heroes being seen on every hand. It was a city of thirty thousand gods. The satirist Juvenal said in derision of Athens that it was more easy to find a god there than a man. Here on Mars Hill he encounters the Stoics and Epicureans, the philosophers of the times, and discourses with them on the christian doctrine of a resurrection from the dead, a doctrine received by some but rejected by the many. A few only were converted to the cause of truth and righteousness, among whom was Dyonisius, the Areopagite, and a woman named Damaris.

Leaving Athens and going west, they cross the gulph of Corinth to Corinth, the largest, wealthiest, the most pleasure-loving and corrupt city of all Greece. Here was the famous temple of Venus, the goddess who was supposed to preside over that licentious city. Paul labored here a year and a half and succeeded in establishing a flourishing and vigorous church, to whom he afterwards wrote two of his principal epistles. Leaving Corinth in company with Aquila and Priscilla, they cross the Ægean sea almost due east to Ephesus, a famous city in Asia Minor. Here the party tarried only a short time, Paul having in the mean time preached in the Jewish synagogue. The missionary party now leave Ephesus, going southeast across the sea to Cesarea and then up the coast to Antioch from whence they had set out. The apostles proceeded from Cesarea to Jerusalem and from Jerusalem to Antioch.

III. THE THIRD MISSIONARY JOURNEY.

Paul departed from Antioch, went through Galatia and Phrygia in order, strengthening the disciples; then he turned due west and passing through Asia as before, came to Ephesus where he labored two years, a longer time than he spent at any other city during his missionary tour. Here he was eminently successful, a flourishing church was established to which he addressed the Epistle to the Ephesians. Ephesus, at that time, was the most celebrated city in the east. Here was the celebrated temple dedicated to Diana. To this city the inhabitants of all parts of Western Asia resorted and from all parts of the civilized world. The people of Northern Africa and Southern Europe visited it. And all were eager to purchase silver shrines of Diana. Hence, the making of silver shrines was a profitable business at Ephesus, until the preaching of Paul turned the people away from idolatry. Here exorcising evil spirits and various other dark arts whre practiced. But such was the influence of the gospel that large numbers, who followed such business, brought their books and burnt them. Demetrius and his colaborers in the same business of making silver shrines, seeing their craft in danger from Paul's influence, set the whole city in an uproar and stirred up the people against Paul. After the disturbance had been quieted, the Apostle went into Macedonia, visiting perhaps Philippi, Thessalonica, Berea, and other places in Greece, then came to Corinth where he remained a short time, again retracing his steps, traveling up the west coast of the Ægean sea, and then due west to Philippi, from which place he sailed across the sea to Troas. At this latter place he preached until a late hour at night and broke bread with his disciples. Here he restored to life Eutychus who, during a deep sleep, had fallen from the third story and been killed. Leaving Troas and going south, touching at Assos, Mitylene, Chios, Samos, and Trogyllium, he came to Miletus where he had that tender and touching interview with the elders of the Ephesian church, whose faces he was destined to see no more. He then leaves for Jerusalem, passing by Coos, Rhodes and Patara, and taking another ship at Phenice, he and his party sailed to Tyre, and from Tyre to Ptolemais, and thence to Cesarea, where he spent a short time with Philip the Evangelist, and then went to Jerusalem where he was arrested, and, after several years' imprisonment, sent to Rome to appear before Nero. After his release, he may have visited Spain and Italy. On his second trial before Nero, he was beheaded, having written just before it to his beloved Timothy.

Paul stands before the christian world as the model missionary.

What Many Christians Need.

The man who is empty himself cannot fill others The professed christian who can hardly stand up on his feet is not likely to do much effective work in his Master's vineyard. How can the poor brother who is trying to keep his farthing candle from being blown out, how can he so "shine as to glorify God," and be an illuminator to guide other people to the Saviour? Such feeble, grasping christians may count on a church roll, but they count very little anywhere else. There is but one cure for this spiritual emptiness. It is not to attend more prayer-meetings or hear more preaching, for putting sermons into some souls is like pouring water into a sieve. What such empty souls need is a fresh inpouring of the Spirit of Christ.

(1) Those who really want this and seek aright for it, can have it; and one mark will be an increase of faith. The disciples asked for such an increase, and so may we. A feeble faith may move a mole hill, but it cannot stir a mountain. It can say "perhaps God may hear, or perhaps I can do some good, or perhaps I may get out of the quagmire of doubt and debility." Now faith is just the taking in of Christ into the soul, and the more of Christ the more strength. To grapple with "stubborn sins," to conquer debilitating doubts, to carry a heavy load, to take hold of "hard cases" and try to bring them to Christ, to do all such feats is given to those who are filled with might in the inner man. Luther spent three hours a day in prayer that he might have the stamina for his wrestle with the giant on "the seven hills." Charles G. Finney tells us in his antobiography how he was once pleading with God to remove the difficulties that obstructed his path, until he says that "his flesh trembled on his bones and he shook from head to foot." Then there came a full tide of assurance into his soul, a "great lifting up," and a sweet calm of entire trust; from that room he went forth into one of the most powerful revivals that he ever witnessed, and the whole town of A—— was moved by his preaching. Spurgeon used to give an account of a blunt and earnest minister—somewhat of the same fibre as John McNeil—who was sent into a desperately irreligious region. He called together the people, and in his first sermon he said: "Look here, my friends, you may wriggle and twist and set yourselves against this gospel as much as you like, but before this time twelve-month hundreds of souls will be converted here. I have asked this of the Lord, and he has given it to me." Spurgeon says that the sturdy faith of this bold man of prayer received its reward, and within the year there were several hundreds of hopeful conversions. The pastor who believingly asks for such a rich harvest this year, and soaks his gospel seed in prayer, will not come into the Lord's barns with an empty wagon. Let the Sunday-school teacher pin this promise into her class book: "All things are possible to him that believeth."

(2) With increase of faith will come an increase of spiritual vigor. When I found that a tree in my yard bore more blossoms than fruit, I had the gardener dig around it, and put a bushel or two of fertilizer to reach its roots, and the next July it was crimsoned on every limb with cherries. The more abundant life in the tree yielded the more abundant fruit. The simple reason why any christian does not yield the fruits of the Spirit is the lack of inward vigor. The soil of his soul has become impoverished. He needs the tillage of prayer, honest self-examination, the subsoiling of repentance and a new inpouring of the Spirit of Christ. "If a man abide in Me, he shall bring forth much fruit."

It is the debilitated folks who catch all the fevers that are going, and a physician can do little for a patient who has not vitality enough to slough off the disease. An immense proportion of all our church members are in the hospitals, or off on furlough, or too feeble to carry a weapon. Their disease is a low vitality, and some are dying of "heart failure." The only recovery of all these pitiable invalids must come from the tonic which Jesus Christ gives when he gives his quickening Spirit. There is really no such thing as a genuine revival for a christian or for a church except by a living again of Christ in their souls, and a living again for Christ in their daily conduct. Listen, O, ye invalids and impotent folk and idlers, to this trumpet-call of the Master: "I am come that he might have life, and that ye may have it more abundantly!"

(3) With this increased vigor of heart-life will come more genuine joy. There is no sunshine for those who will keep their shutters barred. Joy is not gained by the asking for it, but only by the acting for it; we have got to walk with Christ if we want to walk in the sunshine. There is a miserable lot of moping and grumbling and sour-spirited christians who disgrace the name they bear. If one of this sorry regiment should ask a shrewd man of the world to embrace christianity, he might well reply: "No, I thank you, I have troubles enough now without being troubled with such a peevish and doleful religion as yours seems to be." What a letter of recommendation some christians carry in their cheerful countenances! What a brace of joyous prisoners were those two apostles who sang their duet down in Phillippi's dungeon at midnight! Those early christians managed to draw oil out of the flintiest rocks, and the black waves of persecution phosphoresced with the sparkles of bright joy. They were filled with Christ, and so their joy was brimming over. Now here are three things which thousands of those who call themselves christians need; and these three things—more faith, more vigor, and more joy—are all within your reach. Your Lord and Saviour offers to you them all when he offers to you an "abundant life." Are you ready to let him bestow in his own way and on his own terms? Then it is yours!—T. L. Cuyler, D. D.

Conversions in Olden Times.

Some things have changed. Conversion in the time of Jesus, the Author of our glorious religion, was not a mental exercise or an intellectual process. It was changing one's way of living, dropping a style of conduct and taking up another style, in imitation of another man who lived that other style. Conversion, to-day, is a series of mental exercises which are supposed to ultimate in a better mode of acting. In the olden times the mode of acting preceded the mental exercises. The man, to day, feels so and so, or thinks he does, and therefore does so and so. We have got the cart ahead of the horse. We look for happy feelings before we have done that righteousness which alone can bring happiness of mind. The joy of the Lord is only known to those who live the life of the Lord in its goodness.—Dan Mac, in Young People's Union.

When and What to Read.

If you are impatient, sit down quietly and have a talk with Job.

If you are just a little strong headed, go to see Moses.

If you are getting weak-kneed, take a look at Elijah.

If there is no song in your heart, listen to David.

If you are a policy man, read Daniel.

If you are getting sordid, spend a while with Isaiah.

If you feel chilly, get the beloved disciple to put his arms around you.

If your faith is below par, read Paul.

If you are getting lazy, watch James.

If you are losing sight of the future, climb up to Revelation and get a glimpse of the promised land.—Golden Censer.

Religion is a necessary and indispensable element in any great human character. There is no living without it. Religion is the tie that connects man with his Creator and him to his throne. If that tie is all sundered, all broken, he [illegible] worthless atom in the universe, the [illegible] attractions all gone, his destiny [illegible] and its whole future nothing but [illegible] desolation and death.—Webster.

PROTRACTED MEETINGS.

The time is rapidly approaching when protracted meetings will be held with many of our churches, especially those in the country. The subject of protracted meetings has often been written upon, but as such meetings have much to do with the life and progress of our churches there is need that we refer to them from time to time, even at the risk of some repetition of ideas. There are some who doubt the wisdom of the system, especially as applied to city churches which have stated service every Sabbath. We do not propose here to enter into any argument as to their utility. It is sufficient here to say, that with some possible tendencies that are not helpful such meetings have been, and are likely to continue, as a great means of building up the doctrines and principles that we hold dear. A church should, as far as possible, be in a continual state of revival, and no pastor ought to be satisfied if there are additions to his church only once during the year; but still, guarding against possible evils that may at times be connected with such meetings, let us continue them, and make them productive of as much good as possible. It is with a view of being helpful to our brethren then that we offer, in regard to such meetings, some suggestions.

One is, when the time is determined beforehand, as is the custom of many churches, let the members meet at least four or five times at church, or at private houses, and pray especially for the divine blessing on the meeting. Such meetings prepare the church for the protracted meeting. When the church is thus prepared, the members are interested from the beginning, and it does not require a week's service to get the church in proper condition for the meeting. At these meetings the ungodly are often impressed, and even they are better prepared for the meeting when commenced.

Another suggestion is, that, as a rule, it is best to leave it to the pastor as to what ministerial help he should have. People have their preferences, and they often differ as to the man needed. If the pastor asks the opinion of his members, of course they are at liberty to give such freely; but it is often the case that some who are not thoughtful, go to their pastor and urge him to secure the assistance of a man that he does not know personally, or knowing, may decidedly prefer some one else. There ought to be entire harmony and congeniality between the men conducting a meeting; and the pastor is decidedly the best judge as to the man or men he needs to labor with him.

And again, we would suggest that all the members of the church attend from the very commencement of the meeting. It is not treating your pastor or your church right for you to absent yourself from the meeting when he and they are engaged in a life and death struggle with the powers of darkness in your community. You and your children are exposed to danger as long as there are sin and wickedness about you. God commanded his servant to cause Meroz of old because the inhabitants thereof "came not up to the help of the Lord against the mighty." If you are ever needed, then brother or sister it is when your people are making special effort to build up the kingdom of Christ in your community. Nothing but providential hindrance can justify your being absent.

Again, we would suggest that you let the meeting, while it shall last, be the topic of prayer and conversation. To succeed in anything people must be in earnest. The protracted meeting is no exception to the rule. If your heart is in the work, then you will watch for opportunities to talk with the unconverted about their souls. Surely this is right. As soon as Philip found Christ he looked for his brother Nathaniel that he might bring him to Christ. It does not speak well for you or your religion if you are ashamed to tell others about the Savior.

Finally, respond cheerfully to any sensible request your pastor may make as to what he would have you do in the meeting. A sensible preacher is not apt to make a foolish request; and hence, if he makes a request of you, especially a public one, it is extremely mortifying to him for you to refuse compliance. We have known some good meetings crippled by church members refusing publicly to comply with some reasonable, earnest request of the pastor. If you have confidence enough in a man to ask him to serve you as pastor, you ought to respect him enough to comply with any sensible request he may make of you. We have known church members to keep their seats, even when the pastor asked that all who were "willing to pray and work for the success of the meeting" should rise or kneel at their seats. Ah, what a trial to any man's patience or faith!

A POPULAR MISTAKE.

It is quite a common opinion among those who have had no actual experience in mission work among the heathen, to suppose that the heathen are longing for the bread of life, longing for the gospel of Christ. The cry of the "man of Macedonia," seen by Paul in the vision of the night, "Come over into Macedonia and help us," is supposed to voice the general desire of the heathen world to hear the gospel preached. It is a fact, however, that some of our most experienced missionaries, especially among distinctly heathen people, testify to, that this popular theory about the heathen being so anxious to hear the word of life is mostly mere fancy, and as a matter of fact they have no natural desire to hear the gospel, are often quite indifferent to the message of Christ's embassador, and often quite averse to even hearing the word of life.

This state of the heathen mind and heart, if it exists, ought to be known not only to the missionary but also to the people at home. Knowing this fact will help the home people to understand better some things that now often puzzle them. One is why missionaries have to labor so long on some fields with but little evidence of success. Judson had to toil earnestly in Burmah for seven years before baptizing his first convert. Our missionaries have labored long and faithfully in China with results, not as encouraging as some may have expected. So it is, to a greater or less extent, in other mission fields we occupy.

Whether there is a more perceptible longing for the word of life in countries that are somewhat christianized, is a question on which our missionaries have not spoken so plainly. If this article passes under the eye of Powell of Mexico and Taylor of Italy we would be glad to hear from them as to this matter. At all events, the gospel seems to be making rapid progress in Mexico and in Cuba. Yet we believe that our missionaries in other countries under the spell of Romanism are equally faithful with those in the countries mentioned. The fact that God has raised up in Cuba a native ministry may explain to some extent the rapid progress of the truth in that country, and may be a reminder to the Christian world that we should pray more earnestly for such men in other lands and in those already occupied by men from our own country. It is a joy to notice that the truth is also making rapid progress in some lands distinctly heathen.

There are many problems connected with the mission work that are worthy of our closest attention, and we are glad that they are being studied in this Centennial year as never before. Let us think often of our missionaries, both native and foreign, and when we pray for their success, let us not forget to ask the Lord to make the people to whom they preach anxious and willing to hear the word.

PERSONALS AND OTHER ITEMS.

....Rev. Thomas Dixon, Jr., preached at Wilmington on Sunday, June 26th.

....Dr. Thos. E. Skinner returned from a week's stay at Morehead, on Tuesday, June 28th.

....Prof. J. C. C. Dunford made us a pleasant visit on his way to the Assembly at Morehead.

....Rev. J. W. Lynch of Danville, Kentucky, is supplying Rev. Thomas Dixon's pulpit during this month.

....Rev. George E. Truett of Portsmouth has been called to the pastorate of College Hill church, Lynchburg, Va.

....A brother writes us that the people in Durham are well pleased with the new pastor of the First church, Bro. Tyree.

....Rev. J. B. Pruitt, of Onancock, Va., who is on a visit to his friends in North Carolina, called to see us on June 29th.

....Rev. J. A. Speight, D. D., met his brother at Windsor and assisted him in ordaining three deacons on Sunday, June 26th.

....Rev. Dr. A. T. Pierson preached his farewell sermon to more than six thousand people in Spurgeon's Metropolitan Tabernacle recently.

....Rev. J. W. Millard, a member of the class of '92, Wake Forest College, has been called to the pastorate of the church at Rocky Mount.

....We had a pleasant visit from brethren Blanchard, Horton, and Rose, who met in Raleigh, June 29th, to confer about canvassing the Associations for missions.

....Rev. J. F. MacDuffie, East Durham, writes us that the Lord's cause is prospering in his part of the vineyard. Last Sunday, Dr. C. Durham preached the dedicatory sermon at the new church at Mt. Adar. This church is completed, and every dollar of debt for the building paid, and it has only thirteen members.

....In a recent issue of the Regular Baptist, a Primitive, or "Hardshell," Baptist paper in Mexico, Mo., we notice an editorial thoroughly favoring missions and Sunday-schools.

....Rev. F. H. Martin, of Lumberton, starts this week on a three months trip to Virginia to hold protracted meetings. His address while in Virginia will be Gilliamsville, Va.

....Prof. J. Rufus Hunter called in to see us on his way to Apex to attend a family reunion. Bro. Hunter has been located at Oshkosh, Wis., the past year, and reports a successful year's work.

....Dr. W. P. Jacobs, D. D., President of Thornwell Orphanage, Clinton, S. C., will attend the annual meeting of the Orphanage at Thomasville, and deliver the annual address on the 20th inst.

....The British and Foreign Bible Society issued 13,000 copies of the Bible, in whole or in part, for every working day during the past year. The Society has printed the Bible in nine new languages this year.

....Rev. Walter Gilmore of the Baptist church, preached his first sermon here on last Sunday night. Mr. Gilmore is a promising young minister and made a good impression here.—Sanford Express.

....Rev. V. I. Martin, who has just graduated from the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, will supply the church at Lumberton during the absence of the pastor, Rev. F. H. Martin in Virginia.

....We were glad to see Rev. L. G. Broughton of Winston in the city. Bro. Broughton's church has just given him a summer vacation. He preached for the Baptist Tabernacle on Sunday morning last.

....Bro. T. S. White died on the morning of the 28th ult. His funeral was preached by Rev. C. A. G. Thomas, and his remains were taken to Hertford for burial. In the death of Bro. White, his church lost a worthy member.

....Rev. A. T. Howell writes us that he has just closed a glorious meeting at Southport. He baptized five and received two members last week. He says that the Lord is blessing his labors, and there will be more converts to follow.

....The ladies of the Baptist church who some time ago undertook the herculean task of building a parsonage, on the lot belonging to that denomination, have made splendid progress. The building will be a beautiful one, and is nearing completion.—Wilson Advance.

....In our last issue we made the statement that Bro. J. R. Starnes had been chosen to succeed Dr. R. H. Lewis as President of Judson College. We should have said that Bro. Starnes had bought the College, employed a faculty, and proposed to run it as usual.

....The West Chowan Sunday-school Association will assemble with Brantley's Grove church July 29—31, 1892. See program in this paper. The brethren at Ahaskie Depot, on Norfolk and Carolina R. R., will furnish free transportation to the church to all visiting brethren.

....A Chinese Sunday-school of about thirty members in Brooklyn has given $150 in less than twelve months, and another in New York has given recently $100 to support a missionary in South China, and in Boston, Mass., a school has given $114.50. These facts show the liberality of Chinese christians.

....The brethren at Lenoir have just finished their house of worship, and now have the best located and neatest church-house in the town. The congregations are large, and Rev. I. W. Thomas, the missionary pastor, under appointment of our Board of Missions, is doing a good work there and feels greatly encouraged.

....Rev. T. J. Taylor says: "We have been holding meetings with reference to the Centenial of Missions in the Warren Union, Tar River Associatian. Eleven churches have been visited and there are five others to visit. The people seem interested. Elders Cobb, VanDeventer, Wilcox, Callum, Purkinson and myself were in the work."

....A New York press dispatch, dated June 30th, to the News & Observer, says that the indictment which was found against Rev. Thomas Dixon, Jr., formerly of North Carolina, and pastor of the Twenty-third Street Baptist church, for criminal libel upon Excise Commissioner Koch, was dismissed this afternoon by Judge Martine, upon the recommendation of the district attorney.

....According to a report of Rev. C. R. Hager of Hong Kong, in the July number of the Missionary Herald, the 161 Chinese church members, now in California, gave last year for all benevolence, $6,290.40, or $30.07 for each member. It was divided as follows, viz: for church expenses, $2,195.75, or $13.73 a member; for Home Missions, $1,918.45, or $11.88 per member, and Foreign Missions, $2,181.20, or $13.54 per member. These people are poor and labor with their own hands to make an honest living, and these facts prove the sincerity of their love.

....The Venable Street Baptist church did a handsome thing last week. Their pastor, Rev. Baylus Cade, brought his family to Richmond from North Carolina, and when he had reached his house which he had fitted up for their occupancy, he found his people in full and riotous possession. They had opened every door, entered every room and were rolling around like a swollen river. They had put a neat and elegant touch on the furniture, loaded the larder with the richest supplies and had everything ready for Mrs. Cade to walk in and feel at home. All hail to the generous people! God bless them.—The Baptist.

....J. B. Bostic on his return here from Shelby, brings painful news of Col. R. McBrayer and Rev. Dr. W. A. Nelson. Col. McBrayer is very low, and is not expected to live more than a few days. His mind is greatly impaired, and only at intervals is he able to recognize his friends and relatives. Dr. Nelson, Mr. Bostic says, is critically ill and the physician have about given up hope. The doctor is suffering from nervous prostration and heart trouble.—Asheville Citizen.

....The First and Tabernacle churches of Raleigh enjoyed a rare treat on Sunday last in listening to the preaching of Dr. B. H. Carroll of Waco, Texas. In the morning, Dr. Carroll occupied the pulpit of the First church, and the discourse was based on a clause of Acts 16:28—"Do thyself no harm." The real thought of the sermon was that one should be Scripturally true to himself, and then it follows that he will be helpful, certainly not harmful, to others: if one harms himself, then he wrongs others. The Philippian jailer to whom the words of the text was addressed, was stopped in his purpose to kill himself, and first giving his heart to God, he then performed acts of kindness to Paul and Silas, whose feet a few hours before he had confined in the stocks in the inner prison. The illustrations were impressive, and the preacher earnest and impassioned throughout. At night in the Tabernacle, the story was read of Jonah's preaching to the Ninevites, and also the Saviour's comment thereon, together with his mention of the visit of the queen of Sheba to Solomon, as found in the twelfth chapter of Matthew. These Scriptures constituted the text of the occasion, and the lessons drawn, presented in the clear and forcible manner of the preacher, will not soon be forgotten. May the blessing of the Most High attend these two efforts of our dear brother, and also be with him in all his future labors.

....Edgefield, May 28.—Old Edgefield is having a rousing revival meeting at the Sheppard-Hart Opera House, in the very heart of town. The meeting is conducted by Rev. A. B. Watson, Methodist pastor, Rev. J. N. Booth, Baptist, and Rev. J. M. Plowden, Presbyterian, and the song service is ably led by Bro. Marshall and Rrs. R. H. Mims. This makes a fine team. All pull together, and pull hard for right and the paths of christian peace—they bearded the lion in his den. Edgefield has made much progress since she has got the railroad, progress spiritually as well as materially. And one thing is being much impressed on all minds by this meeting, that is, that whiskey selling and whiskey drinking is being classed in its proper place. A few years ago it was not considered improper for a gentleman to go in a bar-room and take a drink. It is not so now; opinion has changed much for the better. Bor. Booth has planted himself boldly on the fight against the demon drunkenness, and is proving a very David against this destructive Goliath. He is improving in his work, and the longer he stays here the more everybody likes him, except the enemies he makes by warfare against sin. The meeting has done much good here among all denominations. The preachers have not been spouting fort high reaching sky-rockets of abstract theology, but treat directly of practical evils in particular, and are letting the people of Edgefield know that they are referring to the wickedness as it exists—not in California nor in the abstract—but in Edgefield. The large Opera Hall is full to over flowing at night, and much demonstration testifies general benefit. May to good Lord send down showers of blessing here.—A. S. T., in Baptist Courier.

A Good Day in Reidsville.

Dear Recorder:—Yesterday, June 26th, was a glorious day here. Early in the morning, it was dark and threatening, but later the clouds were gone and the sun shone with unusual splendor. By eleven o'clock the church was filled with listeners eager to hear that venerable old man, Dr. J. L. Burrows, who preached a telling sermon. It ought to make any one a christian to hear that saint, now ready for heaven, say in tender tones, "The Lord thinketh upon me. However lowly or humble, he thinketh about you.

In the afternoon, that kind and gentle christian woman, Miss Lottie Moon, spoke to the ladies (no one else) about her work in China. They were pleased with her talk, and came from the meeting determined to work more for the Master. Miss Moon has been on the field for about twenty years, and is at home getting much-needed rest. It is an inspiration to any one to come in touch of a noble woman who has been so long on the mission field. She is happy and cheerful about her work, and pleads earnestly for more workers.

At night, Rev. D. W. Herring spoke to a large congregation about the needs of the field. He placed before the church what he thinks to be the best method of advancing the cause of our Master in the interior of China. He spoke earnestly and with power. He feels that he is being led by God in the movement, and if we trust in God he will lead us aright.

The church here is truly a Missionary Baptist church, for they live to advance the cause of Christ. The members and pastor work for missions, talk for missions, and pray for missions.

Bro. Howard preaches the pure, old-fashioned gospel and makes it practical. He is very earnest and zealous and does with all his might what he feels to be his duty. We all love him and feel he will do great things here for the Lord.

I would be glad to correspond with any brother thinking of going to the Seminary in October, and will be glad to answer any question about it that I can.

I hope to spend the greater part of the summer here working for my Master in the interest of missions.

Yours in Christ,

F. M. ROYALL.

Wake Forest College.

HUNDREDS OF YOUNG MEN and others in North Carolina have within the last few days received catalogues of Wake Forest College. It is hoped that to very many, at least, they will prove interesting, containing, as they do, not only a brief record of the past session, but also information in regard to the ten independent "schools," the plans of the several professors, the requirements for degrees, and the incidental advantages of student-life in the institution. Two things may be said, I believe, about the College in its present condition. First. The course of instruction is as extended and thorough as that of any college in the South. Believing this, I can conscientiously and earnestly advise young men to avail themselves of its advantages, —especially Baptist young men, for it is their own institution, though every year it gives us pleasure to welcome others to the opportunities it affords. Second. Our students, as a rule, enjoy their life at the college. Enduring friendships are formed and there is a strong esprit du corps which binds together the whole student body. A number of young men when leaving the College, a few weeks ago, told me that the years they had spent here had been the happiest of their lives. And, best of all, some told me that they had enjoyed personal religion more during the past session than they had ever done before. Now let us all go to work to created in our number by the final departure from the College of a very large graduating class and others who will not be able to return. If the alumni—that is, all old students—and other friends of Wake Forest will stimulate young men to aim for collegiate education, and will urge young men from Baptist families to attend their own College, the next session will surely be more prosperous than the last was. Already I know of many new men who are going to be on hand Sept. 7th, when the fall term opens, to take the places of old students who will not return.

THE GENERAL CATALOGUE

upon which, for some months, I have spent every hour I could command from other duties is now completed. The manuscript is in the printer's hands and part of the work has passed through the press. It will soon be ready for distribution. Orders are already coming in. The cost (thirty cents each) will barely cover, if it does cover, the printing and postage. The labor of preparation has been freely given, because the compiler has been satisfied that such a general roster of all students, with a brief record of their lives would be helpful in all the future work of the College. Of course the work is very imperfect. Many I have been able to learn nothing about. Concerning many more the record is briefer than I would gladly have it. But honest and repeated efforts have been made to secure information. When it is lacking, the fault is not with the compiler. In ordering, please, if convenient, send postal notes. Two cent stamps, however, will be accepted.

BOSTWICK LOAN FUND.

Recent references in some of the papers have led me to make a somewhat detailed examination of this fund. The results have been gratifying to me, and they doubtless will be to others. The Treasurer's report, May 1, '92 shows that the fund holds students' notes for loans for the payment of tuition fee to the amount of $8,712. But of this amount, $3,851 is due by young men who were students here last session. They have had absolutely no chance, as yet, to meet their obligations. And $1,960 is due by students who left the College just one year ago. This leaves only $2,901 as the amount due by young men who have been away from College as long as two years. And a number of these, I know, from their own statements, were compelled to borrow money—some of them at a high rate of interest—in order to meet their board bills and other expenses. They are paying these private obligations first. My opinion is that a very large percentage of these notes will be paid. And yet, after all this is said, it is doubtless true that some could have paid more on their notes than they have done. And still more could keep the small amount for interest paid up. At this point, by the way, I happen to know that the founder of the fund has been somewhat disappointed. And I am glad to know that the Trustees have made arrangements to collect, as promptly as possible, without any undue pressure, interest and principal.

COLLEGIATE EDUCATION

will always give to a man who has health, brains, and character the ability to pay for it after he has secured it. And our Bursar's books show that we have seldom misplaced confidence in giving to a student temporary indulgence in the payment of some of his fees. But we consider a student's note as good business paper, and not as fictitious or sentimental. It will be a bad day for higher education in the South if it should ever come to pass that in the competition for patronage free tuition should be given under the cover of meaningless notes.

DO YOU WANT A TEACHER?

Several of our graduates whom the Faculty can highly recommend are seeking work in the school-room. Some are men of maturity; some have had experience as teachers; all are men of good scholarship and character. I shall be very glad to put parties desiring efficient service in academies of schools in correspondence with these young gentlemen as well as with several undergraduates who are seeking employment.

CHARLES E. TAYLOR.

On Saturday night last, Rev. Thomas Dixon, Jr., lectured before the Teachers' Assembly at Morehead City. Subject—"Backbone: or the Courage of Convictions." On Sunday morning, he preached to a large congregation, followed by a collection of $44.00, which is to be divided between four Orphanages in the State.

Nothing New Under the Sun.

The "Preacher" declares (Eccles. 1: 9) that "there is no new thing under the sun," but that "the thing that hath been, it is that which shall be." And every now and then in our experience and observation, we are led to say that the "Preacher" was right. One, to read the utterances of the evolutionists of our day would be led to believe that they at least had arrived at some entirely new ideas concerning the origin of things about us. But even they are echoing the thoughts of old Greek philosophers. Dr. B. H. Carroll, in his articles in our Convention Teacher, entitled "My Infidelity and What Became of It"—a series of articles well worthy of being read by all our young men—thus connects the old and the new on this subject: "As to the origin of things, the philosophy of Democritus, developed by Epicurus, more developed by Lucretius, and gone to seed in the unverified hypothesis of modern evolutionists." So evolution is old, and Darwin, Huxley and Tyndall only followers of the ancients.

But has there not been something entirely "new under the sun," or at least in the sphere of missions and mission methods developed of late by some of the missionaries of our Board in China? Is not this idea of the churches supporting missionaries on the field without the intervention of any board or boards a bran new idea in missions? Was it ever conceived of by any mind of man in all these hundred years of Foreign Mission work until within the last few months, or years at most? It has been emphasized as a new departure in missions. Has ever anything like it been known before? To the records let us go and see.

Away back in 1859 there was some trouble in our African Mission, and as a result several missionaries from that field came home, handed in their resignations, and forthwith proceeded—one of them at least—to suggest a better way of carrying on our mission work than that which had been sought out and wrought out by all the consecrated men and women who had been laboring in many fields during many years. That this new departure in mission methods created no little stir among the brethren, appears from the fact that at the meeting of the Southern Baptist Convention in this year 1859, no less than three resolutions on the subject were introduced into the Convention. The record—I quote from the minutes of the Southern Baptist Convention, 1859—says: "On motion of Bro. W. H. Clark, missionary to Africa, Resolved, That a committee of three from each State connected with this Convention be appointed to revise our present system of missionary operations, and report such changes and modifications, if any, as may be deemed necessary, and report at this session if practicable."

This Bro. Clark was one of the missionaries alluded to above. For this a substitute was offered as follows: "Resolved, That a committee of one from each State in connection with the Board be appointed to inquire whether any changes can be made in our present missionary organization that will add to its efficiency, and report during the present session of this body." The body then adjourned till afternoon, when both resolution and substitute were laid on the table.

At once, a brother from Alabama, where Bro. Clark had been making some stir among the brethren on the subject of the Board's faults and failings, offered the following: "Whereas, It has been suggested that improvements can be made rendering our system of missions more efficient, and several good brethren, as well as members of the Mission Boards, are desirous of perfecting the same as far as possible; be it therefore Resolved, That a committee of fifteen be appointed by the President, who shall consider and report to this Convention whether any and what improvement can be made in our system of missions and missionary operations." "On motion of Bro. A. M. Poindexter, Resolved, That each person having changes to submit touching our missionary organizations, be requested to present them in writing to the committee."

Now, what was all this about? What changes were to be made that called forth all this flutter? The report of the committee of fifteen reads exactly as if the changes proposed to be made were just such as are now being urged by tract and otherwise upon our Board and churches, viz., the support of missionaries by churches independently of the Board, which should however be required to forward all funds from such churches to such missionaries free of charge. Here is the report of the committee:

"The committee to whom was referred the resolution of the Convention, directing them to inquire whether any and what improvements can be made upon the present system of missions and missionary operations, have had the same under consideration, and have instructed me to report as follows:

Upon such consideration as your committee have been enabled to bestow upon the subject referred to them, no plan has been suggested, and none occurs to the committee, contemplating a change in our present system of missions or missionary operations not subject to objection. Through the blessing of God upon the past labors of the Convention, such progress has been made in the diffusion of gospel light, as calls for profound gratitude to the Father of Mercies; and, inasmuch as change is undesirable in itself, only as a means of accomplishing some greater good, therefore, we recommend the adoption of the following resolutions:

1. Resolved, That in the judgment of this Convention, it is inexpedient to make any change in the existing plans of missionary operation.

2. Resolved, That in case any churches, associations, or other bodies entitled to representation in this Convention, should prefer to appoint their own missionaries, and to assume the responsibility of defraying their salaries and entire expenses, that the respective Boards are authorized, under our present organization and fundamental rules, to become the disbursing agents of the bodies so appointing missionaries, to become the disbursing agents of the bodies so appointing missionaries and appropriating funds, whether such contributions be intended for the civilization or the evangelization of the heathen; provided that such expenses of forwarding the money as have to be specially incurred, be borne by the contributors."

So it appears that even in the matter of the trying, by dissatisfied missionaries, to revolutionize the methods of mission boards, there is nothing new under the sun.

Letter from Rev. T. C. Britton, Soochow, China.

Dear Dr. Bailey:—As the summer comes on, we hear of the opposition of the literary class of Chinese against foreigners, manifesting itself in riots in the Fukien province. But we are thankful that we have had continued quiet in this part of China during the winter and spring, and hope that the people will not renew, this year, the proceedings of last summer. Yesterday the natives observed the first of their three great annual feasts, it being the fifth day of their fifth month. They stopped work about noon, and gave themselves up to feasting and amusements the rest of the day. Of course they are naturally bolder in the expressions of their hatred toward us on such occasions than usual. But they soon settle down to their work, and all goes on as before. In connection with our work here in the city—study of the language, daily chapel services, and street and house to house preaching—we have been very much interested in, and have made some efforts toward, the evangelization of the towns and villages near by. When I am away in this work, our native preacher carries on the work at our chapel; and I keep it up when he is away. Our mode of travel is by native boats. The towns are generally built along the banks of a canal, stretching some times a mile or two, with one main street, on which we preach and distribute the Scriptures to the people. And the villages are scattered all through the country, for nearly all those outside of cities and towns live in small villages for protection. I hope soon to be able to give your readers more particulars about these country places, the great number of them, their population and our work among them. We had a good day here last Sunday. There were eight members present. After Sunday-school, a large number of outsiders came in, and our native preacher preached a good sermon from Gal. 6: 4 and 14, and we had communion. In the afternoon I preached to the people from the words, "Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world." After the meeting was over, one of our members, a widow lady, invited the women to stay a while and talk with them about their souls' interests. Until the first of this year, we employed this sister to do gospel work among the women here, but she is employed by others some distance away now, still she comes to her church once a month, each communion Sunday, and works just as earnestly as before. It is encouraging indeed to us to see how zealous and faithful she continues to be in trying to win souls to Christ. The native preacher also invited the men to sit a while with him in his study on Sunday evening to talk with them about the doctrine. We almost always invited the people to sit with us in our rooms on the street after services. Some of our most satisfactory work is done in these personal conversations.

How strange to think of Shanghai without our friends the Herrings! And how we miss his occasional visits and help, which used to cheer us in our work so much! We do pray and hope that our people will give heed to his pleas for more laborers.

More About the Fife Meeting at Goldsboro.

Dear Recorder:—I promised to write you further as to the Fife meeting in Goldsboro. It was the most remarkable one I have ever attended in its deep spiritual power. Bro. Fife honors the word, and appeals continually and mightily for the help of the Spirit. God has certainly honored him in making him instrumental in awakening Goldsboro as it has never been awakened before. Now after the lapse of weeks I rejoice to testify that the work gives ample evidence that it is of an enduring character.

Our church has been richly blessed, and has more than held its own. Of the 191 who are reported to have joined the various churches the Sunday after the revival meeting closed, 54 were received by our church. We have now received 60, and we are expecting a number of others, as they are coming every Sunday.

That was a remarkable day in the history of our church. The whole morning hour was taken up with the reception of members, after which we held a brief thanksgiving service and extended the hand of welcome to the young converts. The church had just received 23 members as the result of the meeting in which Bro. W. B. Oliver aided us.

A remarkable fact is that a large proportion of those received are young men and men in middle life. They have gone to work too. Our men's prayer meeting on Monday night is largely attended, and quite a number of the new converts take an active part in the service.

I want to say this: Bro. Fife strengthened the hands of the pastors in Goldsboro. He so magnified the Word of God and so completely eschewed sensational methods that there was no abrupt transition from the revival meetings to the regular work of the churches. I pray God's blessing upon him wherever he may go.

Crucifying the Lord Afresh.

The Jews had long prayed for the coming of Messiah and the kingdom of God. But when Messiah came they killed him. We of to-day pray "Thy kingdom come;" and it may at least be questioned whether, if the kingdom should come in the guise of a proposed modification of the established order in religion and society, we would not refuse it and crucify its King. As a matter of fact, if the Holy Spirit would make to us some rich new gift either in the realm of thought or method, He must run the gauntlet of Orthodoxy or Baptist Usage, or both. It is doubtless well that we should be slow to modify traditional opinions and traditional methods. But we require constantly to assure ourselves that accessibility to new truth is one of the virtues. Heresy against the truth may lurk in a method which has come to us from our fathers as well as in a new line of thought. It is no more likely that the men of fifty or a hundred years ago were infallible than that we are. In fact, neither they were infallible, nor are we. And we are therefore left to the leadership of the Holy Spirit as our only resource. We are accustomed to the thought that the Holy Spirit has expressed Himself in the Bible. So He has; but I know of no more blighting heresy against the Bible and its teachings concerning the Holy Spirit than the view which confines His ministry to a period which closed eighteen hundred years ago. Many among us, in the interest of what they call "The Truth," practically deny the New Testament and Old Testament teaching concerning the presence of God's Spirit in His world, in His church, as a vital and blessed and enormous equipment for life's battles and duties. And if I could do but one thing for christendom to-day, I would give it the sense and the vision of a very present God; so that while Mr. Spencer is defecating God to "a pure transparency," men might know their Father which is in heaven and on the earth and in the hearts of His children—the life of their life, imparting the infiniteness of His eternal being to their finiteness, to their folly His wisdom, to their restlessness His rest. So that it is in the utmost loyalty to the Bible that I add this word: if we did not have a Bible, the Holy Spirit in the use of surrendered minds and hearts could make one to-day.

"God fulfils Himself in many ways,
Lest one good custom should corrupt the world."

And the point of what I am trying to say is this: that to reject the Spirit of God in spiritual men to-day is to repeat the attitude and the sin of the Pharisee in his rejection of Jesus; it is to crucify the Lord afresh.

And now for the application of my little sermon. Some months ago our brother Bostick, and more recently, our brother Herring resigned their appointments as missionaries of the Foreign Mission Board. This serious step seemed to these brethren necessary because, if I understand the situation, the Board did not sympathize with their effort to distribute the pressure of responsibility for our missions, nor with their intention of a more aggressive evangelism into the interior of China. This last is true, I know, in the case of brother Herring. When brother Bostick's proposition to the churches of his native association was published, it was promptly pronounced "erratic," and suspicions of his sanity were expressed. While in North Carolina on a recent visit, I heard of similar suspicions with reference to brother Herring. Now, I offer no criticisms; but I desire to give a word of testimony. I recently enjoyed the privilege of extended conversation with a man who has within the past eighteen months made a tour of the East, and of our missions in Central and Southern China, India and elsewhere. He told me that D. W. Herring impressed him as an ideal missionary, and as in many respects, the finest man he met in the East. When such a man comes home consumed with a zeal for the millions who have never heard the gospel, his head teeming with facts gathered on the field and his heart burning to tell his story to the churches and so to stir their laggard missionary spirit—is it fair to such a man that his suggestion of a more aggressive and Christlike evangelism among the heathen should bring upon him the suspicions of his brethren? Pharisees who had lost their sense of brotherhood with publicans and sinners, and who therefore had no sympathy with Jesus in his efforts to save them, could ill afford to express their disapproval, since their criticism was a boomerang, more fatal to themselves than to him.

There can be no question that the distribution of the pressure of responsibility for our missions is one of the crying needs of our mission work. One of the speakers at the recent centenary celebration in Philadelphia said: A pressure of $500,000 at the mission rooms in Boston registered on the individual purse only twenty-five cents. And for my part, I uncover my head in the presence of men who, under what they believe to be the call of the Holy Spirit, propose to meet this need, while at the same time they seek with a consecration far too rare among us to press on like Paul to meet the ever-pressing needs of the heathen. God give these men speed, and save their brethren at home from the sin of embarrassing their work.

From Forest City, N. C.

Dear Recorder:—Let me give you a few dots from this part of the Lord's vineyard.

On last Saturday and Sunday, Elder T. Dixon of Shelby was with us at High Shoal and Henrietta, and notwithstanding the fact that he is more than three score and ten years of age, he seems to have young life in him, especially in the pulpit. He did some good preaching while among us. Sometime ago Bro. Dixon manifested a desire to erect a monument at the grave of Drury Dobbins, who was one of the pioneer preachers of this country. He went to work to collect the sum of two hundred dollars, which he said was necessary for the purpose. Our two churches gave him over forty dollars while among us.

At High Shoal we have a new church-house, built during last year, and we believe it is the best country church in all this up country. Come up and see us.

On the third Sunday in May, one of our members at King's Mountain stated before the church that they owed a debt of fifty dollars, and the money was needed, and, said he, "if the church will pay twenty-five dollars in thirty days, I will pay twenty-five dollars." So the brethren went to work and the debt was paid.

It is hard to imagine the importance of of our work at King's Mountain. The town began to be settled about nineteen years ago. It now has a population of eight hundred or one thousand.

The town was captured by four denominations, and about three years ago the Baptists went to work. Now they have a lot located in the centre of the town and on it an unfinished house. They have fifty-six members; twenty-four of these have been added to the church since last October.

Baptist churches are scarce in this section of the country. Three miles northwest is Patterson's Grove church. Gastonia is eight miles northeast. East and southeast is a large section destitute of Baptist preaching. Grover church is eight miles south, and Bethlehem church five miles southwest.

King's Mountain has one cotton mill in operation and one other in course of erection.

The town is growing and should not be neglected. Send your contributions to aid in completing the house to P. P. Hoke, treasurer of building committee, King's Mountain, N. C. Brethren, can't you help this little struggling band? Try, and God will bless you. Don't forget to pray for us.

I am yours in the work,

T. Bright.

Resolutions of Respect.

Whereas, the Supreme Ruler of the universe in his mysterious providence has seen fit in his wisdom to remove from us on June 25, 1892, our beloved pastor, E. G. Beckwith, therefore Resolved 1, That we bow in humble submission to the will of Him who "doeth all things well," and that in his death we lose a pastor in whose daily life was exhibited the true principles of the religion he so loved to preach; and that we hold in loving remembrance his wise counsel, his unswerving devotion to the best interests of those under his charge, and we will strive to emulate the example of humility, candor and purity and holiness which it was ever his desire to instill into the hearts and lives of those with whom he came in contact.

2. That in the preaching of the blessed gospel of Christ he was—while possessing a powerful and towering intellect—plain, honest, practical and intensely earnest in dealing with the souls of men; that we feel keenly our bereavement from the fact that we asked and obtained in Mt. Moriah church his ordination to the full ministry of the gospel, and that he had been with us ever since his ordination to counsel, guide and encourage us in every effort to strengthen the Master's kingdom; and the church has been strengthened, united and prosperous under his ministry.

3. That we deplore his loss to the Baptist denomination as one who ever stood firm and true to the faith "once delivered to the saints," yet charitable and inoffensive to those who saw fit to differ with him.

4. That as an educator in our denominational College—Wake Forest—his influence upon the young men of the country will be felt for years to come, and that the good influence of such counsels, and such a life can be fully revealed only in eternity.

5. That we tender to his bereaved parents, brother and sisters our sincere and heartfelt sympathy in this their sad affliction and commend them to the tender care of our loving Father, and may he pour in the oil of his consolation and bind up the broken and bleeding hearts till they shall meet him again in the beautiful land beyond, where sorrow will be forever past.

6. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family; that they be spread upon the minutes of our church, and that a copy be sent to the Biblical Recorder with the request to publish.

Tribute to the late Rev. W. M. Kennedy.

Whereas, It has pleased our Father to remove from earth to heaven our beloved brother and former pastor, William M. Kennedy, we, Caswell Baptist church in session June 26th, 1892, Resolve 1st. That we extend to his beloved wife and family our tearful and heartfelt sympathy in their sad affliction.

2d. That we bow in humble submission to the will of the Master who knoweth and "doeth all things well," knowing that our beloved brother was a great sufferer for the last few years of his life—so patient, submissive. Profiting by his noble example, we hope to meet him in that better land where parting is no more.

A Profitable and Interesting Meeting.

Dear Recorder:—The Woman's Mission Society of Mt. Gilead church, Sampson county, had a very profitable and interesting meeting on the third Sunday in June. After the sermon, most of the congregation remained for and hour to hear the report of improvement made by members of the Society on "talents" which were given them last fall. One dollar and fifty cents was divided into five cent pieces, and thirty members received these to "improve" in any way they might think best. In nine months, some made a little more than two dollars. All, except one, made something, and the total amount reported was $36.17.

This was done by ladies in a farming community, and each individual made her own improvement in her own way.

The meeting gave us an opportunity to speak of the work of missions. The point was emphasized that the Society is not separate from the church, but a part of the church at work. By this work of the ladies, the whole church was stimulated and instructed.

No plan will work well without willingness and consecration; but we thought to mention this work might suggest to some one a plan which may be a means of grace and of raising money also.

Mt. Gilead church is prospering under the pastorate of Rev. Chas. Hopper. A more consecrated, earnest, hopeful band of christians I do not know. May God bless them.

The Meeting at Scotland Neck.

Dear Recorder:—Bro. J. E. Hutson has just left us after eleven days of meetings. He did some of the best preaching I ever heard. He has grown much both in force and tenderness since I heard him last. Through torrid heat and floods the people came to meeting; but just as the work of grace was fairly beginning, the preacher had to leave us. Six have been baptized, and five others are awaiting for baptism next Sunday night. Some twelve or fifteen others have made professions, some of whom will join the Methodists, while others still will unite with us.

Pastors Dowell, Hunter and Ballard were with us several days to our delight, while our former pastor, Dr. Hufham, gladdened us with his presence and greatly aided us through most of the meetings, administering baptism meanwhile. R. T. Vann.

Prof. E. G. Beckwith.

Just this little sprig of acacia, my dear, departed brother, would I lovingly lay upon thy grave. I could not be there, for I did not know it, to place a single flower upon thy bier, or to drop a tear beside the open grave. So now I may reverently lay this token of love upon the tomb that contains thy dust. So seldom have I ever been to the College Hill without meeting thee, but now how changed! In mind I place myself in the campus, among the trees, but thy genial smile, from out that loving heart, I do not see. Ah! what means this feeling of loneliness which creeps over me now? It's the absence of one of my most loved and loving mates. Where art thou, my dear brother? Hark! I hear a heavenly whisper, "He is not here; the Lord had need for him, he has been advanced to the higher class."

The catalogue of Southwest Virginia Institute for young ladies, located at Glade Spring, Va., is on our table. An examination of it shows a faculty of eighteen officers and teachers, coming from the best schools of the land, among them we note, Vassar College, New England Conservatory of Music, Boston; University of Virginia, Richmond College, Virginia Agricultural and Mechanical College, Charlemange College, Paris, France; Academy of Arts, Paris, and others. Surely with such a corps of teachers the work must be thorough and effective. The home comforts and table fare, under the present management, has attained to an enviable reputation for its excellence. There were present the past session one hundred and twenty boarders. This is the school which our brother Rev. J. R. Harrison has labored so faithfully to establish, the motto—"The highest and broadest culture at the lowest cost," and he should and rejoice in its success.

Talks About Law.—No. 4.

BY JUDGE R. W. WINSTON.

MARRIED WOMEN.

A married woman is the law's favorite. A married woman is often protected when a man, or a single woman, would not be. And a single woman is often bound by a contract not binding on a married woman. Let us see what the law on this subject is.

And first, as to the contracts of a married woman. Before proceeding, it is, perhaps, proper to say that no reference is had to a married woman who has taken out papers and become a free trader; nor to a woman abandoned by her husband, &c. These women can contract just like single women; and our courts have held that the statutes permiting them so to do are not in violation of our constitution.

Here is Mrs. Jones at her home in the country. Mr. Jones has gone to the town to market his produce. Along comes an agent selling flowers and grape vines. Mrs. Jones is both prudent and economical; but the agent offers everything so cheap that it will be a real saving to give him an order. The smart agent carries off the wife's name signed to an order for ten dollars worth of grape vines and flowers.

Now this contract does not bind the wife, nor does it bind the husband. For no such woman is capable, without the consent of her husband, to make a contract, except for her necessary personal expenses or for the support of her family. Flowers and fruit trees are neither "necessary personal expenses," nor "for the support of her family." Hence the contract is not binding.

So far seems to be clear sailing. But in what a state of uncertainty is the legal profession over other questions arising under Sec. 1826 of the Code! The long and the short of that section seems to be about this: A married woman cannot under any circumstances bind her separate real estate, unless she is privately examined as required by law.

As to her personal estate, (1) she can bind this without her husband's consent for her necessary personal expenses, or for the support of her family; (2) or she may bind her separate personal estate to pay his debts, and of course hers, if she sign a paper specifically charging her personal estate and the husband joins in the note.

A case arose some years ago from Forsyth county in which our court was called on to say what is meant by the words "for the support of her family," and the judicial interpretation put upon them was very restrictive. A married lady was running a boarding house "for the support of her family." She went to merchant Clark and purchased meat, flour, &c., with which to feed the boarders, and thereby get money with which to support the family. The debt not being paid, Clark sued. "You can't sue me," she said, "I am a married woman." "But these things were for the support of your family."

The court held otherwise, and said that the statute did not embrace goods "bought for the successful prosecution of a business from the profits of which such support is to be obtained."

It has reference only to food and clothing, &c., for the family.

Married women are protected by the law in other ways.

If you give your bond to a man, and he does not collect anything on it in ten years, it is out of date. But if it had been to a married woman she could have sued on and collected the bond fifty or more years afterwards, if she were still married. No statute of limitations runs against a married woman.

Again, if a man and his wife engage in a fight with some one, the law is so tender with the sex that it presumes that the wife fought under the husband's directions. And, if she did not "egg on" the fight, and was not the aggressor, she would not be guilty. This is so of misdemeanors, even when the wife is not fighting to protect, but to assist the husband.

It used to be said that a husband could correct his wife, if the instrument of correction be not larger than his thumb. But this is not the law.

The law is loth to raise the curtain on domestic privacy, and will not do so unless the husband treat his wife cruelly, or do her serious or permanent injury.

Knowledge of this part of the law is of little practical use, we are glad to say, in conservative old North Carolina, where the twain are still, usually, lovingly one.

In old times it seems to be thought that a medicine must be nauseating to be effective. Now, all this is changed. Ayer's Sarsaparilla, one of the most powerful alteratives, is agreeable to most palates, the flavor being by no means medicinal.

Figs and Thistles.

The man who starts out to use up the Bible will be too old to enjoy his victory by the time he gets through with it.

We will never do much for others until we find out how much God has done for us.

Everything we do for Christ has something to do with making us like him.

It doesn't take the man who is anxious to serve God long to find a place to go to work.

If churches were built without back seats it would be hard to get a backslider into one.

You say the Lord's prayer every day, eh? Well and good; but how much of it do you live?

The surest way to take deadly aim against the world is to be looking straight into heaven when you pull the trigger.

If we don't know that Christ will bear all our burdens, it is time we were getting better acquainted with him.—Ex.

Removing Care from the Pastor's Face.

Bro. Bailey:—I notice in your issue of the RECORDER of June 15th a communication from Rev. C. N. Donaldson telling what deacons should do. It seems to me that there is one very important goal to which the brother wishes to lead the deacons, namely: "To watch the face of their pastor and see if there is a shadow of care there, and if so remove it," &c.

I am not, and have never been, a deacon. I do not possess the qualifications for one, and if I must be continually peeping through smoke of a ten-cent cigar to see if there is a "shadow of care" upon my pastor's face, may the good Lord deliver us from such a work.

I have nothing to say against our ministers. As a rule they are a godly, sacrificing set of men. Yet, they are human, and some of the poorest financiers I ever knew were preachers. I believe that our pastors should have a liberal support, but I do not want any preacher for my pastor whose face never has a "shadow of care" upon it. Let us have a closer relation between pastor and people.

More money should be used for the ministry, but in a majority of cases it should be used for more and better preaching. An absurdity for the very last "shadow of care" to be removed from the pastor's face while some of our dear ? members are in the county poor house, and many more calling for help. It is absurd to remove every "shadow of care" while the money some of them spend for cigars in one day would buy all the sugar and coffee many families use a month.

I have written in no controversial spirit, but it seems to me that the brother expects too much of the poor deacons in his own favor.

Now, Bro. Bailey, just one word about the RECORDER, and I shall have had my say. I have been reading the RECORDER for about twenty-five years, and I find it has become one of the indispensables. The longer I read it the better I love it. It does seem to me that any man who will not take and read the RECORDER has a deranged mind. The first three articles contributed by Judge Winston is worth a year's subscription.

CASHIE.

We not unfrequently hear some one speak of an "old fashioned revival." The question arises how far back must we go in order to find such meetings? Is not the allusion based upon that reverence for old methods which if introduced now would produce consternation? The chief characteristic of the old fashioned revival was that God poured out his Spirit abundantly, and he is just as willing to do that now as he has ever been. It is only our unbelief that hinders the mighty manifestation of God's power.—Central Baptist.

The best universities cannot teach us the divine art of sympathy. We must walk in the deep valleys ourselves, and then we can be guides to other souls. We must feel the strain and carry the burden and endure the struggle ourselves, and then we can be touched, and can give help to others in life's sore stress and poignant need.—Rev. J. R. Miller.

Sufferers from chills and fever, who have used quinine as a remedy, will appreciatiate Ayer's Ague Cure. This preparation, if taken according to directions, is warranted a sure cure. Residents in malarial districts should not be without it.

To do a thing simply in pride is ignoble. Remember the rock whence you are hewn.

POKINE.

I have used the within remedy (Pokine) with great success. JAMES H. LASSITER.

I have used the Pokine Remedy (prepared by W. T. Cheatham, Jr.) in case of Sciatica with the result of positive relief in a few hours, and believe if used as directed is will effect a permanent cure.
J. L. H. MISSILLIER.

MARCH 6, 1891.
For the benefit of the public, I unhesitatingly recommend Cheatham's Wonderful remedy, "Pokine," to all sufferers of rheumatism. It has produced marvelous results in my case. I was a sufferer of the malady for five years, and after taking a few bottles was entirely cured.
Very respectfully,
W. W. DOWTIN.

HENDERSON, N. C., March 7, '91.
MR. W. T. CHEATHAM:
Dear Sir—My wife was down in bed with rheumatism, and the Pokine I bought of you gave her relief after taking four doses. She has not been troubled since. It is the best medicine she ever took for rheumatism. Respectfully,
ZACK DAVIS.

MR. W. T. CHEATHAM, JR.:
Dear Sir—I have been afflicted with rheumatism time and again, for the past thirteen years. I have received more relief from Pokine than any medicine I ever took, and therefore take great pleasure in recommending it to all sufferers of rheumatism. Very respectfully,
F. G. MITCHELL.

JANUARY 19, 1891.
W. T. CHEATHAM, JR.:
Dear Sir—I desire to say that in January last I was down with rheumatism; my suffering was great, and I was completely prostrated. One bottle of your Pokine completely relieved me, and I have not had any rheumatism since. My son also was relieved of rheumatism by Pokine.
Yours truly,
CHARLES G. BURROUGHS.

HENDERSON, N. C., Sept. 16, '91.
MR. W. T. CHEATHAM, JR.:
Your rheumatic cure, Pokine, has completely cured me. I. M. GREEN.

MR. W. T. CHEATHAM, JR., Henderson, N. C.:
Dear Sir—Being asked my opinion of your rheumatic remedy, Pokine, will gladly state I deem it the only medicine of its kind on the market that will accomplish that which is exclusively claimed for it. Being a sufferer of rheumatism, I consequently tried many remedies, until finally relieved by Pokine. Very respectfully,
J. A. KELLY.

Emergency Men.

I lately spent a part of an afternoon in the Massachusetts Firemen's Convention. It was interesting to look into the faces of the men who listen for the gong, and share with their noble horses in the hurry to the fire. But the thing that most interested me was an exercise by Professor Gulick of Springfield, in which he showed what could be done for those injured in accidents. He had a class of twenty young men from the Christian Training School, who, so far as acting could do it, demonstrated what could be done in saving life. Drowning, broken limbs, cut arteries and veins, and burns, were all treated before us. Men were carried down a ladder from a burning building, and those who drop in fainting spells or rave in fits were cared for.

The beautiful part of it all was, that there were no scientific appliances. Handkerchiefs and torn up clothing and suspenders were used for bandages. Two poles and a blanket made a good stretcher. A fireman's axe converted a rough board into splints, and a knot in a bandage was pressed so hard on an artery that the life blood could not waste. I thought how much life could be saved if only common people knew how to use common things. We cannot all be skilled surgeons, but we may save life till the surgeon comes, and I was so glad those firemen saw christian men do this. Then came another thought, in the spiritual world there is a call for emergency men. There are broken bones because of wrecks, there are bleeding veins cut by some sharp knife or splinter—there are those drowned in the whirlpool of unbelief, and others are burned by lust and appetite. Who can save them? The trained soul surgeons are not at hand, and there are not enough of them. The need is that our young people know how to bind up a wound with truth as common as a handkerchief. That they know how to make bandages of the garments of a common salvation, and splints for broken bones out of a rough experience with the common axe of the word.

Ah! What a help it would be to the hospital surgeons if every patient was brought in with emergency bandages. In many cases all he would have to do would be to replace with smoother material, and assure the patient of his hopeful condition. So with the pastor to whom his workers come bringing those who have been treated by themselves.

I suggest to our Educational Committee of the Young People's Union, the training of emergency men. "What would you say to one who is alarmed by danger or sickness?" "How would you treat a soul almost to be consumed with the fire of appetite?" "How would you resuscitate a christian who was drowned in the pleasures of the world?"

Let every society have an emergency committee, and that a committee of the whole. —Rev. Dr. A. Blackburn, in Boston Watchman.

Ending at the End.

A man goes up stairs at night in the dark. He has a pitcher of ice-water in his hand. After he reaches the top step he lifts up his right as if there were another step there. Upon find that there are no more steps, he puts his right foot down rather disappointedly on a level with his left foot and splashes some of the ice-water upon his sleeve, his vest, or his slipper. There is a moral to this. It is always well to stop when you reach the end of a thing. When a man is preaching, it is best for him to stop when he has reached the end of his sermon. If he stops just a little before the end, all the better, sometimes. This will be apt to make his hearers wish there was more. There are cases in which the gift of discontinuance is quite as valuable as the gift of continuance. —C. L. Williams, in Young People's Union.

The New Catechism.

"Catechism of Bible Teaching" was prepared by Dr. John A. Broadus, at the joint solicitation of the American Baptist Publication Society and the Southern Baptist Convention, in order that there might be something a little different from the catechisms in existence, and better calculated to come into a more general circulation.

The catechism is comprehensive while brief, exact and yet not technical in its expressions, and is written in that popular, familiar style which is so characteristic of Dr. Broadus. A change has been made from the ordinary style of catechisms in the type and arrangement of questions and answers, both being printed alike, and taken together, will form an entire paragraph. We trust that it will find its way into a very general circulation, and thus do the work for which it has been provided. Order from any of the Houses of the American Baptist Publication Society.

Luther used to teach his children to read the Bible in the following way: First to read through one book carefully, then to study chapter by chapter, and then verse by verse, and lastly word by word; for, he said: "It is like a person shaking a fruit tree: first shaking the tree and gathering up the fruit which falls to the ground, and then shaking each branch, and afterward each twig of the branch, and last of all looking carefully under each leaf to see that no fruit remains. In this way, and in no other, shall we also find the hidden treasures that are in the Bible."—Exchange.

When Napoleon went on the field of Marengo, it was late in the afternoon, and he saw that the battle was really lost; but looking at the western sun he said, "There is just time to recover the day!" and giving out his orders with rapid and characteristic energy, he turned defeat into victory. So, although your sun is near the setting, there is time to recover the day. Avail yourself of the eventide, lest your life end in eternal failure.—Dr. W. M. Taylor.

Centennary of Missions.

The Centennial Committee of the Southern Baptist Convention met in Richmond June 22d and 23d and considered various matters pertaining to the progress and prospects of the work entrusted to their hands. The following items are of some interest to the public.

To meet a difficulty that has arisen in several quarters growing out of certain language heretofore used, it was

Resolved, That it is the sense of this Committee that the words "permanent centennial fund of $250,000," as used in our last report to the Southern Baptist Convention were not intended to designate an endowment fund, the interest of which only shall be used, but a fund for "Bible translation, chapel-building, a church edifice fund, and other permanent work." If therefore any donor of a special sum shall see fit to direct that his gift be invested and only the interest expended, his wishes must be sacredly observed, but without such specific instructions these gifts will be turned over to the Boards for the benefit of their work, and the Boards will be authorized and expected to expend the said funds, as occasion may require, in work of a permanent character connected with their missionary operations.

In response to a communication from the Foreign Board setting forth the fact that a large part of the money now coming in is sent for the Centennial fund, and that if it should be all held for permanent work, the Board would be greatly embarassed for means even to support missionaries now on the field, and utterly unable to send out others, it was

Resolved, That this Centennial Committee respectfully recommend to the Boards to use all proper methods, by circulars, by instructions to their agents, and by use of their own publications, and the denominational papers generally, to make clear to all our brethren that Centennial contributions may be either for the support and enlargement of the present work of the Boards or for the fund for permanent work at the option of the donors; and it is understood that only those contributions specifically designated for the latter fund will be put to the credit of that fund.

Several papers for publication in tract form, and a programme for a mass meeting in Louisville, Ky., Oct. 2d-4th, the one hundreth anniversary of the organization at Kettering, were considered and adopted.

Steps were taken to secure the services of several distinguished speakers for a series of meetings in a number of States immediately following the Louisville meeting and continuing until December. The details for these require much correspondence before any public announcement can be made. As indicating in a general way the design of these meetings, it was

Resolved, That the representatives of this Committee be and are hereby instructed in advocating the interests and claims of the Centennial, to emphasize the idea of enlarged operations as well as the raising of a fund for permanent work, and to strive constantly to uplift our people to a higher plane of living for Christ and giving systematically for the promotion of his cause.

The subscriptions taken at Atlanta during the Convention were turned over to Dr. T. P. Bell, Asst. Sec. F. M. Board, for collection. The subscribers are earnestly requested to assist him in this work, and particularly in remitting to state if they desire any particular designation of their gifts.

In view of Dr. Eaton's proposed absence for two months in Europe, the undersigned was designated as chairman pro tem. of the Committee. H. H. HARRIS.

We are told that India and China can wait while we evangelize our own country. But they can not wait. They are in a crisis. They are just waking from the sleep of centuries. The church is responsible to them and for them. And the church can not afford to wait to evangelize them. The highest life of the church depends on its extending all its energies toward them. Those teeming millions can be saved by the church now in the near future, and what shall we answer for their souls if they are not?—F. M. Journal.

Two Pennies a Week.

Two cents a week and a prayer
A tiny gift may be,
But it helps to do a wonderful work
For our sisters across the sea.

Five cents a week and a prayer
From our abundant store,
It was never missed, for its place was filled
By a Father's gift of more.

Ten cents a week and a prayer;
Perhaps 'twas a sacrifice,
But treasure came from the storehouse above
Outweighing by far the price.

Pennies a week and a prayer;
'Twas the prayer, perhaps, after all,
That the work has done and a blessing brought,
The gift was so very small.

Pennies a week and a prayer,
Freely and heartily given.
The treasures of earth will all melt away;
This is treasure laid up in heaven.

Pennies a week and a prayer
A tiny gift may be,
But it helps to do such wonderful work
For our sisters across the sea.—Ex.

The Two Cables.

The two cables that hold us to the home land are our letters and the prayers of our friends. We become quite reconciled to the deprivation of a daily mail and to the reception of a mail from America but once in seven or ten days. The postman's welcome rap, however, suddenly transports us to the land whence we came. Voices and sights with which we have been familiar come freshly to mind. We behold, as in a vision, the fireside, the church, the circle of friends from which we emigrated. Were it not for that mail bag, with its messages of affection and its news-laden publications, we should be hermits indeed. The reading of the mail over, we relapse into the new world into which we have come, to emerge again when the correspondence must be answered. Thus we pass from world to world, held always by the strands of that cable.

The other cable is the prayers of our friends. As it is always sunrise and sunset at some two points on the earth's surface, so two streams of prayer, morning and evening, are always ascending to the throne of grace. On these streams we know we are borne. In the foreign field one realizes, even more vividly than at home, that there is a "common mercy-seat;" also, that around that common mercy-seat, "friend holds fellowship with friend;" not fellowship in the sense of the spiritualist, that face meets face or spirit meets spirit, but fellowship in the sense that each worshipper engages in the same holy act, in the same holy place, with the same holy result. They pray, we pray; the God of missions hears. When a day of particularly deep peace is given us, it may be the midst of trying circumstances, we know that the incercessors are "striving together with us, in their prayers to God for us."—F. M. Journal.

Two Cents a Week.

A missionary in China says that any church society of sixty members, each giving two cents per week, could preach yearly, through a native preacher, to fifty thousand persons. He knows of five societies who have adopted the plan, and working together provide a floating-chapel and dispensary, a christian doctor, and two native preachers; and during last November and December they preached in one hundred villages, and gave medical aid to more than one thousand persons. Here is an opportunity for doing good that brings one very near to the work. In addition to the usual gift for missions, why not unite with fifty-nine others in the support of a native preacher? Divide the sixty in sets of ten each, one of whom shall be treasurer and secretary.—Gospel in all Lands.

MT. AIRY

White Sulphur Spring.

This celebrated summer resort will open June 15th. The hotel has been thoroughly renovated, new furniture placed in every room in the building. The Spring is at the foot of the Blue Ridge Mountains. In front is a beautiful park of meadow land covered with grass and flowers, and through this beautifully valley flows the Ararat River. Up this lovely valley blows from the mountain tops a grateful breeze, which makes cool as the beds necessary during the warmest summer nights.

The property has recently been purchased by a stock company with an abundance of capital. No pains or expense will be spared which can add to the comfort and pleasure of those who come to spend the summer in the most beautiful mountain region to be found in the world.

Guests will be met at Mt. Airy, the terminus of the C. F. & Y. V. R. R., and conveyed to the Spring without any stop-over at the hotel.

Special rates furnished by all railroads to persons coming to the Spring. Board, $25.00 and $30.00 per month, and $8.00 and $16 00 per week. Children under 12 years, and servants, at half rates. Address

Constitution of the Sunday-school Missionary Society of the First Baptist Church of Raleigh, N. C.

ADOPTED SUNDAY MORNING, JULY 3, 1892.

Thanking God for his great goodness in a christian land, and determined this Centennial Year of Missions to enlist for life in the endeavor to give these blessings to others in obedience to Christ's last command, we, the First Baptist Sunday-school of Raleigh, organize ourselves into a Missionary Society with the following constitution:

ART. 1. This Society shall be called "The Sunday-school Missionary Society of the First Baptist Church of Raleigh, N. C."

ART. 2. Its object shall be, during the Centennial Year of Missions, to aid the Centennial Permanent Fund for Home and Foreign Missions, and for the following years to aid State, Home and Foreign Missions.

ART. 3. Its members shall be the members of the First Baptist Sunday-school of Raleigh and their friends, said members having agreed to aid the objects stated.

ART. 4. The dues of the Society shall be one cent a month, or amounts individually pledged to the Mission Leaders.

ART. 5. The officers shall be the officers of the Sunday-school, the Superintendent being the President, and the Treasurer, Secretary and other officers of the Sunday-school filling the same offices in the Society. Each teacher shall become a Mission Leader, selecting from his class such assistants as he may need.

ART. 6. The duties of the President, Secretary, Treasurer and Organist shall be those usual to such officers. The duty of the Mission Leaders shall be, with the assistance of a Class Treasurer, to gather and report the contributions of their classes, to prepare the monthly missionary exercises, when their classes shall be called upon to lead, and to endeavor unceasingly to interest and inform their classes in the work of all our mission fields.

ART. 7. The meetings, not to exceed one hour in length, shall be held once a month, immediately after the close of the Sunday-school or on Sunday afternoon.

ART. 8. The monthly exercises shall be arranged and taken charge of by each class or group of classes, in turn, under the direction of the President.

SUGGESTIONS.

The committee reporting the constitution for the consideration of the School—Dr. J. W. Carter, J. C. Marcom and J. M. Heck—offered the following suggestions:

1. That each class become a stockholder in the Permanent Fund during the Centennial Year. Chapel cards and certificates can be had free from the Woman's Central Committee of Missions, Raleigh, N. C.

2. That the younger members of the Society be urged to earn and give their own money to the Society.

3. That the meetings be brief, varied and interspersed with singing by the whole school.

4. That the Secretary send names of officers and quarterly report of amount of contributions to the Woman's Central Committee of Missions, Raleigh, N. C., who will, on the receipt of the same, send them free each month a package of missionary literature, which will assist in preparing the exercises for the monthly meetings.

5. That all money be sent in the name of the Society to Mr. J. D. Boushall, Treasurer Baptist State Convention, Raleigh, N. C.

Missionary Canvass in Roanoke Union.

The Word "Deaconate."

Dear Editor:—The word "Deaconate" has appeared in the columns of your paper recently. May I ask who is the maker of the word? And what necessity is there for its coming into our language? Can the word be found in any dictionary of the English language? I have consulted Worcester and Webster, but it is not given by either of them; they give "deacon-hood," "deaconry," "deaconship," and "diaconate," but not deaconate. While the friends are telling us of the Scriptural duties of a church officer, let us be clearly informed as to what the office is that he is to fill. Let us guard our ecclesiastical words with strictness.

A. E. OWEN.

One of the troubles of life is the breaking of lamp-chimneys. Needless. Macbeth's "pearl top" and "pearl glass" are tough against heat.

You will save nine-tenths of your chimney-money by using them,

"Pearl top" fits most of the little lamps; "pearl glass" is for "Rochester," "Pittsburgh," "Duplex," etc.

We make a great many sizes and shapes, all of tough glass. You can get the right ones. Talk with your dealer about it.

JENRETTE—REGAN—On Nov. 11th, 1891, at the residence of the bride's father, in White Oak Township, by Rev. Wm. Brunt, Isaac Jenrette of Brunswick county and Miss Amaretta Regan of Bladen county, N. C.

DIED.

EVANS—Near Williamsoro, N. C., June 27th, 1892, Walter G. Evans, son of Thomas Evans, died suddenly while in the creek bathing, aged fourteen years, ten months and twenty-eight days. His death could not be described. He was loved by many, who are left to mourn his loss. May God bless his beloved family through life. P. T. S.

WESTER—Alwise Providence saw fit on May 31st to call to his own embrace little Siddie Cornelius, infant son of A. B. Wester. His short life, only thirteen months and seven days, was enough to entwine himself about many loving hearts which now feel an aching void that God alone can fill. The Lord comfort the bereaved father and loved ones.

AUNT BETTIE.

KNOTT—"The one shall be taken, and the other left." Little Grover Cleveland and his twin brother, Allen Thurman, came to the home of brother and sister Fielding Knott in Granville county, N. C., July 29th, 1889. In this double gift a spring of new, peculiar and deep joy was opened; and from that birth-hour until the sad Sabbath night, June 27th, 1892, in which they were parted, they cost the happy family nothing but tears of thankfulness and a double source of delight. They were the last of more than a dozen children, and God set the beautiful and lovely twins in the midst of the household to be a fountain of light and life springing up in joyous pride and constant blessedness. The names given them were most appropriate, not to say prophetic, for they ruled well and nobly in the family. In early childhood the heart tendrils of one unconsciously took hold on father and of the other on mother. Cleveland was papa's shadow and little man, and Thurman mama's.

Both of the boys had superb health and spent much of their time in frolicsome and happy play.

On Saturday they were in the store-room, busy with the cook and full of glee and happiness. With what sure and uplifting pride and satisfaction were the rollicking and frolicking ways and plays of the twins watched! Double-boys engage in the same sports and pleasures as other children, except they seem to get out of everything a double-fold portion. Such is the privilege and mystery of twin-life. How sad that they should be separated in this unity and community of life, labor and happiness! It seems like a real division of self, part on this side and part on the other side of the river. Presently, as dinner was in preparation, Cleveland espied a little chicken that had roguishly wandered into the cook-room. Immediately he went for the intruder with his accustomed vim and courage. In the hot and hasty pursuit, by some untoward means, a vessel was upset that contained some hot liquid. He had thrust his little hand into it, and its contents were scattered over the floor and upon himself. The scalds on his hand, leg and back were painful but not serious. Out of anxiety and precaution the family physician was called, and soon the burns were nicely dressed and the little sufferer slept in comfort. "He will be all right in a day or two," said the physician—"nothing serious." Sunday came and went, but brought not the expected relief and rest. At night some alarm was occasioned by symptoms of fearful complication, just how or what no one could tell. All that could be done by skill and affection was unavailing, and before day death came to the relief of the little sufferer. How soon that which seemed of little moment issued in a dark, dreary and mysterious dispensation of untold trouble and sorrow! The family and friends were startled as by thunder out of a clear sky, as by unearthly darkness at noon-day. Cleveland is dead—the beautiful bud all full of tenderness, fragrance and promise is blasted, and the light, the joyous and lovely light of the double-star has gone down in darkness and gloom! On Monday afternoon, June 27, we bore away the darling child to his burial in the family cemetery hard by his late home.

Now that the twins are separated, and so suddenly, what can be said to comfort the bleeding heart? It is hard to fill an empty crib—one that grew deeper until it deepened into a grave. But the tender flower, cherished so tenderly and lent so briefly to adorn the home, is now transplanted to the "kingdom of glory" where it will expand into more wondrous beauty and loveliness than is possible for earth culture. "Neither can they die any more: for they are equal unto the angels; and are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection." Jesus said, "Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not; for of such is the kingdom of God." A child's work on earth is not finished when it dies. The heart-ache stillness of an empty crib or a little mound exerts an invisible and untold power in moving to action or restraining from evil. The blessed memory of sainted darlings will awaken and cherish the hope of a blissful reunion in immortality. "I shall go to him, but he shall not return to me." "Thy son liveth," cometh from the arms of the great Shepherd and alike challenges comfort and following. "A little child shall lead them" has often, in infinite blessedness and sanctified sorrow, led weary feet "up higher," to the hill-top of glory, all decorated with angelic buds plucked from an earthly garden. "Let not your hearts be troubled;" a lovely cherub, in the shining band of little ones, watches and waits to welcome "dear father and mother" into everlasting habitations. Breathe softly nature's just lament:

"I shall miss him when the flowers come,
In the garden where he played;
I shall miss him more by the fireside
When the flowers have all decayed.
I shall see his toys and his empty chair,
And the horse he used to ride;
And they will speak, with a silent speech,
Of the little boy that died.

"We shall all go home to our Father's house—
To our Father's house in the skies,
Where the hope of our soul shall have no blight,
And our love no broken ties;
And one of the joys of our heaven shall be
The little boy that died."

Better Than Gold.

Better than grandeur, better than gold,
Than rank and title a thousand fold,
Is a healthy body and mind at ease
And simple pleasures that always please.
A soul that another's joy can know,
A heart that can feel for another's woe,
With sympathies large enough to enfold
All men as brothers is better than gold.

Better than gold is a conscience clear,
Though toiling for bread in an humble sphere,
Doubly blessed with content and health,
Untried by lusts and cares of wealth,
Lowly living and lofty thought
Adorn and ennoble a poor man's cot,
For mind and morals in nature's plan
Are the genuine tests of a gentleman.

Better than gold is the sweet repose
Of the sons of toil when the labors close,
Better than gold is the poor man's sleep,
And the balm that drops on his slumbers deep,
Bring sleeping draughts on the downy bed
Where luxury pillows its aching head.
The toiler simple opiate deems
A shorter route to the land of dreams.

Better than gold is a thinking mind,
That in the realms of books can find
A treasure surpassing Australian ore,
And living with the great and good of yore,
The sage's lore and the poet's lay
The glories of empires passed away;
The world's great dream will thus unfold
And yield a pleasure better than gold.

Better than gold is a peaceful home
Where all the fireside characters come,
The shrine of love the heaven of life,
Hallowed by mother, or sister, or wife.
However humble the home may be,
Or tried with sorrow by heaven's decree,
The blessings that never were bought or sold,
And centre there are better than gold.

Lilly's Enemy.

"Mother, there is such a disagreeable girl at school; she pulled my hair this morning, and called me a cry-baby," said Lilly, looking up with tearful eyes into her mother's face. "Oh, you cannot think what a horrid girl she is; nobody likes her. I wish Mrs. Marsland would send her away from our school;" and Lilly's iron came to a standstill.

"What is the name of the dreadful girl, and where does she live?" asked Mrs. Rushton, putting her arm around her little daughter in token of sympathy.

"She is called Dora Hilton, and lives in Grange road with her grandmother. I think her father and mother are dead."

"Poor child!" said Mrs. Rushton.

"Mother, why do you call her 'poor child?'" cried Lilly excitedly; "she is my enemy."

"Isn't she a poor child if she has no parents? Now, suppose you were to try to turn this enemy into a friend?"

"Oh, mother, I couldn't."

"I think you could. What did Jesus tell you to do our enemies?"

"He told us to love them," answered Lilly, hanging her head; "but really I could never love Dora Hilton."

"Have you tried?" asked Mrs. Rushton, gravely. "When Dora pulled your hair and said rude things, what did you do?"

"I—I made faces at her," stammered Lilly, ashamed at the recollection.

"That was not very kind. Well, now, to-morrow try a different plan. Watch for an opportunity to help Dora in some way, and if she speaks rudely, answer pleasantly."

Lilly thought this advice very hard to follow, but resolved to try. The very next day came an opportunity.

Dora had forgotten her spelling book, and tried to borrow one in order to look over her lesson before the class.

But none of the girls would lend a book, for they all disliked Dora.

Lilly hesitated a moment, and then went quietly to her.

"You may have my book," she said pleasantly. "I know my lesson."

Dora looked very much surprised, but took the book without even saying "Thank you," and Lilly felt just a little mortified.

That night Lilly added to her usual evening prayer these words: "Oh, dear Lord Jesus, help me to love my enemy!" and somehow she felt very happy as she crept into bed.

For several days Lilly continued to do little kindnesses for her disagreeable schoolfellow, whenever she found an opportunity, but without much apparent result.

One afternoon as she was walking home from school, she heard a voice calling: "Lilly—Lilly Rushton, wait for me. I want to speak to you."

It was Dora, who came up breathless with the haste she had made.

"Tell me why you have been so pleasant to me this week?" she began abruptly.

"Because I want to make you my friend instead of my enemy," answered Lilly quaintly; then seeing that Dora looked puzzled, she told her what Mrs. Rushton had advised.

"I would like very much to be your friend," cried Dora. "I will never tease you again."

Woman's Temper.

There are men who suppose they have all the annoyances. They say it is the store that ruffles the disposition, but if they could only stay at home as do their wives, and sisters and daughters, they would be all the time sweet and fair as a white pond lily. Let some of the masculine lecturers on placidity of temper, try for one week the cares of the household and the family. Let the man sleep with the baby on one arm all night, and one ear open to the children with the whooping cough in the adjoining apartment. Let him see the tray of crockery and the cook fall down stairs, and nothing saved but the pieces. Let the pump give out on wash-day, and the stove-pipe, when too hot for handling, get dislocated. Let the pudding come out of the stove as stiff as a poker. Let the gossiping gambler of all classes come in and tell all the disagreeable things that neighbors have been saying. Let the lungs be worn out by staying in doors without fresh air, and the needle be threaded with nerves exhausted. After one week's household annoyances he would conclude that his business is heaven, and the clatter of noisy men sweet and rich as Beethoven's symphony. We think Mary of Bethany a little to blame for not helping Martha get the dinner. If women sympathize with men in the troubles of store and field, let the men also sympathize with the women in troubles of housekeeping. Many a housewife has died of her annoyances.—Ex.

The Value of Time.

One morning, when Benjamin Franklin was busy in the press room on his newspaper, a lounger stepped into the book store and spent an hour or more looking over the books. Finally he seemed to settle upon one, and asked the clerk the price.

"One dollar," the clerk replied.

"One dollar," echoed the lounger, can't you take less than that?"

"One dollar is the price," the clerk answered.

The would-be purchaser looked over the books a while longer and inquired, "Is Mr. Franklin in?"

"Yes, he's busy in the printing office," the clerk replied.

"Well, I want to see him," said the man.

The clerk told Mr. Franklin that a gentleman was in the store, waiting to see him. Franklin soon appeared and the stranger said:

"What is the lowest, Mr. Franklin, that you can take for that book?"

"One dollar and a quarter," was the prompt answer.

"One dollar and a quarter! Why, your clerk asked me only a dollar just now."

"True," replied Franklin, "and I could have better afforded to take a dollar than to leave my work."

The man seemed surprised, and, wishing to end a parley of his own seeking, said: "Well, come now, tell your lowest price for this book."

"One dollar and a half."

"A dollar and a half! Why, you offered it yourself for a dollar and a quarter."

"Yes," said Franklin, coolly, "and I had better have taken that price then, than a dollar and a half now."

This was a way of trade which took the man quite by surprise. Without a word he laid the money on the counter, took his book and left the store.—Exchange.

If I Were You, my Boy.

I wouldn't be ashamed to do right any where. I would not do anything that I would not be willing for everybody to know.

I wouldn't conclude that I knew more than my father before I had been fifty miles away from home.

I wouldn't go into the company of boys who use bad language.

I wouldn't get in the sulks and pout whenever I couldn't have my own way about everything.

I wouldn't let any other boy get ahead of me in my studies.

I wouldn't abuse little boys who had no big brother for me to be afraid of.

I would learn to be polite to everybody.

I wouldn't cry for anything when mamma or papa told me it was not good for me.

I would try to see if I couldn't get people to like me, by being civil to everybody.

I would never make fun of children because they were not dressed nicely.

I would try to learn something useful every day, and whenever I saw men making anything I would watch to see how they did it.

I would keep my hands and face clean and my hair brushed without having to be told to.

I would be respectful to old people, and behave so that my parents would not be ashamed of me.

I would be in earnest about everything. When I had to work I would do it with all my might. I would study with all my might.

I would read books and papers which would want to make me know something and do something which would benefit other people.

I would have as good a time as I could in this world, but I wouldn't tell lies, nor steal, nor be mean to anybody.

I would pray every day, and I would ask Jesus to make me a good boy and show me how to go to heaven.—Exchange.

People Who Travel.

Change of climate or water very often affects the bowels seriously. If on the first symptoms of any disturbance you would take Dr. Biggers' Huckleberry Cordial much suffering might be saved.

Treatment of the Ear.

The human ear is a much more delicate organ than most people suppose. It is extremely dangerous to interfere with it by the use of ear-picks or any of the various instruments used for the purpose of cleaning it from wax. The wax is a natural secretion, and unless the ear becomes diseased, it does not accumulate any faster than is necessary to protect the passage from the entrance of insects and various particles which might otherwise be forced in and tend to interfere permanently with the hearing.

The greatest care is necessary in washing the ears of little children. They should be washed outside, but on the inside only so far as the finger, wrapped in a soft towel, will go. The practice of forcing a hair-pin, or any other hard instrument, into the ear passage is fraught with danger of injuring the membrane, causing permanent deafness. Earache is a malady of childhood, and causes most distressing pain. The simplest remedy for it is to take a little cotton, dipped in warm sweet-oil, and put it in the ear passage.

A danger that may arise from doing so simple a thing as this is that minute particles of the cotton may be left in the ear. To prevent this, some physicians advise making a little wad of the cotton and wrapping it in the finest and thinnest linen cambric that can be found, and dipping this in warm sweet-oil. In case of intense pain, a few drops of hot laudanum or camphor may be used with the oil.

When foreign bodies get into the ear, they should be removed by syringing them out with warm water. To attempt to remove anything from the ear passage by forcing an instrument in is a rash thing for any one except an aurist to undertake. The best medical practicioners refuse to treat affections of the ear or eye, but send their patients to specialists.—New York Tribune.

If you put your son under the tutorage of an ungodly teacher and he is allowed to walk under council and influence of his life for a time, you need not be surprised to see the young man standing in the way of sinners rather in that of the just. And a little later he will be found in the seat of the scornful. He will dishonor the God and the church of his fathers.—Statesville Christian Advocate.

Derma-Royale
The new discovery for dissolving and removing discolorations from the cuticle, and bleaching and brightening the complexion. In experimenting in the laundry with a new bleach for fine fabrics it was discovered that all spots, freckles, tan and other discolorations were quickly removed from the hands and arms without the slightest injury to the skin. The discovery was submitted to experienced Dermatologists and Physicians who prepared for us the formula of the marvelous Derma-Royale. THERE NEVER WAS ANYTHING LIKE IT. It is perfectly harmless and so simple a child can use it. Apply at night—the improvement apparent after a single application will surprise and delight you. It quickly dissolves and removes the worst forms of moth-patches, brown or liver spots, freckles, blackheads, blotches, sallowness, redness, tan and every discoloration of the cuticle. One bottle completely removes and cures the most aggravated case and thoroughly clears, whitens and beautifies the complexion. It has never failed—IT CANNOT FAIL. It is highly recommended by Physicians and its sure results warrant us in offering $500 REWARD.—To assure the public of its merits we agree to forfeit Five Hundred Dollars cash, for any case of moth-patches, brown spots, liver spots, blackheads, ugly or muddy skin, unnatural redness, freckles, tan or any other cutaneous discolorations, (excepting birth-marks, scars, and those of a scrofulous or kindred nature) that Derma-Royale will not quickly remove and cure. We also agree to forfeit Five Hundred Dollars to any person whose skin can be injured in the slightest possible manner, or to anyone whose complexion (no matter how bad it may be), will not be cleared, whitened, improved and beautified by the use of Derma-Royale.

The Christian's Royal Inheritance.

BY REV. GEORGE J. DOWELL.

Text—"Therefore let no man glory in men: for all things are yours; whether Paul, or Apollos, or Cephas, or the world, or life, or death, or things present, or things to come; all are yours; and ye are Christ's; and Christ is God's." 1 Cor. 3: 21—23.

How great is this word all! It is as high as heaven, as deep as hell, as broad as the universe of God.

When God said to Abraham, "Lift up thine eyes and look northward, and southward, and eastward, and westward; for all the land which thou seest, to thee will I give it, and to thy seed forever," that was a great grant. When he said to him further, "I will make thy descendants to multiply as the stars as heaven for multitude," the promise was greatly magnified. When Zaccheus stood before the blessed Saviour, and said, "Behold, Lord, I give half of my goods to feed the poor, and if I have wronged any man, I restore unto him fourfold," that was a noble resolution. When Herod promised the dancing damsel that he would give her anything she might ask of him, even to the half of his kingdom, it was a great promise, because he was rich. But all these promises sink into the utmost insignificance when we compare them with the inheritance contained in the text—"All things are yours, whether Paul, or Apollos, or Cephas, or the world, or life, or death, or things present, or things to come; all are yours; and ye are Christ's, and Christ is God's."

1st. It becomes us to consider for awhile some of the things which belong to the christian:

2d. The world belongs to the christian. This world upon which we live; which Satan claimed as his, when the old deceiver did not own a single foot of it. "The earth is the Lord's and the fullness thereof." This world then, humble follower of the Lord Jesus, belongs to you. It is yours to enjoy, to improve, to beautify, to adorn. Your Father has given it to you—with all its majestic forests, its boundless plains, its fertile fields, its silvery lakes, its babbling brooks, its meandering streams, its beautiful rivers, its grand old oceans, its rugged hills, its towering mountains, grand and sublime as they are, lift up their hoary heads and bathe them in the azure sky.

Use this world, but do not abuse it. Cut down these forests if you will, and with the timbers you take therefrom, build your ships with which to sail the briny deep and transport the goods from one country to another, and thus carry on the commerce of the world. Plow the land and till the soil, until its surface, tickled by implements of husbandry, shall laugh into a harvest that shall feed all flesh. Dig down the hills, throw up high places in the valleys, throw bridges across the rivers, bore holes through the mountains, and thread the country like network from town to town, and city to city, till iron bands of steel and ropes of wire shall unite the world and bring distant lands together. Sink shafts into the bowels of the earth, extract her ores of iron, silver, gold and valuable metals. Go down into the deep, and there fill your commissaries with the flesh and oil of the inhabitants which dwell beneath the white-capped waves of old ocean, and get all the good out of earth you can, and if you use this world as, not abusing it, God don't care, for the world is yours.

3d. The Bible is yours. What would we do without this blessed book? It is to us poor mortal souls as a book of directions. When a manufacturer constructs a machine, he also constructs and publishes a book which tells how to run and manage it. We are as machines wound up by God the great Manufacturer, which are self-propelling; and God puts into our hands the blessed Bible, which tells us to preserve self government and how to do it. As a chart to the navigator, as a compass to the sailor who travels unknown seas, as a lamp to the feet of him who travels in the dark, so the Bible is to us. Says one: "Some are always looking for the hard and mysterious things in the Bible, but I am not like they. I read the precious word like I eat fish. I eat the flesh and lay the bones aside. Some are always trying to eat the bones and never seem to relish the meat. I have the powers of digestion only to enjoy the meat. I shall in the future have the ability to digest the bones, till then I'll be content." "I love the Bible," said an old lady, "because it is God's holy word. It is the book that condemned me, and the book that acquitted me, the book that showed me I was a sinner, and the book that led me to the Saviour."

I love the Bible as a book of biography. It deals with the ideas and the conduct of men. And it is true biography. It does not show the true and leave out the false. It shows the good and the bad side of men. It shows them all around from every phase and every standpoint. All biographies, more or less, flatter—not so this. I take up this Bible and I read of Abraham, the man of great faith, the father of the faithful. Well, I say, "What wonderful faith this man had!" I think of it, I admire it. I then think of how little faith I possess, and then I say, "Can I ever attain to such wonderful faith?" My heart sinks as I remember how weak I am, how many times I am brought to doubt and to fear lest I be deceived. I read on, and I find where even Abraham dissembled, where even he hesitated and faltered, and tried to deceive—and then I am encouraged—not because I am glad that Abraham sinned, but that human nature is the same to-day it was in the days of Abraham.

I read of the patience of Job. Well I say, "I never can attain to such a degree of patience." I read on, and I remember my impatience, and how easily I sometimes lose my self-control. Well, I say, "I never can govern my temper, and control my feelings as he." Ah! as I discover that this patient man grew impatient, lost his temper and his patience, cursed the day that he was born, the mother who brought him into the world, the sun which gave light upon that occasion, I am encouraged. Not, that I am glad that Job sinned, but that human nature has always been the same, and he who was forgiven gives me encouragement that if I go to God as he did, I may be forgiven too.

As I read of David, the man after God's own heart, I say, "I never can attain to such goodness." But as I read of the wickedness he committed in taking Uriah's wife, and having her husband put to death, I say, "Well, God will forgive me if I only put my trust in him." And so I read of imperfection in Paul, Apollos and Cephas, and though the people were divided in their estimation of them—some saying, "I am for Paul," others "I am for Apollos," and others "I am for Cephas"—Paul asks the question, "Is Christ divided?" and then I seem to hear the Apostle say to them, "No, no, but all things are yours," &c.

4th. Life is yours. You see I have put the Bible before life, because life without the Bible would be a complete failure. Go back to the days of ancient Greece or Rome, and as you behold the gross ignorance, the beastly sensuality, the licentiousness and murders that existed everywhere, as victims reeking in their own blood stained the altars of their bloody gods; as I behold the purity and virtue of vigorous men and beautiful women trodden under the heel of public opinion as an unholy thing; when I see lewdness and debauchery sold at a premium, I feel that human life without the Bible were a ten thousand fold greater curse than blessing.

It is a great responsibility to live. To be in this world and required to keep the moral law. To possess life with all its possibilities and all its responsibilities. To be the children and wards of God, and yet the custodians of our own bodies. To be the the architects of our own success or failure. The creators of our own happiness or misery. Life does not consist in mere existence, the accumulation of wealth, the gratification of inordinate desires, or the acquisition of public esteem; but in the establishing of character, the exercise of faith, the performance of good works, and development in spiritual growth—expansion in divine life. My brother, see that you live right. Make Christ your model. A good name is better than precious ointment, more fragrant and more diffusive, better than great riches, more desirable and more enduring.

5th. The church is yours—with all her deeds of glory, her sufferings, her trials, her triumphs or defeat. Whatever of good she has done in the past, or may do in the future, her toils, her sacrifices, her prayers, her tears, her blood, her consecrated talents of head, heart and wealth, all belong to the christian as a part of his inheritance.

What are you doing for your church? Are you helping it or are you hindering it? Are you helping it to be better, or are you helping it to be worse than its average sister? Are you helping to purge it of drones, hypocrites and wrong doers? Are you cultivating and fostering in it a spirit of charity, gentleness and love? Are you stirring its heart with the spirit of missions, the wail of the orphan, and the cry of the needy? Do you recognize the church as the body of Christ, and do you see that none of the members suffer? Do you remember he died for his church, the bride, the Lamb's wife? God grant you may love the church as Christ loved it. Let every christian learn the song and sing it out of a full heart:

"I love thy kingdom, Lord,
The house of thine abode;
The church our blest Redeemer saved,
With his own precious blood."

And let him remember her at a throne of grace.

"For her my tears shall fall,
For her my prayers ascend;
To her my toils and cares be given,
Till toils and cares shall end."

Glorious old church, fight on, struggle on, till the last son of Adam shall be redeemed; till Zion shall resound with the loud hosannas of those who shall sing the praises of their Lord, as they shall come up from the east and the west, the north and the south, having washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb.

6th. Afflictions are yours. Shall the christian pass through the world and have no sympathy with its sufferers? No. God intends they, too, who love him may be made perfect through suffering. Abraham, Job, Moses, David, Daniel, Paul, Peter, and Christ tasted, yea, drank of the cup, and we are no better than they. Affliction is God's refining pot, and it is meet that we should pass through it, that the dross may be consumed and the pure gold may be all the more precious and brighter by the fierce contact.

Two painters were frescoing a wall. One stepped back from the wall to the edge of the scaffold to view his work. He was so intent with what he had succeeded in accomplishing that he was just ready to step off backward. His fellow-workman, seeing his immediate danger, seized his brush and daubed the paint upon his work, while thus he was engaged in admiring it. Filled with anger, he rushed forward and cried out with flushed cheek and blood in his eye, "Why did you spoil my work?" "To save your life," was the reply, and then the man was satisfied. Ofttimes, as we are viewing the work of our own hands, does our Heavenly Father see we are so much engaged in it that we neglect the proper observance of those laws which are necessary for the preservation of our own spiritual lives, and as we thus idolize self, he comes and with the brush of affliction dashes destruction over our premeditated follies, and we may cry out with bitter disappointment until we realize that he did so to save our lives, and then we rejoice that our lives have been most mercifully preserved even if our work has been lost.

As the shepherd in Switzerland when his flocks have eaten the grass in the valleys so low that there is no longer good grazing, tries by various means to get them up the mountain side; when he can not toll them by calling or feeding, sets his dogs upon them to frighten them up, but to no avail; then, as a last resort, takes a little lamb in his arms and climbing over the rough and rugged places to a certain distance desired, holds out the lamb while it bleats, and thus attracts the attention of the mother sheep, which begins the ascent, followed by another and another, until the whole flock has left the closely-nipped grass, and now wades among that which has heretofore been uncropped, and which is sweet and luxuriant, and now the whole flock is in greener pastures, and are all again united and together; so God sometimes by affliction takes the little lamb, the infant babe, from its mother's breast and transplants it into the green pastures of heaven, where the mother looks by faith, and then the father is drawn, and another and another, until all the family are saved, one by one, never more to return to these low grounds of sorrow, but to enjoy the green pastures and to lie down by the still waters of heaven forever.

"Afflictions, though they seem severe,
Are oft in mercy sent."

7th. Death is yours—with all its destructive tendencies. It tears down this house which God has built and lays its different members low in the dust. It makes the body, once so young and spry and beautiful, lie in the dark and narrow tomb. It stops the plow in its unfinished furrow. It stops the workman and leaves the house to decay ere it is completed. It scatters household joys and frustrates our hopes and plans and purposes. It regards not our bitter sighs, heeds not our groans, and cares not for our crying. And yet death is given us of the Lord. He has changed death so that it is not now what it used to be. Once it was our enemy, but now it is our friend. Once he was to be greatly dreaded, but now he is to the christian a welcome messenger. He is a ferryman who comes to take us across the river. He is a servant sent to tell us the Master hath invited us to dine with the King. It is the voice of God saying to us,

"Servant of God, well done,
Rest from thy loved employ;
The battle's fought, the victory's won,
Enter the Master's joy."

Jesus ran his arm down Death's throat and jerked out his sting. So it does not have the same power over the body now that it used to have. Jesus laid down in the grave, and when he left it he left it supplied as a dormitory, so that the christian may lie there and remain.

"Asleep in Jesus, blessed sleep,
From which none ever wakes to weep;
A calm and undisturbed repose,
Unbroken by the last of foes."

8th. The resurrection is yours. The christian need not fear the grave, now since Jesus has risen from it. For awhile he may lie there, but he need not be afraid, for Jesus hath promised to be with him. He may take the sheet left there by Christ and lie down in it. We may take the napkin left there by the Saviour and wipe every tear from his eyes. The resurrection is a part of the christian's inheritance. "Because I live," says Christ, "ye shall live also." The seed may be planted, but a new body shall be given it in the resurrection. The body may die, but like the grass, it shall spring up again into newness of life and beauty. As the worm seems to die and then lives in the butterfly, so our bodies shall fade and die apparently, but in us are the elements of life which cannot decay, but which shall take on different forms of existence in the resurrection state.

The body, sown in weakness, shall be raised in power; sown a natural body, it shall be raised a spiritual body; sown in corruption, it shall be raised in incorruption; sown in dishonor, it shall be raised in glory. The battle-scarred and dusty soiled veteran shall be newly uniformed and promoted by the resurrection. The scattered family shall there be reunited. We shall know each other. We shall forever dwell together without the thought of parting.

"There shall we see and hear and know,
All we desired or wished below;
And every power find sweet employ,
In that eternal world of joy."

9th. Heaven is yours. The land that is fairer than day, where the sun never sets, the moon never wanes, where the inhabitants know nothing of sickness, sorrow nor death. Where every employment is a blessing; every word a benediction; every movement promoting that growth which rejuvenates and makes and perpetuates our youth; a state of felicity; a place of happiness; a land of plenty and a home of peace and rest. We may speak of its pearly gates, its golden streets, its river of life clear as crystal proceeding from the throne of God and of the Lamb. But no conception can approach it, for eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither hath it entered into the heart of man to conceive of the glorious things which God has in reservation for his children. Like Sheba's queen when she had come from the remotest parts of the earth to see and hear Solomon, we will when we see the beauties and glories of heaven, exclaim, "The half has never been told." This is in part the christian's royal possession.

Now in conclusion:

10th. Upon what condition are all things yours? If ye are Christ's. Having Christ, we possess everything. Without Christ, we are nothing. With Christ, we are rich; without Christ, we are poor, very poor. Are you Christ's? If so, I congratulate you—because you are his; because you have turned your back upon sin and sinful things; like Moses, who refused to be called the son of Pharaoh's daughter, choosing rather to suffer affliction with the children of God than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season, you have like him chosen the wealth of heaven in preference to those of earth; the service of God rather than the service of the wicked one; and upon this condition I congratulate you. "All things are yours; whether Paul, or Apollos, or Cephas, or life, or death, or things present, or things to come; all are yours, and ye are Christ's, and Christ's is God's."

The Conversion of Zaccheus.

It is useless to talk about loving Jesus Christ and trusting him, and having the sweet assurance of forgiveness, and a glorious hope of heaven, unless these have made you break off your bad habits of whatsoever sort they may be, and cast them behind your backs. Strong emotion, sweet deep feeling, assured confidence in the sense of forgiveness and the hope of heaven, are all very well. Let us see your faith by your works; and of these works the chief is,—behold the evil that I did I do it no more: "Behold! Lord! the half of my goods I give to the poor." There was a young ruler who could not make up his mind to part with wealth to follow Christ. Zaccheus has so completely made up his mind to follow Christ that he does not need to be bidden to give up his worldly goods. The half given to the poor, and four-fold restoration to those whom he had wronged, would not leave much. How astonished Zaccheus would have been if anybody had said to him that morning, "Zaccheus! before this night falls you will be next door to a pauper; and you will be a happier man than you are now."

So, dear friends, like him, all of us may, if we will and if we need, make a sudden right-about-face that shall alter the complexion of our whole future. People tell us that sudden conversions are suspicious. So they may be in certain cases. But the moment when a man makes up his mind to change the direction in which his face is set will always be a moment, however long may be the hesitation, and the meditation, and the preparation that led up to it.—Rev. Alexander Maclaren, D. D.

You are invited at church the worst seats you know there will be the fewest there.

"Things not in Hell."

We use this mode of argument to describe the severity of the punishment of the lost. The negative side shown will give us a clear notion of the affirmative. All places and things may be known by the qualities they have or those that they do not have.

Things not in hell are indeed very numerous, and so are those that are in that place equally many. Thousands of people think only of gay and pleasant society, where the splendor of fashion allures and youthful beauty charms, where all the talk is on themes of love, expressed in language of finest romance style, and their lives are dreamed to be like the grandest victors in novel fiction. Some delight in that company where only the chaste are found, and where all that tends to riotness is excluded. Others strive for those who are conversant on high lines of knowledge, and nothing amuses them but this sort of things, mixed up glowing colors. But these are things not in hell. There will be no gaiety, no pleasure, no moral, and no beauty in that empire of misery. Here, we may find sympathizing friends when the hand of sickness comes, or when we are bowed down in common sorrow. Should we be swept into the vortex of poverty, or the strong arm of the law, hurry us away to the gloomy walls. Then, so soon as the calamity comes, some kind friend lends a helping hand or speaks a word of comfort. And the angel of hope never forsakes us, no matter how heavy the shower of tears, or how dark the prison walls. Some ray of grace divine shines away the mist of trouble. These are things not in hell, for there will be no friends, no comforters, no hope or mercy there. Truth or veracity, the foundation of confidence—as treacherous as the world is, there can be found in church, state and trade, a current of truth. There are men in every trade who will comply with their word and stick to their contracts. Some statesmen may safely be confided with the rights of the people. Some churchmen would go to the stake rather than deny the faith they profess. These are things not to be found in the world of woe, for there the father of lies will abide, and penal vengeance be evermore poured out on the faults. Love, the golden chain that binds mankind in common interests, or the silver cord which ties hearts together at the hymenial altar. Love entwines its silver threads about all our hearts and harmonizes a thousand would be discords. It keeps subdued untold powers of hate and revenge; it makes labor sweet, and is a strong opiate against pain. It has reared hospitals in the land of war, houses for the sick and homeless, and clothed the poor and fed the hungry. It is a boundless source of good. But love is a thing that will not be in the land of eternal woe. There will not be one cord of love in all that populous place, nor one spark of kindness left in one soul. Hope, the time antidote against despair, a sort of perpetual stimulant to our being. No matter how often our hopes are blighted, we hope on; it rises "Phœnix like." The day may be ever so stormy and the night dark and dreary, yet we hope for the light of morning and the calm, cloudless day. Let the long train of adversity come sweeping over us in its most devastating form, taking liberties, friends and relatives; yet hope will mount above its wake and look for a better day. Some one has said,

"Auspicious hope! in thy sweet gardens grow Wreaths for each toil, a charm for every woe."

But there will be no hope in hell. Peace is the good news from heaven, whose echo has never ceased and whose harmony was set by the minstrel angels. Peace hushed the long cries of Punic wars and dried a thousand tearful eyes. It stopped the flow of arterial blood and diminished the dying groans. In every age it has scattered the red clouds of national revenge and quieted the cannon thunders. Its balmy wing has stilled ecclesiastical rage and quashed the most exciting factions of church. The hearts that have been made glad, and the souls that have been rejoiced by peace, are past all human computation. Sad to say, there is no peace in the long home of the lost; no cessation of mourning or mitigation of pain. All people are striving for happiness, and the wise and good Father has provided it for us if we would but take it on the terms offered. He has given us the diversified landscapes variegated by every color pleasing to the eye. Rich vegetation, ranging from the magnificent historic oaks to the small pavanding flowers from the blooming trees down to the tiny daffodil; small rosaries of the mountains on to the blossoming plains of cactus, all designed for happiness. The air is often loaded with rich fragrance from the meadow; the music of the delicate feathery people pour forth in gladdening strains; even the marshes and quagmires at times put forward flora's nicest colors and anthems of charming melody to rejoice us here. But these are things not in the land of the banished, for there will be no objects giving pleasure to that unpenitent people.

"In hell there will be no beauty to delight,
No splendors of grace divine;
There can no rest be found,
For all the time that eternity is round."

Some people are [illegible] nature for putting [illegible] thank her for putting [illegible] down.

The Biblical Recorder.

WEDNESDAY, JULY 13, 1892.

REV. C. T. BAILEY, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.
J. C. CADDELL, AGENT AND CORRESPONDENT.

THE resignations of Elders G. P. Bostick and D. W. Herring, two of our North Carolina missionaries in China, and their purposed plans of work, have, to some extent, made necessary the discussion of these things in this State.

It should be taken for granted that all, whether they be brethren on the foreign fields or at home, who discuss these plans, have an equal right to their opinions, are equally sincere, fallible and earnest—desiring to do only the things which will glorify our Lord in the advancement of his kingdom on earth.

We number brethren Bostick and Herring, and many of their kindred in this State, among our warm personal friends, and have for them personally nothing but the kindest feelings. These brethren have been to China for a few years, mingled freely with the people, studied the "plans and methods" of mission work, and have formed their opinions about the people and the work in China. They have also formulated, published, and, we think, extensively circulated their "plans and methods" of work for the government of the Baptist Conventions, Associations, churches and brethren in this country.

We have given the best thought of which we are capable to these "plans and methods," and have gone over again very carefully the present "plans and methods" of the Southern Baptist Convention. Our desire has been to find the differences in these "plans and methods," their advantages and disadvantages, and to present the results to our readers.

The study of these questions has shown that the "plans and methods" agree in some things, and that they differ very widely in other things.

They agree (1) in the recognition of the Bible as the one Book to guide us in mission work; (2) in the supreme authority of Jesus Christ to command his people to give the gospel to all the world; (3) in the obligation of his people to obey to the extent of their opportunities and ability; (4) in the loss of the pagan and a very large part of the papal world without the gospel as we believe it; (5) in the obligations now pressing upon us to send out, as the Lord may call, more missionaries to the heathen; (6) in the desirableness of more and better missionary intelligence among our churches, and the larger realization of individual responsibilities; (7) in the necessity for more earnest prayer to God, more liberal giving of our means, and greater consecration; (8) in the reduction of the expenses of the work, in every way possible, consistent with human wisdom, and the safety and efficiency of the missionaries; (9) in the full reliance on the gospel as the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth; and (10) in the necessity for the presence and power of the Holy Spirit in missions at home and among the heathen.

They differ (1) in the practical wisdom of sending missionaries at once into the interior of China; (2) in the practical wisdom of the Southern Baptist Convention purchasing and holding property—houses of worship and dwellings for its missionaries—in China; (3) in the practical wisdom of aiding, under any circumstances, poor, intelligent, pious Chinamen who feel impressed to preach the gospel to their own people; (4) in the organization and support of schools for the Chinese; (5) in the requirements for missionaries to wear Chinese clothes and live in Chinese houses and eat Chinese food; and (6) in the relation the missionary is to sustain to the local home churches, and the authority he is to have in fixing his own salary, his fields of labor, and the kind and extent of the information given to the churches about himself, his needs, plans, work, and the people among whom he lives.

Wherein these plans differ, the force and example of mission work in the New Testament, the sober judgment of, perhaps, ninety-five per cent. of all the missionaries sent out, and the practical wisdom of almost all of those at home, who have given time and intelligent study to these questions, are against the Crawford-Bostick-Herring plans.

There are thirty-four general Protestant organizations, like the Foreign Mission Board of the Southern Baptist Convention, in the United States, five in China, twenty-seven in England and sixteen in Germany, doing mission work among the heathen, and they are all working practically on the same "plans and methods" as our Board at Richmond. If there is, therefore, any one thing on which we seem to have the consensus of opinion of the missionary Protestant Christian world it is on the "plans and methods" of mission work in heathen lands.

The organizations referred to above had in 1891, according to reports now before us, 11,388 stations, 7,921 missionaries, 40,083 native laborers, and 726,883 church members, and they received for their work $11,106,714. These natives, converted heathen, gave last year to the Lord's cause $652,624.

Then, too, it should be remembered that what is called the "new departure" in missions, as presented by brethren Crawford, Bostick and Herring, is not in any true sense a new thing. These plans, in substance, have been before the various denominations and mission boards for about fifty years. They have been before the Southern Baptist Convention at times and in various ways since 1859—more than thirty years.

We have examined Rev. C. H. Carpenter's book, "Self Support," Dr. T. P. Crawford's books and tracts, heard him before the Southern Baptist Convention at Montgomery and in this State, talked with him for hours at our home about these plans, talked with brethren Baldwin and Powell before they went to Africa and when they returned, have read the tracts and letters of brethren Bostick and Herring, and have talked with Bro. Herring about these things since his return, and have had an earnest desire to know the truth,—to see the best "plans and methods,"—but we have not found a sufficient reason for changing our present plans and methods.

To our judgment the Crawford, Bostick, Herring plans and methods are necessarily open to the most serious objections, some of which are pointed out by Rev. W. B. Oliver in an article on the fifth page of this paper, and others may be referred to by us in a later issue.

PARENTAL CONTROL.

It is admitted freely by the wisest students of the social, civil and religious problems of all ages, that family life, and the training children receive from their parents, have much to do with the religious life and prosperity of nations. The home life and training of English and American children, we verily believe, have had much to do, under God, with the power and influence of the two peoples, and have been potent factors in the mighty achievements they have accomplished. These things being so, it is a matter of the gravest importance that our people should continue so to train and develop the minds and morals of their children as to give the generations to come the advantage in this respect enjoyed by those that have gone before.

If we were asked, however, to state what we think is one of the most serious facts connected with modern family and social life, we would say that it is that such a large number of boys and girls are growing up and taking their places in the ranks of humanity for the battle of life without having been subjected to proper parental control. We may be safe in saying that owing to the multiplication of Sunday-schools, and the increased facilities for imparting religious instruction, that parents are now giving possibly more attention to the religious training of their children than formerly. The same is true of the intellectual training of their children. In the matter of parental control, however, we think that parents of to-day are decidedly behind their predecessors. It is not an uncommon thing for boys eight or ten years of age to smoke or chew tobacco, roam at will over the country, or around our towns and cities. From these ages, on to sixteen or eighteen, they are assuming the airs and cultivating the habits of men; and often long before they reach twenty-one they consider themselves men in every respect. What is true of boys in this respect is true, though perhaps not to so great an extent, of the girls of our land. Instead of being properly curbed, they are often actually encouraged by their over-indulgent mothers to assume the role of young ladies. They receive beaux almost before they cease wearing short dresses. They are allowed the liberties of grown young ladies in attending church, or perhaps theatres and balls.

The result of all this is that the country is beginning to abound with quite a number of premature men and women, and also with men and women who, after they become of age, are not so well prepared to assume the actual duties of life, and especially the responsibility of raising families, because of the defective home training they have received. Having never learned themselves to obey, they are not prepared to command.

One very evident cause of the remissness of parents as to exercising proper parental control is found in the fact that children now quite early in life have often made quite rapid progress at the schools they attend, and hence may be superior to their parents intellectually, so far as book knowledge on some subjects may go. Knowledge is power, and it is rather natural for the young who have, or think they have, this power to show a consciousness of it to that extent that they do not show proper respect for their parents. Education does not consist alone in cramming the mind with what is learned from books. The school of experience is one of the best in the world; and boys and girls and young men and women, while still with their parents especially, should remember that after all they are much wiser than they are themselves as to the practical duties of life, and it is quite proper, yea commanded in God's word, that they should not only honor and respect their parents, but obey them. Father, mother, if you love your sons and daughters, then control them; and do not loose the reins of parental control until they can at least be called young men and women. It is a beautiful sight to see grown men and women honoring and obeying their parents. It is a sad thing to see, what may now often be seen, boys and girls almost ignoring the counsel and authority of those who, in the providence of God, are their natural protectors, counsellors and guides.

WE have heard some strange things lately in regard to what are called Baptist Congresses. Our Virginia brethren have had several. Other States have also given some attention to such assemblages for religious discussion. North Carolina has had one, and for some reason seems to be in no haste for another. Our Northern Baptist brethren have, we believe, one on a large scale, which had a lively session at Philadelphia recently, just before the Baptist Anniversaries. A distinguished writer North asserts that utterances were heard from some leading brethren who attended that Congress, which for liberal or advanced views of some Bible questions, were as radical as anything said or written by Dr. Briggs, with whom our Presbyterian brethren are having no little trouble. This particular Congress has, by some means, acquired such a reputation for advanced views, or enlarged (?) thoughts on Bible questions, that permission having been asked to hold a session in one of our leading Southern cities the brethren thought it more prudent to state that they were not willing, unless assurances were given in advance, that the foundations of their faith should not be attacked.

These things must convince us that there are brethren among us that are determined it seems, if there is any glory, honor or wisdom in being advanced thinkers in the line of theology, not to be outstripped by Dr. Briggs or any one else whose views are exciting christians, if not disturbing the peace of Zion. This drift among some of our brethren evidently needs watching; and if there are those among us that are not of us there ought to be conservatism enough among our people, and zeal enough for the pure gospel doctrines "once for all delivered to the saints," (and as a rule properly interpreted by the saints), to enable us to rid ourselves promptly of those who injure instead of help our cause. We have, the brethren will remember, been doing a little quiet boasting of our ability to rid ourselves of those whose are not of us, or who attack our doctrines, and yet wish to remain among us. We are likely, brethren, soon to have our ability to do this thing severely tested. We actually have the means of acting more promptly than many of the leading denominations about us, because each Baptist church is sovereign and independent, responsible to no master but Christ, and hence can readily exclude, if so desired, the disseminator of error or heresy. Our churches ought to be firm, and they ought to be prompt. Failure to be either would present us before the world as a great host beseeching and begging for years spies in our camp to leave, when in a day, or in an hour, we could rid ourselves of them by putting them out. Let the needed work be done, and even Baptist Congresses would find that they are responsible to the churches for their utterances.

BY THE act of the Legislature of 1889 the county commissioners of the several counties of the State upon petition of one fourth of the qualified voters of any county, town or township, are required to submit the question as to whether or not spirituous liquors shall be sold in such county, town or township. The act provides that no such election shall be held except in 1889 and every two years thereafter. The time for the election is required to be on the second Monday in June. The Legislature thus fixed a time when no other elections are to be held. Under the law an election can be held next June, and the question ought to be pressed then all along the line. Many counties, towns and townships in the State already enjoy the blessings of prohibition, and the territory can and no doubt will be largely increased next year. We call attention to the matter now that the friends of prohibition may be thinking about it laying their plans for action.

FROM OUR TRAVELLING AGENT.

ELIZABETH CITY.

Just one year ago I was here at the dedication of the new Baptist church. Then I had only a day or so to spend in the town, and this was largely occupied in attendance upon the public services of the occasion, and when Dr. Hatcher was not preaching or speaking I felt I was entitled to a share in the social refreshments which he dispensed like he can do when at his best. So I left the town without knowing as much about it and the good people who have made it as I do now.

I will tell something here that is not usual with me—that is, the RECORDER had a quarter of a hundred more subscribers when I left the town than when I went there. I tell this for the sole purpose of rendering to Bro. Modlin his proper credit, for without the faithful aid which he gave me I should have done far less with much harder work. I hope sometime to be able to record accounts of my work that can be placed alongside of what I see from other newspaper men. It is a common thing to see where some prodigious editor has been to a certain town and put his paper into every Baptist family in the place as well as in many homes in the country round about. This makes me feel bad till I happen to go there and find that he didn't get them all, and find too that I am in the same fix when I leave.

I found Bro. Thomas in a splendid humor. His people had decided for him to take a rest of a few weeks among the hills of the up-country. Who can measure the magnanimity of a congregation who will say to a brother like Thomas, "You go take a rest." But the action of his congregation is not based on any signs of failing health (evidently not), but upon what their preacher has done in good, honest, solid work. When it comes to be decided on this ground, Bro. Thomas, without question, is entitled to all the rest he gets. I do not know any church in the State where better work has been done, or that seems to possess a better future, than the church in Elizabeth City. The pastor is one of the strongest and most faithful preachers in the State. I spent several days with the pastor and among the brethren. Bro. Aydlett, an old college friend, made himself useful to me as well as providing me a nice home in his pleasant family for a good portion of the time I was in the town.

My heart has just been made sad on learning of the death of Bro. T. S. White. He had gone on a short trip to Nag's Head when I was at his home and spent a night with his family. It would be hard to find a place where you would feel more at home than in the family of Bro. White. The church has lost a whole-hearted, zealous member, the town and community a broad-minded, honest, public-spirited citizen. We take this occasion to tender to Sister White and her four bright interesting children our heartfelt sympathy in this their greatest of earth's sorrows.

Bro. J. B. Harrell carried me on Sunday to one of his country churches. The road led through the finest farming section I ever saw. The eye can never tire looking at the wilderness of corn which hedged in the road on either side. Bro. Harrell has a most desirable field, consisting of three country churches. After all, I should not wonder if such a field as this is not the most desirable one for a preacher, and especially for a young man. Pastorates of this sort are going to be more popular in the future than they have been heretofore. The churches are being better built, are nicer and more comfortable, a large number of them are now provided with Sunday-school rooms and other conveniences. I am glad to note this improvement. It makes some difference what sort of a place we go to hear the gospel preached. The child which is taught to observe order, system, and cleanliness in the home, though it be an humble one, has its love and respect enlarged and intensified for this home, and has a great advantage over one in whose home these things have been disregarded.

In a short interview I had with Brother Cahoon he gave me a most encouraging account of the business prosperity of the town and community. One drawback, however, he said the town had had from the act passed by the last legislature, which practically broke up the oyster interest in that section. This he hopes will be promptly remedied when the next legislature meets, and in that case much business and capital will at once be added to the various interests of the town.

DR. CUNNINGHAM, the head of the great Presbyterian University of St. Andrews, Scotland, has written a book on "The Growth of the Church in its Organization and Institutions," and on page 173 this great Presbyterian scholar says: "Baptism means immersion, and it was immersion. * * * Unless it had been so, Paul's analogical argument about our being buried with Christ in baptism would have no meaning." On page 184, Dr. Cunningham says: "Immersion was the only mode of baptism in the Apostolic church." He again says: "Infant baptism is never heard of during the first one hundred and fifty years of the church's history."

....On May 30th, Bro. Bostick, in a letter, wrote: "I have drawn a draft for $1,000, which covers the $600 for our home expenses," &c.

....Rev. B. W. Spilman has resigned the pastorate at Smyrna, Davis Shore and Woodville, and expects to enter the Seminary in Louisville next fall.

....Rev. William R. Johnston of Cedar Creek is dangerously ill with typhoid fever. We hope Bro. Johnston will soon be able to attend his churches.

....Rev. J. F. Love of Baltimore has just returned from North Carolina, where he attended the funeral of his mother, an excellent christian woman.

....Rev. J. A. Campbell has been re-elected superintendent of the public schools of Harnett county. We hear that Brother Campbell's churches are doing very well.

....Nine members have been baptized into the fellowship of the church at Smyrna as a result of the meeting held there the first week in June, in which Bro. H. C. Moore did the preaching.

....The church at Davis Shore on Friday, June 24, 1892, granted license to Bro. Chas. B. Paul to preach the gospel. He is a young man of decided ability. He will enter Wake Forest in September.

....The Warren Union will meet at Sulphur Springs church, Warren county, on Friday before the fifth Sunday in July. Rev. Dr. N. B. Cobb will preach the introductory sermon.—T. J. Taylor.

....Before the approaching political campaign is really opened, let every pastor in North Carolina preach from 1 Tim. 2: 2, last clause—"That we may lead a quiet and peaceable life in all godliness and honesty."

....A report of Southern Female College commencement in the La Grange Reporter, says: "At night, Rev. J. A. Smith of North Carolina preached a splendid sermon at the Baptist church before the College Missionary Society."

....A brother says: "Our church is awake on the subject of missions, and will contribute this year twice as much for missions as it has ever done before." This is just the thing to be accomplished in every church in the State this year.

....It is said that the Baptist Seminaries at Newton, Upland, Rochester, Hamilton and Chicago teach that alien immersion is valid, and that the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary at Louisville, Ky., stands alone in its opposition to alien immersion.

....The great missionary enterprises of modern times are the outgrowth of a desire to get nearer to the Scriptures in faith and practice; and, if the world is to be evangelized, it will be done most largely by the churches which are nearest to the Scriptures in faith, polity, worship and life work.

....At the session of King's Mountain Association, 1852, the following was adopted: "Resolved, That the first day of January be set apart as a day of fasting, humiliation and prayer for the spread of the gospel, and that the churches be requested to assemble at their respective meeting-houses on that day to engage in religious worship." The next year two newly organized churches were received into the body and the number of persons baptized in the Association was 377.

....Rev. Jasper Howell, Jr., a ministerial student of Wake Forest College, at present travelling in Florida, preached at the Baptist church of Pensacola on Sunday, the 3d inst. Bro. Howell was known at College as a good student and an earnest church-worker.

....Mrs. S. F. Williams, wife of Captain Williams of the steamer "Plymouth," died yesterday morning at 2:30 o'clock. She was one of the sweetest flowers of our Baptist flock, and her death is a sad blow to our church.—Williamston Cor. News & Observer, July 8.

....Through the agency of Mrs. Mamie Hatcher, the American Baptist Publication Society has presented Clyde's Chapel Sunday-school with a beautiful library of twenty-five volumes. The church and Sunday-school join Mrs. Hatcher in sincere thanks to the Society.

....In Rev. G. P. Bostick's letter of resignation, Jan. 12th, 1892, to the Foreign Mission Board, he said: "When we shall have had ample time to hear from you, and shall have been authorized to draw an amount sufficient to defray our expenses to our homes, we shall consider the mutual responsibilities and obligations between ourselves and you at an end."

....Rev. A. T. Hord of Glenville, Jackson county, writes: "The RECORDER still fills the place of a personal letter from a large number of the brethren. Rain is plentiful; crops looking well. This is a delightful place in summer. No need of ice in this section. My vacation closes with this month. Prof. E. G. Beckwith's death was a sad surprise to me. I am sorry to see so much disagreement as to plans in our China mission work. It is bound to cut down the large amounts looked for during the Centennial year; but may the Lord overrule all to his glory."

....Rev. A. L. Stough began a revival last week at his church in Kinston. We clip the following interesting note about his church from the Kinston Free Press: "The Baptists of Kinston have moved their old church to their new lot, and will use it for services until they can build the new church. Afterwards it will be used for Sabbath-school purposes. The parsonage is on one corner, the old church next to it, and the new church is to be built on corner of Gordon and McIlvane streets. We hope to see the building going up very soon. These are some of the improvements and new buildings that have been completed or are in process of construction now or which are contemplated in the near future. If any are omitted, it is unintentional."

Kinston.

We take the following from a letter in the Kinston Free Press, June 30th.

Kinston has five white denominations. The Disciple church is about completing a neat brick house of worship; the Methodists and Episcopalians have good houses; the Presbyterian church has been recently organized, and is yet both without a house and a regular pastor.

I began my labors with the Baptist church last February. I met a warm reception. The church having been a long time without a pastor, has thrown a large amount of anxiety and labor on me, but the indications are encouraging and hopeful. The membership numbers among them a noble set of women, and not a few first-class men. The church is strong, united, evangelical, abounding in good works.

The Sunday-school under the conduct of James McDaniel, assisted by a corps of excellent and efficient officers and teachers, is interesting and profitable. We have a sensible and agreeable choir, something that is not found in every congregation. I doubt very much whether our deacons can be surpassed anywhere. At our prayer meetings we have good attendance and earnest attention. Our Sabbath congregations have been steadily increasing, until we begin to think we may need more room soon for our growing congregation.

The church has purchased and paid one thousand five hundred dollars for a lot centrally located, and we are getting up funds to build an edifice worthy the present strength of the body. The old house has been removed to the new lot, and we are remodeling it. We have already made considerable improvements in the comfort of the house, and additional convenience.

We are principally fitting it up to accommodate our flourishing Sunday-school, to provide suitable accommodations for our young men, general weekly prayer meetings of religious and social gatherings of any kind.

My people are very kind. They know how to show kindness to a pastor and a pastor's wife. After boarding several months with an excellent Baptist family, we are pleasantly situated in a new, cozy and well arranged parsonage. We brought but little furniture with us. Some of the kind sisters furnished all that was needed, besides some not absolutely necessary. They furnished such articles as bureau, washstands, chairs, matting for parlor floor, window shades, clock, bed comforts, etc. We had our first meal in the parsonage on the morning of the 28th of May. The night before our people pounded us with more than fifty articles of groceries, and as we have been happy recipients of kind tokens every day since then, we are almost full to overflowing in the pantry and almost everywhere.

Who would not feel encouraged by such constant generous tokens of esteem, growing congregations, and withal, by some cheering signs of spiritual blessing!

I feel grateful that it fell to my lot to be a citizen of Kinston, and pastor of the Kinston Baptist church.

The Lord has been truly good to his unworthy servant. A. L. STOUGH.

Kinston, June 7th, 1892.

Facts as Seen by the Foreign Mission Board.

In an article headed "Crucifying the Lord Afresh," from the pen of our honored brother, Edwin M. Poteat, at New Haven, Conn., in the RECORDER of July 6th, my eye falls upon these words: "Some months ago our Bro. Bostick, and more recently our Brother Herring, resigned their appointments as missionaries of the Foreign Mission Board. This serious step seemed to these brethren necessary because, if I understand the situation, the Board did not sympathize with their effort to distribute the pressure of responsibility for our missions, nor with their intention of a more aggressive evangelism into the interior of China. This last is true, I know, in the case of Bro. Herring."

With regard to "the intention of a more aggressive evangelism into the interior of China" by our beloved Bro. Herring, the Foreign Mission Journal for July said: "Probably the Board might not have been unwilling for brethren to try this new plan of work, even though in their judgment it was not specially promising of permanent results. If some brethren felt that they could probably do good work in this way, it might be worth the experiment. And the Board's policy has always been to allow its missionaries the widest liberty as to methods to be adopted on their fields, believing that they are in their respective fields, other things being equal, the best judges of such methods. But Bro. Herring added to his plan this—that these missionaries were to be directly supported by individual churches or groups of churches, entirely independent of the Board, which should have nothing to do with the money, unless to forward it to the missionary 'without cost,' and have no control over, or direction of, the missionaries. In short, the Board was to endorse and assist him in special work, which in its ultimate results would be to disintegrate the work of the Southern Baptist Convention." In other words, as Bro. Herring was told, he was asking the Board "to commit suicide," which they could not do to please our brother, in fidelity to the trust imposed by the Southern Baptist Convention.

In reference to our brethren resigning because "the Board did not sympathize with their effort to distribute the pressure of responsibility for our missions," I remark that this statement is inconsistent with the constant endeavors of the Board "to distribute the pressure of responsibility" by getting individuals, churches and associations to support missionaries, as witnessed by our Roll of Honor; by requesting our Vice-Presidents to secure approval of our quotas by their State organizations, etc., etc. As conclusive against both reasons assigned by our Brother Poteat for the resignation of brethren Bostick and Herring, I quote from the records of the Board: "That it should be distinctly recorded that the recent separation between missionaries and our Board was not because of differences in missionary views, but because their plans and utterances were antagonistic to the work of the Board."

These brethren, who have gone from us, have the affectionate regards and the earnest prayers of the Board.

Valuable Suggestions.

The following valuable suggestions were made and adopted at the late meeting of the Centennial Committee, in Richmond, which I sincerely hope every pastor, superintendent and teacher will carefully consider. I take it they were prepared by Dr. F. M. Ellis of Baltimore and they strike me as eminently wise and practical. It is absolutely necessary if any great advance is made during this Centennial year, that we shall, as far as possible, reach the old and young in all our churches and Sunday-schools, gathering up the little sums, as well as the larger ones. We are satisfied that the chapel card of the Woman's Missionary Union, if urged in all our Centennial meetings, will do this work to a large extent.

May I ask, as a member of the State Centennial Committee, that in all the meetings you shall hold—and we hope that every Baptist church in North Carolina will hold one or more such meetings—that you will see to it that this plan is explained and pushed by two effective speakers—one for Woman's Mission Societies and one for the Sunday-schools, each combining the Home and Foreign interests.

We ask that special emphasis be laid upon the following points:

1. The scope and purpose of the card plan.
2. Its simplicity being easily understood by all.
3. The ease with which the youth of our schools may be reached and instructed by this plan.
4. Its adaptation to reach and unify the efforts of the christian women of our churches, as well as many women in our congregations.
5. The success of this plan, so far as it has been tried.
6. The channel it offers for personal offerings, by individuals filling these cards themselves, and for gathering the offerings of others by soliciting their aid in filling up one or more cards.
7. As a means of interesting and training the youth of our churches and Sunday-schools in missionary benevolence and thus educating the coming church.
8. As a means of securing the $350,000 Chapel Fund.

The Centennial Chapel Cards are free, so are the certificates, circulars and leaflets "Annie's Bricks" and "Miss Keziah and her tracts," and can be had by application to Maryland Baptist Mission Rooms, No. 10 East Fayette St. Baltimore, or to Miss Fannie Heck, Raleigh, or to me at Wilmington.

Other printed helps for speaker may be purchased at cost from the Mission Rooms.

A Letter of Elias Dodson's.

GRAHAM AND BURLINGTON IN 1862.

Dear Bro. Bailey:—This morning I came across one of Rev. Elias Dodson's letters to my father under date of Aug. 21, 1862. Its allusions to the war and to missionary work in Graham and Company Shops (now Burlington) may be of interest.

Referring to the payment of an obligation, he says:

"A man owes me but his money is in Baltimore and he can't get it till the war is over. Perhaps he may never get it. But I hope the Executive Committee will pay their missionary to Graham and Company Shops as soon as they can. Even if the war closes, the refugees may buy summer retreats and have an interest in the country around Graham for a long time. * * There are several Baptist refugees at Graham. Now is the very time to build up an interest. I always preach in the court-house at Graham. We could have a meeting house both at Graham and at the Shops in a few years. The first year the hull could be put up, the second the house could be ceiled and plastered, &c. * * I consider the Company Shops not far less important than Raleigh or Fayetteville. I expect some of the head workmen get salaries almost equal to our judges. All the workmen get good salaries and most of them have no horses to feed. Salaried men can always give. * * If we cultivate the Company Shops, it will yield a good harvest. Even the cotton and shoe factory near Swepson's ought to be cultivated. Much of the strength of Leaksville church is from Morehead's factory. One of the men in this factory has been an agent for the RECORDER for several years. When the fish shoal we should carry a net. The southern and northern part of Caswell ought to be cultivated. It is a wonder that some of the rich Baptists as they ride through the destitute sections as they go to court don't think of this passage of Scripture, 'The wilderness shall become a fruitful field.' When a man is converted all his property is converted. We have men and money enough to make every wilderness in the Beulah Association a fruitful field and then give to other purposes besides. The more a man sows the more he reaps. The more money we pay out the stronger we shall become. The money that has been laid out for missionaries in the Beulah Association since 1844 has paid one hundred fold."

The letter is sealed with red wax and bears the clear post mark "Clemmonsville, N. C., Aug. 23," over the two five cents Confederate postage stamps.

Yours truly,

W. L. POTEAT.

Yanceyville, July 4, 1892.

Letter from Pasquotank County.

Dear Brother:—Thinking that you would perhaps be glad to hear from this corner of the vineyard, I will endeavor to tell you a few things that we are doing, or trying to do, for the cause of Christ.

A revival has just been in progress at Manteo on Roanoke Island. Our own beloved pastor, Bro. Josiah Elliott, has been assisting in the work. I have not yet heard of the results, but have reasons to hope for glorious ones.

Meetings have not commenced in this county yet, as country people are very busy attending to their growing crops. God has been very good to them this year, as the broad, green fields of waving corn, rice and cotton bear witness. We are now beginning to look forward with the most joyful anticipations to the time when, our toils over, we can go to God's sanctuaries and there labor for the salvation of precious souls.

Meetings will commence at Olivet church on the third Monday in this month. We are working and praying for the presence of the Holy Spirit. O how earnestly christians ought to pray before they enter a revival! We should not wait until we get in a meeting to get aroused to our duty, but should begin to pray weeks beforehand and when the time comes, go work in the strength of the Lord with our own hearts overflowing with the joy of salvation.

I cannot understand why people claiming to be regenerated by the blood of Christ can be so indifferent as regarding the salvation of souls. We see precious souls, souls that Christ had died to reclaim, living with ears closed and eyes blinded by the gods of this world, going down to an eternity of death, yet with hands folded, christians stand idling away the noonday of life with the harvest field stretched before them. If there is one cry which I would like to send ringing down the christian ranks to-day, it is "Wake up! wake up! wake up!" Wake up to the fact that souls are starving for the bread of life, and that it is your duty to break this bread to the hungry multitudes.

Wake up and realize that you are not warring against flesh and blood, but against the principalities and powers of darkness. The Devil is pleased when he sees christians sleeping at their posts.

Wake up to the knowledge that God has put in your hands the gospel of Jesus Christ, the invincible "sword of the Spirit," and that you are an armed and equipped soldier of the Cross. Conquer in the name of Christ.

Let us determine to make the year 1893 the grandest for glorious results in the history of the Baptist denomination in North Carolina. Let us determine to grow, not only in numbers but in the strength of the Lord and in consecration to his service. We can do it. Christ is with us and our strength lies in prayerful devotion to his cause.

Yours fraternally, O. L. GRAVES.

Let State Missions be before the churches for the next three months. In a report to the Baptist State Convention in 1880, Bro. Barzillai Graves said: "State Missions is of infinite importance, because on the proper management of State Missions must depend the efficiency of our efforts made abroad."

Removing Care from the Pastor's Face."

Bro. Bailey:—Under the above heading is a short criticism in your issue of the 6th, signed "Cashie," provoked by my recent article on "The Duty of Deacons."

"Cashie" must have been in an unlovely mood when reading my article, for he has entirely misconstrued its language and spirit. I had not the slightest reference to myself, or my own experience, in what I wrote. My pastorate is among a kind and appreciative people, who pay their pastor's salary and in many ways show him honor and love. My deacons are also kind, considerate, christian gentlemen. So I am not the pastor whose face wears the "shadow of care" on this score.

God is so exceedingly and abundingly good to me that I have but little cause or time for shadows of care. I can assure "Cashie" that I never experience one of these shadows behind the curling smoke of a good cigar, especially if it is the courteous gift of some kind friend or brother, as is usually the case. If, however, in the exercise of my personal liberty in an occasional smoke, I cause my brother of weak conscience to offend, I won't smoke any more, provided he will write me the fact and provided he is not a crank.

"Cashie" says, speaking of the pastors: "Some of them spend for cigars in one day what would buy all the sugar and the coffee many families use in a month."

Now I can't speak for my fellow pastors, for I don't know how many cigars any of them smoke, nor what they pay for them—this is none of my business; but for myself, I can say, reversing my critic's words, the money I spend a month for cigars would hardly support a family one day in sugar and coffee. And if this I did, to the neglect of giving to the needy, I would smoke no more "as long as the world stands." I have known men who were too righteous (?) to smoke, and yet too stingy to do much for "sweet charity" or Christ. "Cashie" seems to prefer as his pastor one who at times wears shadows of care. I can't see why shadows of care add either beauty or pleasure to any one. It pains us to see them, and it should ever be our joy to try to remove them. Christ would have us full of his joy, and to rejoice evermore.

"Cashie" says: "Some of the poorest financiers I ever knew were preachers." This, I doubt not, is true, and may be accounted for by the probable fact that said "preachers" never had enough money at any one time to test their financial capabilities.

It is the duty of every minister to magnify the Scripture, "Owe no man anything," so that with a strong, clear conscience he may preach the doctrine of common honesty among men now so much needed.

"Cashie" says: "It seems to me that the brother expects too much of the poor deacons in his own favor." As this is personal, I will say, that I neither demand nor ask personal favors of my deacons. My article was written to honor the deacon, and to lift his service to a higher plane, and among other kind things said: "They (true deacons) deserve everybody's love and help."

"Cashie" makes three statements in his piece, which I heartily endorse:

1. The churches "need more and better preaching."
2. "The longer I read the RECORDER, the better I love it."
3. "I do not possess the qualifications for a deacon."

The man who can't "peep" hard enough to see his pastor's smiling face behind the shadows of a "ten-cent cigar," and who hasn't the courage to sign his name to such criticisms as he has written, is not the man "I want for my" deacon.

"I have written in no controversial spirit." Had "Cashie" discussed the merits of my article or its subject, I might have so written. C. N. DONALDSON.

Bricks Without Straw.

An Egyptian task the Baptists of the South are imposing on their Foreign Mission Board. The Conventional year, beginning May 1st, saw the Board with a deficit of $16,989.34. Since that time, only $7,756.54 has been given by the churches. Consequently the deficit has grown to $39,164.36, as large as it generally is by January. And it is growing larger week by week. There is a limit beyond which it cannot grow.

Will the churches force the Board to the limit? Will the friends of missions leave the Board to bear this burden?—to incur this danger? Is it wise? Is it necessary?

Richmond, Va., July, 1892.

Forewarned, Forearmed.

Dear Recorder:—There are several Mormon preachers going through the county preaching their doctrines, and I write to caution the Baptist churches against opening their doors for them, or to those of any other denomination who are preaching the doctrines of Satan. They generally come in the name of "Latter-day Saints," and usually go first to the Baptist churches and ask permission to preach in their houses. Several churches, not knowing that they were Mormons, have let them preach in their houses; but as soon as they found that they were Mormons they closed their doors. They are very cautious at first not to advance the doctrine of polygamy. Their object, is to get a following first, and then they will, no doubt, preach that it is right for a man to have a multiplicity of wives.

Dear brethren, there is no doctrine in the world more demoralizing to society or more injurious to the church of the living God, than Mormonism; therefore be on the look-out for these emissaries, and when they come don't permit them to use your houses of worship, neither go to hear them, for their doctrines are the doctrines of Satan.

Yours in Christ,

A. J. BORDEAUX.

The Highest Good.

Men have always sought the highest good. It is the object of most eager search to-day. What this highest good is has been variously defined. It is usually understood to be fullest satisfaction, supremest happiness. To have this is to possess the most that man needs, the best that he can attain. The way to get it has been variously described. Some have said that the highest good can be gotten only through intellectual knowledge. The maxim is, "To know is to be happy." Self-knowledge is best knowledge. Hence, to know thyself is the true way to highest happiness. Others have said that æsthetic culture is the only method by which the object of life can be reached. The maxim is, "Seek the refinement of the beautiful." In the beautiful the human mind finds a serene interest. Hence, to have æsthetic refinement is to possess the true source of the highest good. Others, again, have thought that the attainment of the highest good can be realized alone by way of a proper adjustment of the relations which people of this world sustain to one another. This is the socialistic theory, whose maxim is, "Put thyself in a relation of equality with thy fellow-men." Since those who have an abundance of this world's goods have the largest means by which they can satisfy their wants, they have the essentials for fullest happiness. Hence, an equal distribution of the plenty of the present lifetime is the assured possession of the highest good.

It must be noted that these several views presuppose a specific idea of man. The first regards him a creature whose supreme capacity is intellect. His greatest need is, therefore, intellectual. The second judges him to be a creature whose most excellent capacity is the æsthetic. His deepest want is, therefore, a thirst for ideal refinement. The third estimates him to be a creature whose finest capability is socialistic. His loftiest aspiration is, hence, centered in socialism.

Christianity proposes to man the true good, a good which answers not merely for his intellect, or æsthetic faculty, or social capability, but his entire nature, mental, moral and spiritual. This highest good is Jesus Christ. To have him, is to be altogether satisfied, to be supremely happy. Without him, there is always a want, which can never be satisfied. With him, the deepest needs of man are completely met. Without him, there is perpetual unrest. With him, perfect peace and lasting joy. Philosopher and socialist alike fail to find the highest good for man. It is neither in the human intellect nor in human society. It is in Jesus Christ. He is the substantial good, the eternal portion of the human soul. "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me, and ye shall find rest unto your souls."

So long as men seek the guidance of scientific speculation in search of the highest good, they will be disappointed. So long as they depend on the temporary adjustment of social relations for a realization of their condition which will give supreme satisfaction, their expectation will fail them. No doubt our highest happiness is dependent on our right relation. But this relation is primarily a right relation with God. This secures the right relation with our fellow-men.

The law is: "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy soul and mind and strength, and thy neighbor as thyself." This law is the fundamental principle of true socialism, through which alone Adam and his posterity can be perfectly happy. The disturbances in the social world, and the general unrest among men, can never be quieted by any humanistic devices. These disorders, which in our day are alarmingly prevalent, will continue to increase in force, despite every expedient which may be devised for their cure. Christianity is the only solution of human difficulties and aspirations. Jesus Christ is the only true answer to the needs of man.—S. S. Times and Messenger.

The Central Association will meet this year at Wake Forest College. This will be the first to meet (Aug. 4—5), and with [illegible] N. B. Cobb to preach the introductory [illegible] brethren J. W. Carter and R. T. [illegible] make special addresses on Missions. [illegible] who attend may expect the best [illegible] things.

Notes and Comments.

Among the most striking characteristics of the system of religion which we call "New Testament Christianity" is its intense personality at all points. Jesus and Paul do not discuss "the nature of virtue." Christianity, as taught by Christ and the apostles, embodies the virtues, and gives them to us alive and at work in some personal character. The sum of the virtues is found in the historical Christ. Self-sacrifice is inculcated, not in vague and misty eulogies upon the abstract idea of self-sacrifice—not in transcendental rhapsodies upon the idea of the absorption of the conscious soul in God—but by real instances of unselfish sacrifice for the good of others. Paul knew nothing of a "Nirvana" which so absorbs the personality of man as to destroy his consciousness and reduce him to a condition hardly to be distinguished from annihilation. But he knows of the "house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens." The Mohammedan Mystic poet sings:

God is the universal sea of being!
All beings, e'en the countless hosts of heaven,
Are wasted, just like splinters on the ocean.
Is the vast sea of Deity in tempest?
Then all his splinters dance upon the billows.
Will he, the Parent deep, dry up these fragments?
He throws them to some mountain's arid summit.
Or, will he merge them in his own abysses?
Then must they yield as stubble in the burning.

And again:

Because to die is truly sweet (believe me),
The Koran doth prohibit suicide.
To me, death pours out life with pearly brightness,
And for diversity gives unity.

Such poetry as this is utterly unintelligible to the average christian, who has not spent a good deal of time in pondering over the wild vagaries of pantheistic philosophy. How different, in tone and substance, are the words of Jesus: "I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go to prepare a place for you, I will come again and receive you unto myself, that where I am there ye may be also." Jesus evidently thought of heaven as a place. His words are clear cut and definite; and so they not only kindle the imagination, but stir the heart.

In discussing "the trial of Jesus," one of our religious magazines gives us the following paragraph:

"The calmness and serenity which all the evangelists exhibit, in their accounts of this extraordinary trial, are among the most striking points of these narratives. We have little or no comment from these writers upon the very remarkable transactions which they record. They confine themselves almost exclusively to relating carefully what was said and done. Peter's fall was grievous; but not one of the evangelists mourns over it. The treatment of Jesus was shamefully outrageous; but no evangelist utters a word of indignation. Caiaphas was a superlative scoundrel; but even John does not say so. The facts are allowed to tell their own terrible tale, and the narrators fall quietly into the background. The story seems almost to tell itself. And this is one of the most powerful internal evidences of the good faith, as well as the competency, of the narrators."

Yes; Dean Swift and Daniel Defoe possessed, in a most wonderful degree, the faculty of realizing imaginary scenes and persons, and thus of giving the air of truth to their fictitious stories. But did any grown man of fair intellect and respectable culture ever take "Gulliver's Travels," or "Robinson Crusoe," for veritable history? And yet the keenest critics—men of the widest learning and the deepest research—have devoted their lives to the vain attempt to destroy the historical character of these four gospels.

"The 'Mythical' theory, the 'Tendential' theory, and sundry other theories, advocated by able men, have had their day; and even the great body of educated men in the Christendom of to day do not know that such theories have ever been held. In the mind of educated Christendom, Strauss and Baur are names without meaning. The only tenable theory of the gospels is that they are trustworthy histories."

And here is another paragraph from the same writer:

"The records which the evangelists give us of the trial of Jesus differ considerably each from the other, in matters of detail; and yet there is an air of truthfulness, which no candid reader can miss, in every one of the narratives. There is very little comment in any of them. 'Analysis of character,' 'discussion of motives,'—so dear to the modern historian and novelist—are almost utterly foreign to the spirit of these writers. They confine themselves almost entirely to the task of telling what the several characters said and did; and the reader is left to infer the motives from the sayings and doings of the several persons who acted in the scene. We are not told what we ought to think of these persons. The evangelists do not argue to prove that Pilate did wrong; nor do they use harsh epithets in their statements as to the conduct of the priesthood. Suppositions are not indulged in; opinions are not expressed; feeling is suppressed; and then we have the hard, solid facts, unincumbered with speculations of any kind. And these characteristics make the evangelists the best witnesses in the world, so that the gospels are the best attested histories that exist."

Why any human being should accept as history Sallust's account of the conspiracy of Catiline, and yet reject the fourth gospel, is a question which any logician ought to find it exceedingly difficult to answer. But logic has probably little to do with the conclusions reached by most infidels. A bad life is the greatest objection to the Bible.

From Hiawassee, Ga.

Our "Central Committee, on Mission Work" are getting about their business. They are appointing local committees in every county.

The church work in North Georgia, is on the move up. Sunday schools are numerous with large attendance. The mission spirit is growing stronger. General love and work in the Master's vineyard grows rapidly.

Our literary schools are more and more bent for the moral. This, we think, is proper.

The Hiawassee Association, will be held with Bell Creek church this year, beginning two days before the second Sunday in August. It will be near the North Carolina line, about three miles from Hiawassee, and five or six miles from Hayesville, N. C. Brethren, come over and be with us.

Another Window.

Here is a check for three dollars and a half, from Brother N. B. Broughton, Raleigh, for a window in Princeton house of worship. Thanks, brother. Hope some one else will follow your example before another week has gone into history. Should my pleading become otherwise unanswerable, just call into service "crank, enthusiast, fool, or beggar. People, good people too, are continually using the above and similar terms when argument and reason have failed. These usually succeed in sending the pleader away silent and empty-handed. But we don't want or need moneyless contributions. We need money to finish our house, and would be very thankful for several more responses like Brother Broughton's

HENDERSON, N. C., March 7, '91.

MR. W. T. CHEATHAM:

Dear Sir—My wife was down in bed with rheumatism, and the Pokine I bought of you gave her relief after taking four doses. She has not been troubled since. It is the best medicine she ever took for rheumatism. Respectfully,

ZACK DAVIS.

MR. W. T. CHEATHAM, JR.:

Dear Sir—I have been afflicted with rheumatism time and again, for the past thirteen years. I have received more relief from Pokine than any medicine I ever took, and therefore take great pleasure in recommending it to all sufferers of rheumatism. Very respectfully,

F. G. MITCHELL.

JANUARY 19, 1891.

W. T. CHEATHAM, JR.:

Dear Sir—I desire to say that in January last I was down with rheumatism; my suffering was great, and I was completely prostrated. One bottle of your Pokine completely relieved me, and I have not had any rheumatism since. My son also was relieved of rheumatism by Pokine.

Yours truly,
CHARLES G. BURROUGHS.

HENDERSON, N. C., Sept. 16, '91.

MR. W. T. CHEATHAM, JR.:

Your rheumatic cure, Pokine, has completely cured me. I. M. GREEN.

MR. W. T. CHEATHAM, JR., Henderson, N. C.:

Dear Sir—Being asked my opinion of your rheumatic remedy, Pokine, will gladly state I deem it the only medicine of its kind on the market that will accomplish that which is exclusively claimed for it. Being a sufferer of rheumatism, I consequently tried many remedies, until finally relieved by Pokine. Very respectfully,

J. A. KELLY.

The New Departure.

Rev. W. B. Oliver, pastor of the Fayetteville Baptist church, has the following timely editorial in the North Carolina Baptist of June 29th:

Readers of the Baptist have been informed as to the nature of the work to which some of our missionaries wish to pledge our churches. Briefly stated, the plan is to have the churches, individually or in groups, send out, support and direct the labors of missionaries, without the intervention of Boards or Agents, and to make the missionaries directly responsible to the home churches, there being no immediate supervision of them and their labors.

The ideas in this proposed plan are (1) to bring the churches into nearer and more vital relation with the missionaries and so with the mission work, (2) to dispense with Board officials and other salaried agents, thereby saving large expense, and further to make the amount contributed to each worker equal only to his necessities, so doing away with stipulated salaries; (3) to secure to the missionaries greater freedom as to the selection of fields and methods of prosecuting their labors.

That the brethren who champion this proposed change are thoroughly conscientious and actuated by the purest motives, should not for a moment be doubted. That their knowledge of the work, gained by actual experience, entitles them to a patient hearing and gives their suggestions great weight, is self evident. That the system hitherto in vogue with our people has its imperfections and needs more attention than has been given it; that there are grounds for criticism and complaint on the part of the missionaries, is very probable. But that this "new departure" is the remedy for the existing ills, or the wisest thing for our people to do, is questionable.

For some months the Baptist has anxiously awaited the development of the plan which is now laid before us. It has been ready, and now stands prepared to give hearty indorsement and the full strength of its efforts to any move which could be shown to be a real advance step. It has offered its columns to brethren on both sides the question, that it might get the situation intelligently before the people, and draw out suggestions for good. It has hoped to see this Centennial year marked by a grand growth and improvement in contributions, workers and methods.

But if this plan proposed meets our hopes, we are too blind to see the fact. With the light of this writing we are compelled to say that we don't like the proposition, because we cannot satisfy ourselves that it will accomplish the desired ends, and there is entirely too much at stake to take the risk of experiments which may be foolish.

The first plank in this platform is to do away with organization, and thus lose the inspiration of united effort. It throws each church or group of churches into single-handed conflict with a foe, of whom they know nothing. It does bring the church into nearer relation with its own missionary, but isolates it from all other workers. The foreign field then becomes to that church, not the world, but the particular town or province where its missionary is laboring. It would have no more interest in any other worker than it would have in the pastor of another church a thousand miles away. The only result of such a step would be a narrowing of scope, a weakening of general interest and a consequent decline in activity. Nor do we understand how there would be the same unity among the missionaries themselves as at the present. Rivalries and disputes for chosen points, overlapping work and wasted energy, might not be the result of this disintegrating idea, but they are among the possibilities.

And who is to gather for and furnish to the brethren at home the information which they so much need, which is the very life of missionary activity? The missionary? Ah, but will he write, can he survey more than he sees on his own field?

Again, we very much doubt the economy of this move. Instead of a central Board and a general treasurer, there must needs be a directing agency, a collector and disburser for each group. Time and responsibility are involved—these command money. Then the cost of transmitting the money to the worker will certainly be augmented, or all the business principles of every-day life are at fault. And to leave the question of remuneration open is to put the missionaries into possible embarrassment and hinder their usefulness, to make them necessarily uneasy at times, and it is a bid to the weaker side of poor, susceptible human nature.

We cannot say what is best as to freedom of judgment for the missionaries. We do not belive in papacy or episcopacy; but we do know that here in this land of many blessings, it is necessary to sometimes restrain and sometimes overrule the decisions of good men by advice, counsel and even show of authority. Our pastors are not entirely foot loose, certainly our State missionaries are not. And we doubt the expediency of sending men to fields, the conditions of which are altogether new, with carte blanche to do as they please. Guided by the Holy Spirit? So are we at home—yet we err, even when helped by our brethren.

Responsible to the churches? What can the churches know, save through the missionary, and who is to point out his mistakes?

And our greatest dread is the reaction of a single failure, the discouraging effects of hopes unfulfilled. We believe the churches will be injured.

However, we are open to conviction, and despite brother Herring's expressed desire that there should be no debate, the Baptist earnestly urges friends of the "new departure" and foes to it, to express their views that in a multitude of counsellors we may find wisdom and safety.

If Christ is in you, somebody will be sure to see him and love him.—Ram's Horn.

From Little Alice Russell.

Dear Recorder:—Perhaps some of the good people who sent me money for the church at Mt. Vernon Springs, would be glad to know what I am doing for the church.

I am getting money very slowly, owing, I suppose, to the hard times. And there are so many begging in the RECORDER, I feel sometimes I will be set aside. While many churches must cost thousands of dollars, I would be proud of a thousand dollar church. I want the good people to know I am still at work. Some of the good ladies wrote me they would try and collect some money for me. I will be so glad when they send it, so I can report the same in the RECORDER.

Mt. Vernon Springs is a healthy summer resort, and I wish every pastor who reads the RECORDER could visit this Spring, and as many others as could, that they might see what is needed, I do believe some of them would help me beg.

I am not going to give it up on my part, and hope if any one has any spare money to give to churches, they will send it to me. Although I am young, I feel I am working for a good cause. It is not often I am absent on church-meeting days. When I look at the old mother church, my heart aches for a new one, although our pastor tells us many good things in the old building.

With love and best wishes,

—ALICE RUSSELL.

A Home Comfort.

Looking at the beautiful and instructive pictures, the bright and entertaining stories, the pithy, pointed teachings, the solid, wholesome reading, in these four papers, Our Little Ones, The Sunlight, The Young Reaper, and Our Young People, we say surely, surely, every family in all this land can supply itself with the choicest reading, suited to every child's understanding. The American Baptist Publication Society will send either or all these papers to your home for almost nothing. Send your name and get samples. Do give your children clean, pure, nourishing, mental food.

Robeson Union and Robeson Baptist Sunday-school Association.

The exercises for this occasion will be held July 29th, 30th and 31st, 1892, at Big Branch church. The following is the programme:

COM.

Ayer's pills promptly remove the causes of sick and nervous headaches. These pills speedily correct irregularities of the stomach, liver, and bowels, and are the mildest and most reliable cathartic in use. No one should be without them.

Meditation.

The worth of christian meditation is seldom emphasized in instructions for the christian life, and yet it is plain that it occupied a very large place in the lives of the prophets and of the apostles. A truth that we have heard stated or read in a book does not begin to become our own until it has lain in the mind, and thought and emotion have closed about it. Meditation is to truth what the soil, and moisture, and sunlight are to the seed; by repeated thought upon it the truth germinates, sends out its tendrils and takes root in the soul and becomes fruitful. Ministers tell us to act on the truth we have, but we do not have the truth until, by its germination within us, it begins to identify itself with our own lives. To hear a sermon or read the Bible without subsequent meditation is like sowing a seed on a marble mantelpiece instead of in the garden.—The Watchman.

Live for Something.

Lost—yesterday, somewhere between sunrise and sunset, two golden hours, each set with sixty diamond minutes; no reward is offered, for they are gone forever.

We read the above advertisement some days since in an old magazine, and were impressed with the thought that if we all looked at time thrown away in this light there would be very few of the precious hours wasted in idleness and frivolous amusements, but that they would be devoted to an earnest endeavor to improve ourselves and those around us.

If every school boy or girl in the land could realize that every hour wasted is lost forever, surely they would try much harder than they do to improve them while they may. The mill will never grind again with the water that has passed, and we can never add to our store of knowledge by the improvement of hours that are gone. We may in after life regret the waste of valuable time, but all of regret can never bring it back.

Youth is the period of life when we are prepared, if we ever are, for life's trials and conflicts. Let us then improve our opportunities while we have them; let us work while it is day, while the sun shines, then when the night comes we can rest. We should do all the good our hearts and hands find to do, then in the end, when the battle of life is over, we can hear the plaudit of the Master, "well done."

Then let us live for something—yes, for something worthy of life and its opportunities, for noble deeds and achievements. We are in the world to make every hour count in making the world better; to lift it up to higher levels of enjoyment and progress; to make its hearts and homes brighter by devoting our best thoughts and actions to that end. The measure of human achievements has always been proportioned to the amount of human daring and doing.

Be practical, be earnest. Deal with the questions and facts of life as they really are. What can be done and is worth doing do it with dispatch. What cannot be done, and would be worthless, if it could, leave to the dreamers and idlers along the walks of life. Don't think that little things are trifling and that great occasions only are worthy of your best thoughts and endeavors. It is the little things of life that make up its happiness or misery, its joy or its sorrow.

Live for something. Make every day count something to the world because you are in it, with kind feelings, pleasant words and noble offices. Life is short, but short as it is one may do glorious work within its narrow limits. Then let us live for something every hour of our existence in keeping with the grand possibilities in reach of our personal action.—C. C. Richardson, in the Old Homestead.

by local applications, as they can not reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give one hundred dollars for any case of deafness (caused by catarrh) that we can not cure by taking Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

Temporal Needs.

It mattered something to Christ that people who had attended all day on his ministry should not go away hungry, and drag out a weary journey home, fainting for want of food, and he said to his disciples: "I have compassion on the multitude. I would not send them away fasting, lest they faint by the way." No one could appreciate more highly than he the spiritual needs of men. He was ready to die to meet them, and yet, though the spiritual needs towered immensely above the temporal, they never buried them out of his sight. His attention to these simple bodily needs wonderfully exalts these needs, and marks them as eminently worthy of our devout and careful study. You may put a gospel sermon and an invitation to eternal life into a loaf of bread. When to feed a hungry, seeking multitude, warranted his drawing upon his divine resources, we need not hesitate in deciding that care for men, that they be fed, is a proper object and warrant for our drawing upon the resources of his Providence, over which we are made stewards. Applied christianity must prove a most valuable handmaid to doctrinal and experimental christianity. Bolted hearts may be battered open by bread thrown by christian hands.—Christian Inquirer.

The Leaksville Woolen Mills, Leaksville, N. C., need no introduction to the public in North Carolina and adjoining States. This is simply to remind you that they are still "in touch" with the people, working up their wool into various forms of finished product at satisfactory prices. A handsome catalogue containing samples of their new and attractive styles of Fancy Cassimeres and All-Wool Flannels, together with all other goods made by them, is sent to any address on application. Besides an interesting article on "Wool on How to Handle It," the catalogue contains full particulars in regard to shipping wool. If these details are carefully followed, we guarantee prompt return of goods.

Write to Hiram Foard, Secy, Leaksville, N. C., for catalogue, before disposing of your wool.

MT. AIRY

White Sulphur Spring.

This celebrated summer resort will open June 15th. The hotel has been thoroughly renovated, new furniture placed in every room in the building. The Spring is at the foot of the Blue Ridge Mountains. In front is a beautiful park of meadow land covered with grass and flowers, and through this beautifully valley flows the Ararat River. Up this lovely valley blows from the mountain tops a grateful breeze, which makes cover on the beds necessary during the warmest summer nights.

The property has recently been purchased by a stock company with an abundance of capital. No pains or expense will be spared which can add to the comfort and pleasure of those who come to spend the summer in the most beautiful mountain region to be found in the world.

Guests will be met at Mt. Airy, the terminus of the C. F. & Y. V. R. R., and conveyed to the Spring without any stop-over at the hotel.

Special rates furnished by all railroads to persons coming to the Spring. Board, $25.00 and $30.00 per month, and $8.00 and $16 00 per week. Children under 12 years, and servants, at half rates. Address

JORDAN & BROWN, Props.

In a private letter from Dr. L. G. Broughton appears the following: "After spending three weeks at the Mt. Airy White Sulphur Spring I was convinced of the untold value of the water, especially in the treatment of dyspeptic conditions of the lower bowels and in cronic liver and kidney troubles."

New Advertisements.

We call special attention to the advertisement of the Medical College of Virginia. This old, eficient and honored institution is about entering on its fifty fifth session, and we urge upon our young men who purpose studying for the profession to write to Dr. Cullen for catalogue and other information. The professors and other instructors of the College are selected from the best practitioners in Virginia.

You can study law now by mail. Twenty-five years ago the idea of giving a man a legal education by mail would have seemed preposterous. To-day it is not only possible for a person to acquire an extensive knowledge of law at home, but it is possible for him to become a highly capable lawyer by this unique and yet most practical method of study. See advertisement of Sprague Law School in this paper.

Hollins Institute, a School for young ladies, located six miles from Roanoke, Va., at a charming place in a region redolent of health and picturesque natural scenery, has maintained an untarnished record and continuous prosperity for fifty years. It is the oldest and most noted female school in Virginia, and its recent improvements have made its equipment both complete and extensive. For information not contained in advertisement, address Chas. L. Cocke, Superintendent, Hollins, Va.

Oak Ridge Institute has just closed its fortieth year, having had an enrollment of three hundred students. This school has had phenomenal success, probably because it was the first school in the State that combined with a thorough Classical course of study, a practical Business Department. In point of buildings and appliances, it is the best equipped school of the kind in the South. See ad. elsewhere.

We direct the attention of our readers to the advertisement of the Louisburg Female College to be found in another column. After reading the adv., write to President S. D. Bagley, Louisburg, N. C., for a catalogue.

See in another column the advertisement of Littleton High School. Prof. Bagley is a fine teacher, his school is well situated, and possesses all the advantages necessary to fit young men with first-class preparation for college classes or business.

Collection for Associational Missions.

C. E. DANIEL, Clerk.

Mt. Zion Union Meeting.

The Union Meeting of the Mt. Zion Association will convene with Yates church three miles west of Durham, July 29-31, 1892.

Friday, 11 a. m.—Introductory sermon by Rev. W. C. Tyree.

SUBJECTS.

1. Foreign Missions. Rev. J. F. MacDuffie and Col. W. A. Albright.
2. Centennial of Missions. Rev. W. C. Tyree and Rev. A. A. Butler.
3. Associational Missions. Rev. C. A. Woodson and W. S. Roberson, Esq.
4. The relative importance of the Mission Work at home and abroad, and the effect of the one upon the other. Dr. J. L. Carroll and Rev. J. W. Watson.

Brethren, bring up some money for Associational Missions. In this, we are behind.

COMMITTEE.

If every suffering lady who reads the BIBLICAL RECORDER knew how easily and pleasantly she can be relieved she would suffer no longer. Send 2c. stamp to Mrs. Jos W. Ashby, Mt. Airy, N. C., for free sample, or $1.00 for one month's treatment sent in plain wrapper. Six months treatment for $5.00.

Western Union.

The Western Union of the Raleigh Association will meet with Mt. Hermon church on Friday before the fifth Sunday in July, 1892.

PROGRAM.

11 a. m.—Devotional services.
11:30 a. m.—Organization.
2 p. m.—Duty of the Church to the Young. By L. D. Bancom.
3 p. m.—Is our Custom of an Annual Revival Season for a few weeks Scriptural? By Rev. H. W. Norris.
Saturday, 9:30 a. m.—Devotional service.
10 a. m.—Are our People properly in Sympathy with the work of our Board of Ministerial Education? By Rev. W. R. Gwaltney.
11 a. m.—Associational Missions. By N. B. Broughton.
1:30 p. m.—Criticisms on our present Sunday-school Methods? By C. H. Utley.
Sunday morning exercises to be provided for by Superintendent of Mt. Hermon Sunday-school.
11 a. m.—Sermon by Rev. H. W. Norris.

As the meeting of the Executive Committee was held so late, we were compelled to appoint the leaders in debates without consultation. We earnestly request each one appointed to be present, or arrange for some one to come in their stead.

Please send a liberal contribution for Associational Missions as the Board is in much need of help just now.

Let each church see to it that the letters to the Union are properly and completely filled. The records that will greet the churches in a few days will be incomplete in some respects because so many churches either failed to send letters or left so much of their letters unfilled.

Don't fail to send minute funds as the records will be scant in proportion to the amount received for publication.

C. W. BLANCHARD, for Com.

Dedication of Mt. Adar Church.

Mt. Adar church (house of worship) was dedicated Sunday, July 3d, 1892. Dr. C. Durham preached the sermon to a very large and deeply interested congregation at eleven o'clock a. m.

The following report was made by the Treasurer just before the sermon:

"The amounts collected for the church building have been as follows, viz: Miss Mattie Compton, $213.60; Miss Viola Vincent, $30.45; Mrs. A. L. Malone, $159.97; G. F. Blackman, $52 05; W. H. Whitted, $170.09; Rev. J. F. McDuffie, $105.38. Total, $720.54. Every dollar of the cost of the house is paid.

W. H. WHITTED, Treasurer."

This church is located in Orange county about ten miles north of Mebane's. This church and the friends in the neighborhood deserve great credit for this work.

Do you know that you can buy a chimney to fit your lamp that will last till some accident happens to it?

Do you know that Macbeth's "pearl top" or "pearl glass" is that chimney?

You can have it—your dealer will get it—if you insist on it. He may tell you it costs him three times as much as some others. That is true. He may say they are just as good. Don't you believe it—they may be better for him; he may like the breaking.

A wall 300 feet long and thirty feet high running along the side of the New Port News railroad yard at Memphis, toppled over last Friday and fell upon a Pullman car, in which conductors Hunter and Hogan and a porter named Ball were asleep. The car was crushed in and all three men were killed.

Recently Andrew Carnegie, proprietor of the Homestead Iron Mills, Pennsylvania, decided to lower the wages of his three thousand employees. A general strike ensued, and the mills were taken possession of by the strikers. The mill-owners forthwith employed three hundred Pinkerton guards to regain possession of and protect the mills. A fight between the Pinkerton's and strikers ensued in which twenty-two persons were killed and over one hundred wounded. The strikers were victorious and the Pinkertons were captured and put under arrest. At present great excitement prevails, and the State militia is daily expected, as the sheriff is powerless.

MARRIED.

McDANIEL—WATERS—On June 8th 1892, in Kinston, at the residence of J. A. Pridgen, by Rev. A. L. Stough, Mr. James A. McDaniel and Miss Laura Waters, all of Kinston, N. C.

BLAND—FOUSHEE—On June 29th, 1892, at the residence of the bride's father, W. F. Foushee, Pittsboro, N. C., by Rev. J. W. F. Watson, Mr. Robert W. Bland and Miss Lula L. Foushee, all of Chatham.

DIED.

ALDERMAN—At his home in Duplin county, June 10th, 1892, Bro. Amos Alderman, aged seventy-seven years and two months. His was the life of a quiet and yet a truly good man, the influence of which will be seen still in the lives of those who came in contact with him.

I. T. NEWTON.

MATTHEWS—In Raleigh, N. C., on July 8th, 1892, Mrs. Emma Matthews, wife of J. F. Matthews, in the 29th year of her age. She was the eldest child of the late Barney and Narcissa Jones, was a member of the Baptist Tabernacle and died in full hope of salvation through Christ. She was confined to her bed for a long time, but bore her sufferings patiently and with christian resignation.

ETHERIDGE—At his home on Roanoke Island, Dare county, N. C., June 29th, 1892, John Allen Etheridge. He was a faithful member of Roanoke Island Baptist church. His death was very sudden, having lived but a few days after he was taken sick. His death cast a sadness and gloom over the community. He will be missed in the Sunday-school, prayer meeting, and community. He leaves two sisters and several children to mourn after him. A good man has gone to his reward. May we prepare to meet him. His body was taken to the church and his funeral preached by the writer, and buried with the Rodbey of the K. O. O. F., of which he was a member. May the bereft ones be comforted in that he is not dead but sleepeth.

P. S. C. D.

CHAPPELL—Died, June 22d, at his home in Perquimans county, Bro. Isaac Chappell, in the eightieth year of his age. He was for years an earnest and faithful member of Chappell Hill church. The religion of the Saviour was seen in his life and in his afflictions, which were long and severe. A large crowd gathered at the funeral to say goodbye. He leaves an aged and afflicted widow, with one hundred and seven children, grandchildren and great-grandchildren to mourn their loss. The good Lord bless all.

A. W. B.

LEARY—At his residence, on July 4d, 1892, Deacon Samuel Leary went to that home prepared for the final faithful. He was born in Camden county, N. C., Nov. 30th, 1807, where he spent all of his life, and died in his eighty-fifth year. Bro. Leary was the oldest member of Shiloh church, having joined between fifty and sixty years ago; was made deacon, and died senior deacon of the church. He was ready for every good word and work, not only in his church, but community. He raised some orphan children, some of whom are among the leading members of Shiloh church. He leaves a widow and eleven children, all of whom are members of the church except one.

God be praised for such a life as his for imitation and encouragement. He will be sadly missed by the church, his pastor and the community in which he lived. A large concourse of his brethren, sisters and friends were present at his funeral, which was conducted at the house by his pastor from 2 Tim. 4: 7, 8, the words selected by himself. May grace be given to his widow and dear children.

P. S. C. D.

COCKMON—Fell asleep in Jesus, near Flint Hill Baptist church, Moore county, N. C., July 1st, 1892, our kind and beloved sister, Mary Cockmon, aged sixty-seven years. Sister Cockmon joined the church at the age of twelve years. She lived a consistent christian life. All the time she strove and fought against the great adversary of souls. As a wife and mother she was kind, affectionate, and devoted. As a christian she was a model. Always ready to help build up the kingdom of Christ in the earth. She never seemed to grow weary in well doing. As a neighbor she was ever ready and willing to do what she could to relieve those who were in trouble and distress. We are ready to exclaim as did Solomon in his proverb, "Who can find a virtuous woman? for her price is far above rubies. She stretcheth out her hand to the poor; yea, she reacheth forth her hands to the needy. She openeth her mouth with wisdom; and in her tongue is the law of kindness. Her children arise up and call her blessed; her husband also, and he praiseth her." She will be greatly missed by her husband, children, and many friends who knew her. As her christian character was without spot or blemish, we believe that we can safely say, therefore, that she is in the land of bliss, where there is no more sorrow, pain or death, and where parting is unknown. Her funeral was conducted by the writer.

Little Things.

A crumb will feed a little bird,
A thought prevent an angry word,
A seed bring forth full many a flower,
A drop of rain foretell a shower!

A little cloud the sun will hide,
A dwarf may prove a giant's guide,
A narrow plank a safe bridge form,
A smile some cheerless spirit warm!

A step begins the journey long,
A weak head oft outwits the strong,
A gull defies the angry sea,
A word will set a captive free!

A hornet goads the mighty beast,
A cry of "fire" breaks up a feast,
A glass shows wonders in the skies,
A little child confounds the wise!

A straw the wild wind's course reveals,
A kind act oft an old grudge heals,
A beacon light saves many a life,
A slight will often kindle strife!

A puff of smoke betrays the flames,
A pen-stroke o'er will blight a name,
A little hand may alms bestow,
A message small brings joy or woe!

The widow's mite a great gift proved,
A mother's prayer has heaven moved,
"Then let us not," the poet sings,
"Despise the Gospel of small things."

A Plucky Ride.

It was late in the fall of 1777 that a foraging party from a British camp in Philadelphia made a descent upon the farm of Major Rudolph, south of that city. Having supplied themselves well with provender, one of the soldiers happened to espy a valuable cow in the lane leading to the barn-yard, and poor Sukey was immediately confiscated.

Now, this happened to be the pride of the farm, and was claimed as the exclusive property of Miss Anne Rudolph, aged twelve years. Of course, no other animal on the estate was so important as this cow, and confiscation by the soldiers could not be tolerated. So Miss Anne made an impetuous dash for her recovery; but finding the men deaf to her entreaties, and the sergant proof against her indignation, the spirited child rushed to the stable, saddled her pony, and was soon galloping toward the city, determined to appeal to the commander-in chief of the British army.

Meanwhile, poor Sukey trudged along, her reluctant steps quickened now and then with a gentle prick with a point of a bayonet in her well-rounded side.

To reach the city before the foraging party was the one thought of the child, as the pony went bounding along the old Chester road at a pace that soon brought her within the British lines. She was halted at the first outpost by the guard, and the occasion of her haste was demanded. The child replied:

"I must see the General immediately."

"But the General cannot be disturbed for every trifle. Tell me your business, and, if important, it will be reported to him."

"It is of great importance, and I cannot stop to talk to you. Please let go my pony, and tell me where to find the General."

"But, my little girl, I cannot let you pass until you tell me whence you came and what your business is within these lines."

"I came from Darby, and my business is to see the General immediately. No one else can tell him what I have to say."

The excitement of the child, together with her persistence, had its influence. General Washington was in the neighborhood with his ragged army, watching the opportunity to strike another blow for the liberty of the colonies. The officer well knew that valuable information in the movements of the rebels frequently reached the British commander through families residing in that country. Here might be such a case, and the consideration determined the soldier to send the child to headquarters. So summoning an orderly, he directed him to escort the girl to the General.

It was late in the afternoon by this time, and Cornwallis was at dinner with a number of British officers, when "a little girl from the country with a message for the General" was announced.

"Let her come in at once," said the General, and a few moments later Miss Anne Rudolph entered the great tent.

"Well, my little girl, I am General Cornwallis," said that gentleman kindly. "What have you to say to me?"

"I want my cow!"

Profound silence reigned for a moment, then came a burst of laughter from all the gentlemen around the table. The girl's face reddened, but she held her ground, and her set features and flashing eyes convinced the General that the child before him was one of no ordinary spirit.

With ready tact the General drew from her a narration of her grievance. "Why did not your father come?" he asked.

"My father is not at home."

"And have you no brothers?"

"Both of my brothers are away. But, General," cried she impatiently, "while you keep me here talking they will kill my cow!"

"So your brothers also are away! Now, tell me, child, where are they?"

"My eldest brother is with General Gates."

"And your other brother, where is he?" inquired the General.

"Is with Harry Lee."

The girl's eyes fairly blazed as she spoke the name of gallant "Light Horse Harry Lee."

"But General, I want my cow!"

"Ah, ah! one brother with Gates and one with Lee. Now," said the General, severely, "where is your father?"

"He was with General Washington," answered the little patriot, "but he is a prisoner now."

"So, so. Father and brothers all in the Continental army! I think, then, you must be a little rebel."

"Yes, sir, if you please. But I want my cow!"

"Well, you are a brave little girl, and you shall have your cow, and something more too." Then, stooping forward, he detached from his garters a pair of brilliant knee buckles, which he laid in the child's hands. "Take these," he said, "and keep them to remember that Lord Cornwallis can appreciate courage and truth, even in a young rebel." Then, calling an orderly, he instructed him to go with the child through the camp in search of the cow, and when he should find the animal to detail a man to drive her home again. So Miss Anne returned home in triumph with her cow. And those sparkling knee buckles are treasured by her descendants as a memento of Cornwallis and the Revolution.—Wide Awake.

Spoiled Children.

Spoiled children are not the product of effete civilization. They have always existed, literally since the beginning of our race, for the first child was Cain, and in the light of his subsequent career, we cannot doubt that Eve allowed the wonderful little creature his own way in everything. Original sin was then so new, so fresh, that the baby had it in its undiluted potency, and the young mother, most hapless of women, never had a mother of her own to guide and instruct her. Other instances of spoiled children could be easily cited from the Scripture records—Jacob, his mother's darling, and Absalom, the pride of David's heart, coming at once to mind—but it is not necessary to turn to the past, we have the species always with us; perhaps in our own homes may be found choice, well-developed specimens.

There are rigid disciplinarians who believe that a child should never be permitted to have its own way, even when that way is a good one, neither injurious to itself nor disagreeable to others. Were theirs the universal rule originality would be totally suppressed, and the law of love become obsolete. Brought up in the frigid atmosphere of sternness and constant repression, a child may learn to behave with perfect propriety, but it is none the less a failure, and a pitiable one.

The little ones are entitled to loving care, to tender caresses, and sweet words of endearment. It is only when love becomes injudiciously indulgent that the process of spoiling begins. It is so easy to give way to little exactions, to laugh at the naughty yet winsome actions, that the rosebud is surrounded with prickly thorns, the kitten's sharp claws are grown before we awaken to the fact that our own precious darling is a high private at least, if not a commanding officer, in the great army of enfants gates. It sounds better in French—the foreign syllables are less downright—but there is no softening the hard reality away. And then, with a remorseful consciousness that it is our child who has become a "nuisance"—the favorite term applied to the spoiled children of other people—we enter hurridly and energetically upon the task of rooting up the noxious weeds which are choking the growth of all that is sweet and attractive in the youthful character. And with a sight of contrition we deplore our own failures, and resolved to be more vigilant. We will not, we must not, let the little darlings be ruined by inefficiency. And so, taking courage, we begin over again, looking cheerfully forward to the days when, as grandmothers, we can exercise the privileges of that dignity, and spoil to our heart's content. —Harper's Bazar.

Hints for Boys.

A gentleman advertised for a boy to assist him in his office, and nearly fifty applicants presented themselves before him. Out of the whole number he selected one, and dismissed the rest.

"I should like to know," said a friend, "on what ground you selected that boy without a single recommendation?" "You are mistaken," said the gentleman, "he has a great many. He wiped his feet when he came in, and closed the door after him, showing that he was careful; gave up his seat to that lame old man, showing that he was kind and thoughtful; he took off his cap when he came in, answered my questions promptly and respectfully, showing that he was polite and gentlemanly; he picked up a book, which I had purposely laid upon the floor, and replaced it on the table, while all the rest stepped over it or shoved it aside; and he waited quietly for his turn, instead of pushing or crowding, showing that he was honest and orderly.

When I talked with him I noticed that his clothes were carefully brushed, his hair in nice order, and his teeth as white as milk; and when he wrote his name I noticed that his finger nails were clean, instead of being tipped with jet like that handsome little fellow's in the blue jacket.

Don't you call these things letters of recommendation? I do, and I would give more for what I can tell about a boy by using my eyes ten minutes than all the letters of recommendation he could give me." —Exchange.

Be Accurate.

Not long ago we advised girls to keep accounts. Boys need do as well, and in these days no well-ordered business is conducted without a set of books.

No boy can afford to grow up without proper training in money matters, and nothing is so helpful as a set of private accounts in which every cent is accounted for.

On one occasion a man presented to Mr. Webster a bill for payment.

"Why, Mr. N——," said the statesman, "it seems to me that I have paid that bill."

Mr. N——protested that it had not been paid, and Mr. Webster told him to call in a few days and he would attend to the matter. After the man had gone, Mr. Webster asked his clerk to look over a quantity of bills and see if he could find a receipt for the amount. To his surprise two receipts were found, indicating that the bill had been paid twice.

In due time Mr. N——called, just at the dinner hour, as it chanced, and Mr. Webster invited him in to dine. After the meal was over they proceeded to the business in hand.

"Mr. N——, do you keep books?" Mr. Webster inquired.

"No," was the reply.

"I thought so," said Mr. Webster. "Now I advise you to keep books. If you had kept books you would have known that I had this receipted bill,"—showing him one.

Mr. N——was greatly surprised and mortified, and apologized as best he could for his mistake.

"Yes, it is always a good plan to keep books," continued Mr. Webster, showing him a second receipt.

Then, knowing Mr. N——to be an honest man, and not wishing to annoy him, he suggested that perhaps receipted bills had been presented, but really left unpaid, and insisted that Mr. N——should take the money. —Exchange.

Ideas.

"How easy that is. I might have done it myself if I had only thought of it." Many a time I have hear that remark made, and the words "if I had only thought" have lingered in my ears.

The story which connects an ordinary tea kettle with the discovery of the power of steam is familiar to all.

Brunel, the great engineer, who invented the machine which was used in the excavation of the Thames tunnel, was one day watching the movements of an insect known as the naval woodworm when a brilliant idea occurred to him.

He noticed that the insect bored its way into the wood by an extraordinary mechanical device. With the aid of the microscope he ascertained that the insect had a pair of valvular shells in front, and, with the aid of its foot, gave a forward and rotary motion which acted as a gimlet, the small pieces of wood passed back to the mouth of the insect and were thrown out.

This, thought Brunel, is just what I have long been wanting, if I can produce it in an enlarged form. After a great deal of labor and many failures, a boring machine was satisfactorily finished which excavated the Thames tunnel.—Our Sunday Afternoon.

Cæsar's Dues, or Our Duty to Civil Government.

BY REV. J. R. JONES.

"Render, therefore, unto Cæsar the things which are Cæsar's." Matt. 22: 21.

This text, which is a part of the reply of Jesus to a question propounded by the Pharisees, with which they hoped, but did not succeed, to "entangle him in his talk," suggests the subject that I want to consider.

Cæsar in this passage represents civil government. Let us notice the fact,

I. THAT WE ARE UNDER OBLIGATION TO CIVIL GOVERNMENT.

This is true because of the benefits we derive from it. Its object is to protect our rights, our lives, property and liberty, and to help us in many ways. But for its protection there would be for us no security, no peace, no happiness. We retire at night to rest and sleep without fear, or even thought of being molested and harmed during the night, because the government has placed around our homes a strong and ever watchful guard. Our sleep is sweet and refreshing, because we fear no danger. At every corner of our possessions, it has stationed a sentinel who says to the would be intruder: "Thus far shalt thou come and no further;" and he dares not approach nearer for fear of arrest and punishment. We have rights that are natural and sacred that are protected. It says to him who attempts imposition or infringement upon these rights, "Hands off." And so about them is set a hedge that cannot be crossed without punishment to the offender. For these and other benefits the government has claims upon us, that we as citizens must satisfy or be untrue.

II. WHAT ARE THESE CLAIMS?

1. Obedience. It would hardly seem necessary to stop at this point, but there seem to be some loose notions in regard to obeying laws held, even by people who are considered clever citizens, such, for instance, as this: "The law is a bad one; I was opposed to its being enacted, and did what I could against it, and, therefore, I do not feel under obligation to keep it." With feelings of this sort, some can, with easy consciences, run illicit distilleries, or deal in unstamped tobacco, or violate other laws. Whether the laws are what we would have them be or not, so long as they do not interfere with conscience in religious matters, we are bound by considerations of the best interest of the country, and the fact that such obedience is enjoined in the Scriptures, to obey them. For the general welfare of the country, obedience to a bad law is better than its violation. Paul in his letter to the christians in Rome says: "Let every soul be subject unto the higher powers: for there is no power but of God: the powers that be are ordained of God. Whosoever, therefore, resisteth the power resisteth the ordinance of God; and they that resist shall receive to themselves damnation." (Rom. 13: 1, 2.) Again, he says: "Therefore, ye must needs be subject, not only for wrath, but for conscience' sake." (Verse 5.) In his letter to Titus, he writes: "Put them in mind to be subject to principalities and powers to obey magistrates, to be ready to every good work." (Titus 3: 1.) The Apostle Peter, in his first letter, exhorts the brethren as follows: "Submit yourselves to every ordinance of man for the Lord's sake: whether it be to the king as supreme, or unto governors, as unto them that are sent by him." (1 Peter 2: 13, 14.) In view of this instruction, I cannot see how any reasonable person, especially a christian, can be otherwise than entirely submissive. From these Scriptures we learn that law is to be obeyed, not only because it is best for the country, but on the ground that government is an ordinance of God, and that it is to be obeyed not only from fear of punishment, but for conscience' sake. To violate law, then, is not only to sin against government, but against God, and to do violence to conscience. Personal objection to law does not give the right to violate it. Laws are made by our representatives and are our laws, and whether they suit our own notions exactly or not, to be good and worthy citizens, we must obey them. Let us all, then, in respect of obedience, be faithful and true to Cæsar.

2. Honor. Peter, in his letter to christians, exhorts them to "honor the king." That for us means to honor the government. This must be done if for no other reason than that it is an ordinance of God. To dishonor it is to dishonor God. All conduct, therefore, that reflects upon the honor of our government should be rebuked by all good citizens. I am sorry to see that lynching is becoming more and more common in our country, and that encouragement is given to it by some of our respectable newspapers. "Lynch law" is a most palpable reflection upon our government, and in a high degree dishonoring to it, and when carried to its logical results would destroy all law and order and bring anarchy and ruin.

The same is true of "mob law." No man nor band of men has the right, under any circumstances where there is law, to take the law into their own hands and take the life of a fellow citizen. I know that now and then a crime is committed that seems to justify lynching, but it does not. And whatever some men may think of such a proceeding, I believe that in the eyes of God it is murder. We have laws to reach all crimes, and as we value security and good order, and respect the laws of God, we must let these laws take their course and bring offenders to justice and to punishment. Public sentiment, instead of winking at such a crime in any way, should crush it down and out of existence if possible. No good citizen should ever utter a word that can be interpreted as favoring it.

There are other ways of dishonoring government that might be mentioned, but I will not do it now. I have said this much on the crime of lynching because its toleration is such a black spot on our civilization.

3. Financial support. No government can be administered without expense. Men who give their time and labor to it must be paid for their services. Navies must be kept up, public buildings erected and kept in repair, public schools supported where there are any, and also other public enterprises; and all of these things are to be supported out of the public treasuries. Now the money that goes into these treasuries must come from the people, and it is the duty of every citizen, except such as are exempt, to pay his proportional part into the treasuries. When the government is economically administered, the benefit we get from it fully compensates us for its cost. To dodge the tax-lister and collector, and in this way get out of paying taxes, or to fail to render a full account of our taxable property for taxation may be considered a sharp trick, but it is cheating the government out of its just dues, treating our fellow citizens with injustice, sinning against God, and wronging our souls. Cheating is cheating whether an individual or a government is the victim. We are to "pay tribute to whom tribute is due, custom, to whom custom." (Rom. 13: 7) Government should be economically administered, and no more money than is actually necessary to so run it ought to be required of the people. An extravagant disposition of public funds is unjust to the taxpayers, and when disposed of for party purposes, it is a shame, a disgrace, a crime, and a sufficient reason to put the party so using it to the blush. But when an amount necessary to run the government properly is called for, we ought not to mind paying our part of it. Indeed, to be honest, we must do it.

4. To make the government the best possible. If God has ordained that civil government shall exist, it is man's duty to render it as pure and efficient as possible. He has not ordained any particular form, but that best suited to the people to be governed accords with his will. Now the only way to make our government pure and efficient is to fill its offices with men qualified in heart as well as in head. I want to see the time when our affairs of State shall be intrusted to only good men, men honest and true, large-hearted and brave, men who lose sight of party and self-interest in their concern for the welfare of their country when intrusted as public officers with its interests. Now I hear somebody say, "You will never see that day." Well, it may be that I shall not, but for such a day we ought to work. No man who is full of sectional or partisan feeling is fit to make laws, nor is he fit to execute them, and no such men are worthy of being brought to the front in political affairs.

At this time when political excitement is so great, and party feeling or prejudice is coming to the surface, there is danger of being more interested in the success of party than in the welfare of the country. We want good laws, but we cannot depend upon bad men to make them. We want these faithfully executed, but we cannot depend upon bad men to do it. Good men make good laws, and good laws honestly executed make good government and happy people. "When the righteous are in authority, the people rejoice; but when the wicked beareth rule, the people mourn." (Prov. 29: 2.) So let us act wisely in the exercise of our suffrage, and try to select only good men to be our law-makers and rulers. Now and then you will come across a person who says he has quit voting. Politics have become so corrupt, and times get no better whether one party or another is in power, and so he has become disgusted with the whole thing and quit. Now that is not wise or right. It is true, if we are christians, our "citizenship is in heaven"; but so long as we live in this world and in this country, we are American citizens, too; and as beneficiaries of the American government, we are under the most binding obligation to be faithful and true to it in every particular, and nowhere do we have a better opportunity to correct its errors than at the polls. Yes, let us in every proper way use our best efforts to make the government the best possible and thus discharge our duty as citizens and christian citizens. If there is corruption in the government, let us try to get it out.

5. Our prayers. In his first letter to Timothy, Paul said, "I exhort, therefore, that first of all, supplications, prayers, intercessions, and giving of thanks, be made for all men; for kings, and for all that are in authority; that we may lead a quiet and peaceable life in all godliness and honesty." (1 Tim. 2: 1, 2.) For all the officers of our government from the lowest to the highest it is our duty to pray, and frequently pastors should, in their public prayers in church, lead the congregations in such prayers. The responsibilities on many of them are heavy, their duties laborious, and to some of them temptations to do wrong are great and not easily resisted. Let us pray for their health, their lives, and that they may be able to resist every temptation to evil, and be divinely guided in the discharge of duty.

Yes, we are indebted to Cæsar: let us render unto him the things which are his, and thus be true and faithful citizens; and may God help us so to do.

Letter from Rev. G. P. Bostick.

Dear Bro. Bailey:—I have read in the RECORDER of March 30th Bro. Durham's account of our resignation to the Foreign Mission Board and his reasons (?) for the step. Will you kindly allow me a statement regarding the whole matter in your paper, including my reasons for the course I have pursued.

Bro. Durham says that a meeting was held in Shelby, March 28th, to consider my proposition. Bro. Sproles, the Secretary of that meeting, gave me the names of twenty-three churches out of thirty composing the Association, as represented in said meeting. On the copy of the resolutions sent me, he said, "This settles the matter."

This led me to some study as to whether that meeting was representative or not. I see that the meeting only recommended to the churches. The local churches, to which I addressed my appeal, have an aggregate membership of more than four thousand. I think the meeting in Shelby could not have had more than four hundred in it, perhaps not so many. But perhaps it was a delegated meeting, and so really represented the churches. Thirteen, however, out of the twenty-three churches, said to be represented, hold regular monthly meetings, according to the minutes of the Association, only for the first or fourth Sundays in each month and Saturday before. The Shelby meeting was held on Friday before the fourth Sunday in March, and my appeal to the individual local churches of the Association reached Shelby on Thursday before the first Sunday in March. So that all these thirteen churches could not have ordered any action at a regular meeting, and there were seven other churches that were not even claimed to be represented. But perhaps the pastors and brethren felt at liberty to act for these churches, but does that certainly settle the question for them? It does seem to me that for me to appeal to the local churches is more in accordance with the New Testament idea as understood by Baptists than was the action of "the few brethren" in Shelby. I ask Baptists to judge for themselves. It seems to me at this distance that there was some unwillingness to allow the subject to come before the local churches. It also seems to me that matters were hurried in order to have Bro. Durham in the meeting; at any rate, that no member of that meeting has the right to accuse me of acting hastily in the matter. I decided a year ago to take this step ere long, and took the step after most earnest, candid, prayerful consideration of the question for six months. My father, S. E. Bostick, knows that I wrote him last October my intention to resign and depend directly upon the churches. Bro. Bell also knows that I gave intimation to him nearly a year ago of the same intention. Now the action of the Shelby meeting was just twenty-one days after my letter reached Shelby, and it must be first printed and distributed to widely separated churches.

Whose action, then, was most hasty? I want just here to say, too, that my action was not the result of the Board's resolutions, but only hastened by them. The idea has been put forth that I resigned because of these resolutions. This is utterly untrue. I decided to resign before I wrote the article that gave rise to the resolutions.

Bro. Durham says in regard to the resignation: "Bro. Bostick went to China three years ago, and was, from the beginning of his work there, as it seems, under the influence of the erratic Dr. Crawford. Dr. Crawford for about six years has not been connected with our Board." In this language is contained two erroneous statements: first, that I have from my arrival here been under the influence of Dr. Crawford; second, that Dr. Crawford for six years has not been connected with our Board. As to mistake first, I desire to say that I reached Tungchow July 18th, 1889, and Dr. Crawford reached America about the same time, and I never saw him till he returned July 8th, 1890; and had no communication whatever with him except a short note left in Yokohama in which he did not mention mission methods. Mistake second. I do not know why Bro. D. said this, but I know that it is not correct, because (1) the same mail that brought Bro. D.'s accusation brought also a letter from Dr. Tupper to Dr. Crawford, informing him that his name was dropped because of a tract "Churches to the Front," which he had recently written and circulated; (2) I am now treasurer of the missions and find in the books that regular appropriations for salary and work were made by the Board for Dr. C. up to end of 1889. He did resign his salary and responsibility for regular work early in 1889, but he has since done much regular preaching, which has been reported to the Board; (3) he has been chairman in our mission meetings most of the time since he returned in 1890.

I desire now to say that I and the other young missionaries coming here recently have come with an idea that Dr. Crawford was about half crazy, and I believe that all of them would unite with me in saying that this aged servant of God is badly misunderstood and grossly misrepresented at home. With me this idea that he was wrong was strengthened by a remark made to me by an officer of the Board the day I was received to the effect that Dr. C. was not in harmony with our work, but that by special effort I could get along with him. All this made us glad that we were to get to housekeeping before he returned. This we had arranged to do early in June, 1890, but a few days before that, God called my dear wife up to her home on high, and so I was left by this providence in the home of the Crawfords for another year and a half. I was surprised to find that I could get along so easily with him. This erroneous idea about Dr. C. seems to be in the atmosphere at home, and somebody is responsible for it. I do not believe that the simple proclamation of his views would give such an idea. I wish to say that coming in contact with him, strongly prejudiced against him as I was, and having lived with him for a year and a half, gives me a right to an opinion about the man. Certainly it does seem that I should be as well qualified to speak as those who have never seen him, or at most only for a few days, and yet who speak so strongly against him. He will soon go up to heaven to await the coming of those who have said so many harsh things about him. I do feel that if many others could have lived with him for a time they would have been saved from many unkind and I think untrue words about him.

Bro. D. says: "Bro. Bostick's resignation is only the culmination of a number of unfortunate circumstances for which the Board in Richmond and the churches of the King's Mountain Association were in no way responsible and over which they had no control." I do not certainly know exactly what he means by "unfortunate circumstances," but I suppose he means the death of my wife and the consequent separation from my only darling child. If that be his meaning, then I am just finding out that God's children are to look upon the dealings of a loving Father as "unfortunate circumstances." My creed is different from that. Those were days of deep sorrow, and yet I know that I realized the precious presence of the Holy Spirit as I never did before. If I know anything, I do know that in those days I was drawn nearer to God, and that those "unfortunate circumstances" did turn out to my spiritual good. It all made me more anxious to know and do God's will. My days of purest joy have been my days of keenest sorrow. Now, if my resignation "is the result of all these circumstances," then I shall be all the more assured of God's guidance in it all, and thank God for the circumstances.

Has he any arguments against my position? Then why not use them? I know it is much easier to cry an individual down as "erratic," "crank," and thus cover up his cause, than to meet with arguments his arguments, but I have not found such the most Christ-like nor the best logic. Let us come to this question with arguments, and not thrust off the discussion by a few words like "crank," "hasty action," "soured," &c. If my statements in "circular letter" are wrong, who is willing to prove them incorrect? If they are false, somebody can show them to be so surely.

Now I desire briefly to give the developments that have led up to our resignation. My sainted wife and I heard Dr. Y. J. Allen of Shanghai lecture at length in Durham in 1888, concerning his school work in Shanghai. We agreed heartily that his work was not our idea of mission work. The RECORDER stated substantially our ideas the next day after he lectured in Raleigh. We reached Japan to find that much of mission work consisted in that like his—free schools run in style, with the graduates often employed to do religious work to save them to the churches. This made ours, to many peculiar views, stronger. In Shanghai we saw much to further confirm us; and we lived in Tungchow by the side of one of the best schools in China and could see for ourselves. Mrs. B. wrote over the nom de plume "The Modern Paul" an article for the RECORDER, showing how disgusting to her were some of the methods pursued. As my views developed, I wrote them to the Board and to individuals. The usual reply from the Board was to the effect that these matters were none of my business, and individuals would say that these are matters for the Board. So it went on till about a year ago, an officer of the Board wrote me a very strong and earnest letter exhorting me to throw off Dr. Crawford's influence, and making accusations against him which he failed utterly to substantiate. He said Dr. C. went on attacking the Board in public and private and yet continued to hold a position under and draw a salary from it. It was this last sentence that caused me to decide to sever my connection from the Board. Why? Because I failed to find proof of any of the attacks alleged against Dr. C., unless to express views different from those held by the Board be considered an attack. The officer in his reply to my reply failed still to give any proof of such attacks except his own declaration. I did find recorded in printed document what I think might be construed as attacks on Dr. C. Here, then, was my situation: I must cease to be connected with the Board or decide never to advocate any views different from theirs; or else do so at the risk of being accused of making attacks and still taking salary from them.

My views of mission policy had then become strong convictions—principles which I felt I must advocate. Hence my decision and resulting action. I had not yet written the article which gave rise to the Board's resolutions. Deciding to resign led me of course to think what I should do to continue my God-given work. My mind fell upon the plan for churches, or groups of churches, to do their own work. I believed such to be Scriptural, and hence practicable. This plan I wrote to the Board, asking them to turn their attention to bringing such relation between churches and missionaries. The officer to whom it was sent, I suppose, failed to present it to the Board. He replied, "I do not think your plan will work." I wrote this to the Board now about nine months ago. Thus my views have developed. "I believed, therefore have I spoken" and acted. Discuss the question and do not slap at me.

I am curious to see how the people are to account for Bro. D. W. Herring's views, so similar to mine and with which I am in heartiest sympathy, especially since he has neither lost his wife, nor been compelled to separate from his only child nor lived with Dr. Crawford. He lives five hundred miles from us, and communication is seldom.

I ask my brethren to read carefully my statements, and then judge if my resignation is the result of "a number of unfortunate circumstances." I earnestly desire to be and do right.

I should not have said the words about Dr. Crawford I have, but for the fact that he was made responsible for my sins (?). I know his name in this letter so frequently will not give it strength with the people, but I am for truth and justice before success.

I stand ever ready to turn from any error when convinced that I am wrong, but slaps and cuts and utter disregard for arguments are by no means convincing to me, except as they convince me of the weakness of the cause of my opponents.

Praying God's blessings upon all and that we may ever seek and find right paths,

I am yours in Christ,

G. P. BOSTICK.

RESOLUTIONS OF THE CENTENNIAL COMMITTEE OF THE SOUTHERN BAPTIST CONVENTION.

(Adopted June 22d and 23d, 1892.)

* * * * *

Resolved, That it is the sense of this Committee that the words "Permanent Centennial Fund of $250,000," as used in our last report to the Southern Baptist Convention, were not intended to designate an endowment fund the interest of which only shall be used, but a fund for "Bible translation, chapel building, a church edifice fund, and other permanent work." If, therefore, any donor of a special sum shall see fit to direct that his gift be invested and only the interest be expended, his wishes must be sacredly observed, but without such specific directions these gifts will be turned over to the Board for the benefit of their work, and the Boards will be authorized and expected to expend the said funds, as occasion may require, in work of a permanent character connected with their missionary operations.

* * * * *

Resolved, That this Centennial Committee respectfully recommend to the Boards to use all proper methods, by circulars, by instruction to their agents, and by use of their own publications and the denominational papers generally, to make clear to all our brethren that Centennial contributions may be either for the support and enlargement of the present work of the Boards or for the fund for permanent work at the option of the donors; and that it is understood that only those contributions specifically designated for the latter fund will be put to the credit of that fund.

* * * * *

Resolved, That the representatives of this Committee be hereby instructed, in addressing the interests and claims of the Centennial, to emphasize the idea of enlarged operations as well as the raising a fund for permanent work, and to strive constantly to uplift our people to a higher plane of life for Christ and giving systematically for the promotion of his cause.

ISLAMISM.

In the writings of A. M. Mackay, pioneer missionary of the C. M. S. of England to Uganda, Africa, we find the following passage: "We know what Islam has been in the past, and to-day it is not different. It has been the ruin of many fair lands, and besides has this strange venom in it, that people may with comparative ease be led to embrace christianity when simply heathen, but when Islam has put its vile name on them, though ever so superficially, there is no doing anything with them after that."

There is evidently much food for thought in the above passage. One thought suggested is, that if the above position in regard to Islamism is correct, England's support of Turkey, in maintaining her position as a leading power in Europe and Asia, is rather a peculiar course of action for a christian nation to pursue. It is a well-known fact that the Turkish power would long since have collapsed but for the moral and material support of England and France, especially of the former. It may be readily replied that the preservation of Islamism from Russian ambition, or aggression, is its preservation from a civilization and a religion not much superior to that of the Turks themselves. There is some force in this remark; but still, Russian civilization, and the form of religion taught by the Greek church, would undoubtedly be some improvement on the Mohammedan system. Besides, as Mohammedanism has made its conquests principally by the sword, it would seem that when that system is unable to defend itself longer by the means by which it acquired power, that Providence has decreed its overthrow, and hence, that a christiad nation ought not to support its power or throw itself in the way of the march of providential events.

It may be claimed further that England is influenced in her course by reasons of statecraft, and what she does as a State is not, as a rule, governed by religious considerations. Well, to say the least of it, this is rather an anomalous position for a christian nation to occupy. Cromwell made no special claim to piety, nor was England noted under his protectorate for being the most christian of nations; but that distinguished man did a manly thing when he notified the Duke of Savoy that the senseless persecution of innocent men and women on the continent for religious reasons "must cease." Even Henry VIII., with all his crimes, acquired the title of "Defender of the Faith;" and since England has broken off the shackles of Romanism, and is recognised as one of the leading christian nations of the earth, it is, we repeat, passing strange that she is so fully identified with the perpetuation of a civilization and a system of religion which even missionaries from her own borders admit, place a people in such a state that they are harder to be reached by the truth, as it is in Christ, than veritable heathen themselves.

Some may claim that there is not much point to to this reasoning because these remarks are based upon the statements of one man, and he, like others, may be quite mistaken in his estimate of the moral power of Islamism. Let it be understood that we have seen just such statements from other missionaries, and in this, as in other matters, we generally have a better foundation for an opinion than the unsustained views of one man. Islamism has been on trial for many centuries, and the world has had good opportunity to study it as a system, and understand the nature of its fruitage. It is a fact that some of the finest portions of the world have been blasted by its prevalence. Asia Minor was once one of the most populous and prosperous countries on the face of the globe; but it is far from being such now. Palestine, which for centuries has been under its shadow, seems to be under some nightmare of death. Turkey in Europe, once the seat of powerful and prosperous pagan nations, seems to be stagnated in material and religious growth. It is a fact that cannot be denied that missionaries meet such great obstacles to success in countries where this system prevails that more than one has said, that up to date at least, that missions to Mohammedan countries have been almost entire failures. The terrible fanaticism that this people display, when aroused and their relentless destruction of those who oppose their faith, are still calculated to shake the faith of any one in what are called the redeeming traits of the system they perpetuate.

We opine that the estimate of many as to Islamism is based upon little else than the poetic license, such as Edwin Arnold used in "The Light of Asia," or upon the exceedingly liberal analysis of the motives and peculiarities of its founder (Mohammed) as found in that rather remarkable book, "Heroes and Hero-Worship," by Thomas Carlyle. The "Sage of Chelsea" had rather a fondness for differing from the common estimate of men as to the character of some distinghed persons even when he did not have the opinion of his "ould mither" to sustain him. As we voyage over life's main, let us remember that we may pass a Sylla here, and a Charybdis there, in the literary and religious world. There are literary, poetic, and even theological sirens. If genius rescue a Cromwell's name from a nation's "Index Expurgaton's" and place him where he deserves to be, among the heroes of his country's history, we should be on our guard when the same facile pen portrays the worth of a skeptical Frederick or a fanatical Mohammed. We should not allow our admiration for the strange, the romantic, or mystical, to bias our minds and obscure our intellectual and spiritual vision when fascinating pens give to others virtues which they did not possess, and claim for them, or the systems of which they were the founders, a merit which the facts of history or practical experience will not justify.

We can but think that a nation has gained some light when Islamism is introduced where the rankest forms of heathenism have prevailed; but if it be true that its prevalence rather hinders than helps the gospel of Christ, as Mackay and others seem to think, there is only greater need that those who have and who preach the truth should send it at once to those who have it not. Christian nations and christian denominations have a responsibility toward the heathen which they cannot shirk and be just before God. And let us remember that God seems to reckon as truly with nations and denominations as with individuals. Its a fearful thing to be "weighed in the balances and found wanting."

THEN AND NOW.

At the Baptist State Convention held in Hillsboro, 1868, the Board of Missions, through the Corresponding Secretary, Dr. W. T. Walters, presented the following:

"Resolved, That in the department of State Missions the denomination ought to expend not less than twenty thousand dollars annually."

Elders J. J. James, J. B. Solomon, F. M. Jordan, E. Dodson, J. C. Hiden, R. R. Overby, W. T. Walters and John A. Broadus made interesting and strong speeches, and the resolution was unanimously adopted.

The Convention has, ever since that resolution was adopted, been working towards the use of the amount of money in State Missions in North Carolina which the brethren assembled at Hillsboro in 1868 said "ought to be expended annually in this department."

It is sincerely hoped that this full amount may be furnished the Board for State Missions during the Centennial of Modern Missions. The Associations are soon to meet, and among other important things for their consideration, State Missions should be regarded just as Rev. Thomas Meredith put it in a report to the Convention in 1836. He said:

"The State Mission department constitute one of the most important branches of operation in which the Convention is engaged. It is that on the success of which depends, to a great extent, the success of all the others. It is to this that we must look for the cultivation of the soil from which alone our resources can be obtained. It is this, therefore, to which the attention of the Convention should be directed as a matter of radical interest."

The Board has this year one hundred missionaries under appointment, and they are located in thirty-two out of the forty Associations connected with the Convention.

IN the Advanced Quarterly, published by the Southern Baptist Convention, for the third quarter, page 8th, in the lesson for July 17th, on the expression "for the remission of sins," the following is the comment: "In order that our sins may be forgiven." On page nine, baptism is defined thus: "Baptism is an evidence of repentance and a public profession of faith in Jesus."

"Does baptism procure forgiveness or the new birth?

"No, baptism only represents regeneration and forgiveness like a picture. John 3: 5; Acts 2: 38." (Page 39.)—Broadus Catechism.

Is this of Dr. Broadus consistent with the comment in the Quarterly? If not, which is correct?

THE suggestion in the Baptist State Convention, out of which came the BIBLICAL RECORDER, was made by Dr. Samuel Wait, in a report submitted at Rive's M. H., Chatham county, Aug. 6th, 1833.

OBJECTIONS TO THE CRAWFORD-HERRING-BOSTICK PLANS.

The objections to the Crawford-Bostick-Herring plans are weighty and many. We will here notice only three of these objections.

1. These plans are, it seems to us, a departure from the Scriptures—against the examples in mission work given in the New Testament. Baptists have but one book of authority to guide them. They cannot afford to depart from the Scriptures. Wherever that book leads, they must follow. To do otherwise they must give up their splendid history. The one great thing in the temptations of Christ was to influence him to do something contrary to the Scriptures. In each temptation, therefore, Jesus said "it is written." The strongest, the most universal, and the most stealthfully presented temptations of this age to christians is to depart from the Scriptures.

The second temptation in the series, (Matt. 4: 1-10), as presented to Christ, was to a presumptuous faith—"cast thyself down," &c. This presumptuous faith, too, was to be based on Scripture taken out of its connection, misquoted, and misapplied.

This, to us, seems to be the Crawford-Bostick-Herring plans of missions. Go at once to the interior of China, say they, to Africa, and let your personal influence with some home church, or a group of churches, and their personal attachments to you, be the basis of your expected support in mission work. Cast yourself off from the Boards, get away from all Consuls of all christian governments of the world, say these brethren, and be not like Paul and Diaz, hiding their faith by claiming protection from a human government. Have faith, say these brethren, and live in Chinese houses, wear Chinese clothes, and eat Chinese food. Live like the people is their great plea. How will this plan work in Africa?

A returned missionary from Africa, who left there in April, told us less than a month ago that most of the people in his section lived literally without houses and without clothes—perfectly nude. According to these plans, therefore, our missionaries must live like these people.

No, brethren. God forbid. This is not the way to lift up the fallen. But this is the logical necessity of the Crawford-Bostick-Herring plans. Can we adopt them? Who will say yes? In Acts 13: 1-4, we have a mission committee, or board, of five members whose names are given—Barnabas, Simeon, Lucius, Manaen and Saul. Two of this board, as it seems from the position of their names in this record, the chairman and secretary were called by the Spirit as missionaries to go to the heathen. In 1 Cor. 16: 1-4 we have another committee, or board, to execute for the churches a special and a very important work. This work was the appropriation of the donations of the churches—the wise disbursement of the contributions of the churches. In Gal. 2: 7-9 we have the division of the work into State and Foreign Missions, and a division of the leading workers for these two departments.

The Crawford-Bostick-Herring plans are in conflict with our understanding of these Scriptures.

2. These plans are in opposition to all general organized work among us as a denomination. Dr. Crawford in his tract, recently published and extensively circulated, shows his opposition to the existence of the Southern Baptist Convention, to the State Conventions, and to the Associations. In the letter of Bro. Bostick to the churches of the King's Mountain Association the same things are stated, and in Bro. Herring's published plans the same things are necessarily involved.

In Luke 16: 8, as a rebuke to christians for their lack of a wise foresight in their plans for the Lord's work, it is said, "the children of this world are in their generation wiser than the children of light."

The first great and indispensable work of Carey and Fuller, before the former went to India, one hundred years ago, was to arrange some general organization through which the friends of missions in and out of the churches could intelligently combine and wisely direct their energies and means in this great work.

Fuller's work in perfecting and directing the general home organization was no less important and necessary than was the work of Carey in India.

Judson's work in Burmah was a glorious success, but made so under God's guidance and blessings through Rice's work in arousing the home churches and in organizing and directing the work in this country. But for Rice's work here, which resulted in the general organization for Foreign Mission work, Judson could not have remained in Burmah.

We have a most striking illustration of the power of proper organization in our Baptist work in North Carolina.

According to Morgan Edwards there were individual Baptists in this State as early as 1695, but there was no organized Baptist church till 1727. The first church in this State was organized by Paul Parmer in 1727, and was composed of thirty-two members. This was thirty-two years after there were individual Baptists in the State.

The Sandy Creek Association was formed in 1758, the Kehukee in 1765, and the Yadkin in 1790. According to Benedict there were in North Carolina in 1790, sixty-three years after the first church was constituted, three Associations, ninety-four churches, seventy-seven ministers and seven thousand members.

According to Rev. Thomas Meredith, as published in his address, bound with the minutes of the first session of the Baptist State Convention, there were in this State in 1830, one hundred and three years after the organization of the first Baptist church in the State, 14 Associations, 272 churches and 15,360 members.

Now in 1842, only twelve years after the organization of the Baptist State Convention, there were in the State, according to the Minutes of the Convention, 33 Associations, 600 churches, 314 ministers, and 31,923 members.

For more than thirty years our fathers were feeling about for a general organization like the Convention through which they might combine and direct their mission and educational work. Their efforts were crowned with a glorious success. For in twelve years after the Convention was organized they had established and partly endowed Wake Forest College, established and widely circulated the BIBLICAL RECORDER, and had so successfully conducted their mission work as to have made a larger gain in the number of Associations, churches, preachers and members than had been gained in the one hundred and three years from that date back to the organization of their first church by Paul Parmer in 1727.

For almost eighteen hundred years the churches had no general organizations through which to combine and direct their effort at home or abroad to give the gospel to the heathen nations; and hence up to the dawn of Carey's work the Scriptures had not gone into more than twenty languages, and almost nothing, really, had been done to arouse the churchs or to give the gospel to the heathen. In the last one hundred years, through these general organizations, more has been done to give the Bible and the living ministry to the heathen world than had been done in the fifteen hundred years before it

Notwithstanding all this, the Crawford-Bostick Herring plans would, if carried out, destroy all general organized work, and in this respect put the churches in the worst form of practical "hardshellism."

3. Then, if the Crawford-Bostick-Herring plans, in opposition to all general organizations to give the gospel to the heathen are the scriptural and wise things in Foreign Missions the same must be true with State Missions, orphanage work, educational work at Wake Forest, Murfreesboro and Louisville, Ky. Their positions are true or they are untrue. If true, they will apply, must apply, to all departments of our work. No one has ever been able to see how it would be possible, under existing circumstances, for the denomination, on the Crawford-Bostick Herring plans, to publish and distribute the Scriptures, the Sunday school literature, and establish and manage the colleges and seminaries, orphanages, and the mission work at home and abroad.

These brethren are philosophers after the order of philosophers before the days of Bacon. It was the custom of that day for the philosophers to form their theories and then go manfully to work to so explain all things so as to bring out harmony and beauty. For centuries they kept the world in confusion. When Bacon came to the front he taught these men not to form their theories first, but to know the facts in nature first, and then construct their plans upon the facts. The facts are against these plans. The judgment of almost all the missionaries are against these plans. Dr. Yates, notwithstanding Bro. Bostick's statements, said of these plans in a letter June 1st, 1886: "I have discussed these peculiar views with him (Dr. Crawford) more than once, and rejected them as absurd for Central China missions."

These views which Dr. Yates rejected as absurd are the same as advocated now by brethren Bostick and Herring.

PERSONALS AND OTHER ITEMS.

. . . Read carefully the article by Bro. Bell in this issue.

. . . . We regret to hear that Rev. C. J. Woodson is unwell.

. . . . Rev. C. A. Woodson of Durham has returned from a two week's trip to Virginia.

. . . . This is the year to be humble, prayerful, hopeful and faithful in the Master's work.

. . . . Rev. Thomas Dixon, Jr., and wife will spend their entire vacation at Nag's Head.

. . . . We are under many obligations to Bro. J. F. Tuttle for a nice club of subscribers.

. . . . Rev. H. W. Norris called to see us while in the city attending the Teachers' Institute last week.

. . . . The Pilot Mountain Association will meet with Shiloh church at Pinacle Station, on Thursday, August 4th.

. . . . Mr. W. J. Simons, a son-in-law of the late Dr. Wingate, and merchant, died at Wake Forest on Monday, July 18th.

. . . . Dr. William Royall of Wake Forest returned from Saratoga last week, where he attended the National Teachers' Convention.

. . . . We are glad to report Rev. Dr. W. A. Nelson as improving. He hopes to return to Aiken, S. C., the 25th of September.

. . . . Rev. C. A. G. Thomas of Elizabeth City writes that he is enjoying a very quiet and delightful rest. Bro. Thomas preached at Greensboro on Sunday, the 10th inst. He returned to his pastorate last week.

. . . . We call attention to the Resolutions of the Centennial Committee of the Southern Baptist Convention furnished in this issue.

. . . . Revs. W. E. Crocker and C. F. Hopper began a protracted meeting at Mt. Gilead, Sampson county, on Friday, the 15th inst.

. . . . Rev. J. L. White is meeting with great success at Asheville. He has large congregations, and is baptizing every Sunday night.

. . . . Rev. N. P. Stallings of Colnjock has been granted a vacation. Bro. Stallings attended the Grand Encampment of Odd Fellows last week.

. . . . Rev. O. L. Stringfield passed through Raleigh on the morning of the 15th on his way to assist Rev. J. W. Rose of Pine Level in a protracted meeting.

. . . . Rev. H. C. Moore resigned the church at Morehead City on the 10th inst., to take effect Sept. 1st, when Bro. Moore will enter the Seminary in Louisville.

. . . . A brother writes us that the church at Warsaw is having a good meeting just now, and that "Bro. Jenkens is greatly loved by all the people of Warsaw."

. . . . The church at Alma, near Maxton, has decided to move its membership to Maxton. With this arrangement Maxton will have services twice each Sunday.

. . . . It was an "Honorary Fellowship" in English in the University of Chicago to which Rev. C. G. Wells was appointed, and not a "scholarship," as we stated last week.

. . . . Rev. J. W. Millard was at Berea church last Sunday and took part in the ordination of Rev. T. M. Leary. Bro. Millard aided Bro. Leary in a meeting at that place last week.

. . . . The Harrisonian, published by the Literary Society of the Southwest Virginia Institute, is on our table. This magazine is indeed a credit to the girl editors and their noble institution as well.

. . . . Let every pastor preach a sermon soon from 1 Thes. 4: 11, 12—"Study to be quiet * * do your own business * * work with your own hands * * walk honestly * * that ye may have lack of nothing."

. . . . At the International Missionary Union held at Clifton Springs, New York, in June last, there were present 103 returned missionaries, representing thirteen denominations, and the mission fields in sixteen foreign countries.

. . . . Rev. J. N. Booth of Edgefield, S. C., is spending a month in North Carolina, and made us a pleasant call on the 14th. Bro. Booth will aid brethren Stringfield and Wilson in protracted meetings during his stay in this State.

. . . . Rev. J. B. Boone, Financial Secretary of the Female University, has been granted a leave of absence from the duties of his office for the month of August. Bro. Boone intends spending his vacation in the western part of the State.

. . . . Rev. T. M. Duncan and Rev. Asa Brown met at Obids, Ashe county, on May 16th, 1892, and organized a Baptist church of seven members. We hope that by the help of the Lord this will make a strong church. It is in charge of Rev. T. M. Duncan.

. . . . In the death of Hon. Reuben McBrayer, not only Shelby and Asheville, but the entire State sustains a loss that will long be felt. A patriot, a christian gentleman, a model citizen has been called away and the State can ill spare such a man.—Shelby Review.

. . . . Rev. A. D. Hunter of Greenville has turned his field over to Bro. R. D. Carroll for the summer. Bro. Hunter will be at Cary for a while. If any of the churches need a supply, we would advise them to call on Brother Hunter, as he is a first-class preacher.

. . . . We are pleased to learn that Rev. T. M. Duncan is moving on with his work at the mission station known as the "Wilderness." His church is composed of twenty-two members, and they have the reputation of being good workers. This church has been lately named "New River."

. . . . Mrs. Edgar Mallary, daughter of Dr. W. A. Nelson, died at Shelby, N. C., last Saturday. She had come from her home in Georgia to attend her sick father, and a few days after her arrival was stricken with typhoid fever, from which she died. Our sympathies are extended to the bereaved.

. . . . Three Trustees and one Professor of Wake Forest College have died since the Commencement in June. Of the Trustees, Col. L. L. Polk died in Washington City, Hon. Reuben McBrayer died at Shelby, and Rev. R. R. Savage died in Hertford county. Prof. E. G. Beckwith died at the College.

. . . . "Seaside Sermons," a series of seven sermons by Rev. H. C. Moore of Morehead, is on our table. Bro. Moore compiled this pamphlet with the hope that enough money might be realized from its sale to enable him to attend the Seminary. It will be sent to any address prepaid at twenty-five cents per copy.

. . . . Mr. Silas Cobb's gift of $150,000 to Chicago University led Mr. Martin A. Ryerson to cable from Paris, "I will give $150,000 more." Mrs. Elizabeth G. Kelly and Mrs. Nancy S. Foster have each given $50,000 for buildings for the women's department.—The Watchman. The University now has five millions of dollars.

. . . . We have space only for the announcement of the following fifth Sunday meetings, and will give programs in next issue: Yeopim Union, at Salem church, July 30; Mecklenburg and Cabarrus Union, at Olivet church, July 29; Annual S. S. Convention of the South Fork Association, at Mt. Ruhama church, July 30; Nash and Franklin Union at Hickory church, Nash county, July 30; Atlantic Union at Trenton, July 29; and Eastern Union of Raleigh Association at Johnston Antioch, July 29.

....At the first session of the Baptist State Convention, there were present fourteen delegates representing seven counties; the second session there were forty five delegates present representing seventeen counties; and at the third session there were present eighty eight delegates representing thirty counties.

....Rev. G. P. Bostick resigned Jan. 12th, 1892, but drew on our Foreign Mission Board for his salary up to June 1st, and in addition to his salary, he drew on the Board for $600 "to defray our expenses to our homes." This is one reason the Board, and the brethren who knew this fact, thought that he was coming home.

....Rev. G. P. Bostick, in an article in another column of this paper, says Dr. T. P. Crawford was in this country in 1889 and 1890. This is a mistake. Dr. Crawford was here in the winter of 1885 and '86. He attended the Southern Baptist Convention (minutes before us) in 1886, and then the files of the RECORDER show that he was in Raleigh in February, 1886.

...."Next Sunday will be one year since Mr. Booth was called to the pastorate of the Baptist church at this place, and he hopes to see every member of his congregation present on that day. Mr. and Mrs. Booth will leave after next Sunday to spend a vacation near Raleigh, N. C., their old home. We hope they will have a most pleasant summer outing of it."—Baptist Courier.

....Rev. I. S. Boyles writes from Rockingham: "My field of labor in Richmond Association is very promising. I baptized eighteen here at Roberdel church a short while ago, and will baptize six more into the same church next Sunday evening. Some of these candidates come from Methodist and Presbyterian homes, clearly indicating that the Baptists command respect in this vicinity. I rejoice and take courage."

....Rev. John J. Nouri, D. D., a priest of the Greek church, who landed at San Francisco a few days ago from the steamer China, in the course of a voyage around the world, reports that he, in company with others, discovered on April 25th last, on one of the great domes of Mount Ararat, the genuine Noah's ark. It is a great vessel—ship—over 900 feet long and 100 feet high. Most of it is under snow about fifty feet. It is on the top of this great mountain 18,000 feet high, where, perhaps, no man, for four thousand years, has ever gone.

Letter from Rev. A. D. Hunter.

BROTHER POTEAT'S VIEW ENDORSED.

Dear Recorder:—I say amen to what Bro. E. M. Poteat said in the RECORDER of last week. I believe in being careful about changes. At the same time there is often lost power by running in ruts. We sometimes change methods, &c., in our home work; may it not be as needful abroad? The opinions of such men as Geo. P. Bostick and David W. Herring are, to say the least of them, worthy of a serious consideration. These are men who know the work in China, and whose hearts are thoroughly in the Lord's work.

I have not yet met Bro. Herring since his return. I knew him well before he went to China. I loved him. So far as I have yet understood matters, I am in favor of his working in China as he thinks best. If he feels he should go to the interior, then I want him to go. He has travelled a good deal in the interior and knows more of its needs and prospects than we do, or even the Foreign Mission Board. I believe Bro. Herring is in advance of most of us in this matter.

WHITE HALL CHURCH.

It was my pleasure recently to be at Seven Springs a few days. While there I conducted services for our people at White Hall which is close by.

Bro. Finch and a few members have been working to build a meeting-house at this place. With some more help they hope to complete it by the end of this month. It has been a worthy effort, and those who have helped I am sure will be glad of the work in the future. For three services the Presbyterians kindly gave us the use of their house. Bro. Taylor of Warrenton is to aid Bro. Finch in a meeting at this place soon. May the present seven become many sevens.

BRO. STOUGH AT KINSTON.

On my way home I met Bro. Stough who is now pastor of our church at Kinston for the first time. He was just beginning a meeting. I was glad to meet with his people in one service. I am impressed that Bro. Stough is the right man in the right place. I think things are brightening up in Kinston.

Back to my post again, having been called away for two weeks on account of a sick family.

ANTIOCH CHURCH.

I was with Antioch church last Saturday night and Sunday morning. Twenty-two have joined the little band in the last twelve months. It is a good and true church and our Lord is blessing it.

REV. EXUM G. BECKWITH.

I have been made sad over the death of this good and noble brother. He was in every way a true man.

I was with him about one hour on Thursday of Commencement at his own home. I thought he would soon be out. So did he at that time. Surely God is beyond us in his providences. How mysterious! Reared in a few miles of each other, and becoming members of Holly Spring church, I knew him well in early life and well since.

Blessed be thy rest, my dear brother! Gone to meet thy loved ones and to be with our Saviour forever! A. D. HUNTER.

Greenville, July 19, 1892.

The sum of $155.77 has been paid to the B. M. Relief Board during second quarter, 1892. Detail receipts given next week.

The Centennial Chapel Card Plan

A good plan is essential to success in any undertaking; and particularly in such an one as that proposed by the Centennial Committee of the Southern Baptist Convention to aid in raising the $250,000 for missions. To be effective, the plan for this work must be simple, easily understood and practical. Such is the Chapel Card Plan. Let me explain: This plan embraces two simple cards with a picture of a chapel on them, having a red foundation representing fifty squares, or bricks. These cards are to be distributed to all that will take them, to be filled up. Each square, or brick, represents ten cents, i. e., when you give ten cents, or solicit ten cents from any one, you run a pin through one of the squares, and when you have given fifty ten cents, or gotten others to give them, and have punched fifty squares—one square for each ten cents—your card is filled. You then return this card—thus filled—with the five dollars collected, to the Superintendent of the Sunday school, or the President of the Missionary Society, and you will receive a "Certificate" upon which is an excellent engraving of William Carey. This you may keep as a memorial of the Missionary Centennial. There are two cards because one is for Foreign Missions and the other is for Home Missions. You can take either card, or both, and receive a Certificate for as many cards as you will fill out.

This Card Plan seems to me to be one of the simplest and most practical of plans that I have ever seen. I don't see how it can be improved. It is adapted to all, old and young, rich and poor; to the family, the Mission Band, the Mission Society, the Sunday-School, and to the church. To the rich and to the poor—those who are able can fill out a card, or even a hundred of the cards for themselves. Those who are less able can fill out one card, or even a part of a card, and then ask their friends for the other dimes until the fifty are secured, returning the card with the five dollars and receiving a Certificate. Families may take a card for each member of the family and together fill them up, the parents helping the children. Missionary Bands and Circles may become soliciting agents, by means of these cards, for the Centennial fund, and fill out as many as they can, receiving in exchange for the funds they raise, Certificates as receipts, and as mementos of this first Centennial of Modern Missions. So with Sunday school scholars, teachers and classes. Each one can do individually what he or she can to fill a card and then solicit the balance. Classes as classes may fill up a card and thus secure a Certificate for their class, as a class. Teachers can fill out a card and receive the Certificate for the class, or the scholars can fill out a card for their teacher and present the teacher with a certificate.

The ways of filling up these cards are very, very many. But if we do the best we can with this Chapel Card plan, pastors must be interested in urging it in sermons and addresses, and encouraging as many of their people as can to take cards to fill them up. Much depends upon the superintendent in keeping the Chapel Cards before the school, in explaining and urging it, and encouraging those who are using them. Teachers can help the pupils in a score of ways. Take an interest in this work of their scholars, and stimulate them on by timely encouragement and cheery counsels. Parents can help their children by giving them aid and helpful advice.

I am satisfied that if this Chapel Card plan is pushed as it may be, and ought to be, we shall be amazed and surprised at the magnificent result that will crown this work for the Centennial Fund. The success of the plan everywhere that it has been fairly tried, has been cheering and surprising. If you are not using it, begin at once. Send for Cards and Certificates to the Maryland Baptist Mission Rooms, No. 10 E. Fayette St., Baltimore, Md., and you will promptly receive the cards and all the explanations you need to have. They ought to be used in every family, Mission Band, Circle and Society, Young People's Society and Sunday-school; in every Baptist church of the South. Scatter these cards among our young people and the women of all our churches. Then push the work of filling them up and of gathering in the funds. Remember every card that is filled means five dollars for missions. Let us circulate and fill up at least 100,000! That will be $500,000 for the saving of the lost and the glory of God. Let us all work and all work together.

F. M. ELLIS,
For Centennial Committee S. B. C.

The Deaconate.

Dear Bro. Bailey:—An important Cabinet meeting had been called, by the President, to discuss a very grave matter of State. While awaiting the incoming of the President, the various members engaged in the consideration of the vital question, which had brought them together. Daniel Webster, the Premier, was addressing himself, concernedly and with massive dignity, to the Secretary of the Navy. Right in the midst of the argument, and while a pause was made, before beginning a different presentation, the Hon. Secretary who, though a profound and brilliant statesman, was too frequently given to levity and untimely jocoseness, remarked the inaptness of brass buttons on Mr. Webster's waistcoat. With impatient severity Mr. Webster eyed the offending Secretary, and then scorched him with the fiery exclamation: You incorrigible trifler!

Small things may be made modestly apparent by the use of great ones!

Permit me to commend the above incident to the careful meditation of Bro. A. E. Owen.

The "brass" it requires to coin and use, now-a-days, a seemingly very simple and expressive word, might be accurately estimated by the quantity contained in a row of vest buttons—especially if one or two dictionaries were at hand as aiders and abettors. CONSERVATIVE.

Two Deaths

Elizabeth City has been greatly shocked in the death of T. S. White. He was taken sick Saturday morning, June 25th, and died Tuesday the 28th. His funeral was preached in the Elizabeth City Baptist church by the pastor and his remains taken to Hertford for burial. "Trim" White was one of the most popular men in his town. He had his faults, but these to a great extent were covered by as many noble traits as one can find in any person. He was one of the most devoted husbands and fathers I have ever known. In every relation of home life he was thoughtful and faithful. The devotion to wife and children grew stronger with every passing hour. As a citizen, he was full of enthusiasm in every public interest, and gave life to every enterprise in which he enlisted. As a member of the church, he was attentive and liberal, and entered heartily into every effort to advance the interests of his Saviour. We shall greatly miss him in the work of the church. To his pastor he was a friend. He talked his pastor up. He earnestly defended his pastor against criticisms and faultfinding. I have never known a man to talk up his pastor and church more than he. Would to God that every christian possessed this element of character. He was one of the most hospitable men I have ever known. I could always count on him for entertainment of brethren when the occasion demanded it. I have broken bread at his table on special invitation more than in all the homes of Elizabeth City. Whenever he had special company, he sent for his pastor, and whenever he had an extra good dinner he asked his pastor to enjoy it. He was kind and liberal to his fellowman in distress. I have never known him to refuse an appeal for help. He was always ready to help the suffering. I never knew him to speak evil of his fellowman. He always had a good word for every one. No man will be missed more than T. S. White. I think he was left an orphan, and never had the advantages of on education, yet he became one of the most useful citizens. Had he early advantages, he might have taken a place among the prominent men of his State. May God's rich grace sustain the bereaved friends.

On the first of July Mrs. Amelia Love, mother of Rev. J. F. Love, quietly passed into "Our Father's House." In the absence of the pastor, the funeral was preached by Dr. R. R. Overby in the Elizabeth City Baptist church on Sunday, July 3d. Sister Love had been sick a long time. About the first of June her children were summoned to her bedside, and there with the pastor they bowed in prayer as was thought for the last time. But there was a change for the better, and she lingered a few weeks longer Her death was triumphant and she is now at rest. Sister Love was a woman of noble character, and has raised some noble boys, one of whom is a preacher, another is a deacon, and others consistent christians. Her last concern was for those of her children out of Christ. While not able to engage actively in church work, yet she was a great helper to pastor and church. Though detained at home a great deal by sickness, whenever she heard the church bell ring, her prayers from the home would blend with those from the church and ascend to the throne. Her prayers were a source of strength to pastor and church. She loved her pastor and church, and like Bro. White, talked them up. During the building of the new church, the pastor could visit but little. Sister Love did not censure or criticise, but kindly made excuses for him and encouraged him in his work. Her greatest work was done in the quiet of home life, and in doing that work for God's glory, she did more than many who figure in prominent places. Mothers, true mothers, are the great need of the world. Sister Love was a true and faithful mother, a pure and noble wife, and her aged husband and her children rise up and call her "blessed." She will be greatly missed by her children, but the presence and power of her influence will abide with them.

Elizabeth City Baptist church is sadly bereaved in the loss of Bro. White and Sister Love, but the work is the Lord's, and though he calls the workers home, yet we believe he will fill the vacant places with others who will carry on the work to the glory of his name. CHAS. A. G. THOMAS.

Coleraine Church Dedicated.

The church at Coleraine was dedicated on the third Sunday in June. The sermon was preached by Elder C. W. Scarboro. His subject was "The Mission of the Church." Bro. Scarboro is one of our best men, and always preaches the truth as it is in Christ. After the sermon a collection was taken which amounted to $87.13, which paid off all the indebtedness of the church.

After a short recess, Elder T. G. Wood preached an interesting sermon; especially that part of it wherein he charged the deacons as to their duties. Among these duties, he particularly charged that they should keep the dogs out of the house of the Lord. After the sermon, brethren Dr. W. B. Watford, J. W. Outlaw, D. Evans, and — Novel were each set apart to the office of deacon. Elder B. B. Williams led in the ordaining prayer. S. F. BRISTOW.

Wake Forest Board of Trustees.

There will be a meeting of the Board of Trustees of Wake Forest College in the Baptist Mission Rooms at Raleigh, on Tuesday, July 26th, 1892, at 10 a. m., for the purpose of electing an Assistant Professor of Mathematics and of attending to some other matters of importance.

R. H. MARSH, President,
R. H. ROYALL, Secretary.

Brother and Sister J. O. Clive's babe Louise Clive died in Mount Airy on June 16th, 1892, aged twelve months and sixteen days. We sympathize with the bereaved.

Elder R. R. Savage Dead.

Through our tears we have looked on the grave of one who lived among us, was a member with us till he went up higher, and was for a score of years our pastor. We feel that few churches have had such a helper as was our Brother Savage.

His life helped us. He pointed us to heaven and led the way. Pure in conversation, just in all his dealings, bearing about with him a sense of the dignity attaching itself to a christian, his life took hold upon us, lifted us higher, and made us crave to know more of his Lord. We saw him in the vigor and hopefulness of life, we saw him during seven years of feebleness of body, when we thought and he thought that he was liable to die at any moment, and in health and in sickness we saw him the same brave, trustful, uncompromising servant of God. He, like his Master, could love those who fought the right, and fought him as the champion of right. We thank God for such a life.

We point with pride to his life work. His was not dead faith, but such faith as produced works. His preaching was of a high order—clear, biblical, forcible. His first pastorate was in Virginia, but many churches in the West Chowan Association were blessed by his labors and elevated by his life.

For about twenty five years he was actively engaged as preacher and pastor, and with remarkable wisdom he guided and developed the charges committed to him. No one would have guessed that he desired to lead, and yet, because of his superior wisdom, his brethren would put him in the front, and time has shown what a wise leader he was. Bro. Savage carried the work of our Convention on his heart. Neither our mission work, Wake Forest, nor Chowan Baptist Female Institute ever had a more loyal friend, nor a more faithful worker.

One of the beautiful traits of our Brother Savage was his thoughtful, fatherly concern for others. He thought and planned for those about him as if they had been his special charge. Many of his neighbors could tell how in temporal and in spiritual affairs he has been to them as a father. When continued feebleness drove him from the pulpit and pastorate, how bravely did he try, to the very last, to do what he could. How helpful he was to his church in all its plans and works, how he carried his pastor on his heart, and gave good counsel, encouraged, sustained!

Bro. Savage was in his sixtieth year. He died suddenly at his home, Como, Hertford county, N. C., July 7th, 1892. A widow and five children are on the way to him. One of his sons, W. V. Savage, preaches the gospel his father loved.

Through us Buckhorn church makes this attempt to express her appreciation of the life and character of our departed brother, and to express her sympathy with his sorrowing loved ones. We believe Bro. Savage was prepared to die, and that he has gone before us to be with Christ. His chair is vacant, but the memory of him, like sweet music, fills our souls and stimulates to better things.

Southern Union of Eastern Association.

This body met with Salem church, Onslow county, on Friday before the fifth Sabbath in May, 1892. Rev. F. T. Wooten preached the introductory sermon.

Be it remembered that Salem church is our missionary field, and we feel profoundly grateful to Almighty God that deep spirituality characterized the entire session. Also a deep interest was manifested in the discussion of queries, which were animating, and we trust will result in much good.

At the request of Salem church, a presbytery consisting of Revs. S. D. Swaim, M. C. Walton, F. T. Wooten, J. T. Jenkins, D. F. Aman and Benjamin Ward, was appointed to ordain Bro. J. H. Dobson. The charge was delivered by Rev. S. D. Swaim. First, heed to self; second, heed to doctrines; third, heed to hearers. The Bible was presented by Rev. M. C. Walton. Prayer by Rev. F. T. Wooten. Welcome, by Rev. J. T. Jenkins, based upon 1 Tim., 4th chapter.

The following contributions were made: Orphanage, $8.65; State Missions, 52c.; ceiling Salem church, 14.60; literature for Salem Sunday school, 1.51; Total, $20.28.

There were six services held, three baptisms, sacrament administered at Sister C. A. Williams' house near Snead's Ferry, where the baptizing took place at the request and for the benefit of her aged mother, Sister Eliza Pollock.

OUR NEXT SESSION

will be held with Long Creek church, Pender county, commencing on Friday before the fifth Sunday in July, 1892.

Rev. J. T. Jenkins to preach the introductory sermon at 11 o'clock a. m.

The following subjects are for discussion:

1. Why does preaching have so little effect upon sinners? Speakers—Rev. J. T. Jenkins and Bro. J. D. Larkins.

2. Have we reason to be encouraged in our efforts to evangelize the heathen? Speakers—Rev. Dr. T. H. Pritchard and Bro. Jno. G. Parker.

3. Missions as dependent on pastors and churches. Speakers—Rev. R. E. Poole and Bro. J. T. Bland.

4. Missions and the Bible. Speakers—Revs. S. D. Swaim and M. C. Walton.

SECRETARY.

Now that the season is here when farmers are having their wool made into winter goods, let us again remind you of the fact that you can't do better than to send your wool to the Elkin Woolen Mills, whose advertisement appears elsewhere in this paper. We know these gentlemen to be thoroughly reliable, and they make beautiful goods.

Some Things in Richmond.

The weather is warm, see enough. But maybe the RECORDER will not be displeased with a few lines about "Some things in Richmond."

The position which you take in regard to the new methods of prosecuting Foreign Missions, advocated by brethren Herring and Bostick, gives, I think, satisfaction to all the brethren here. There can be no doubt, it would seem, in the mind of any one who has made a careful study of the matter, that the Foreign Mission Board is pursuing exactly the right course in its management of our work in foreign lands. The Board's management of the work has been complained of, as I understand, upon the ground of its allowing too little liberty to the workers on the fields. This complaint is most unjust to the Board. If the Board has erred in any way, it would seem to be in respect of having given its men more liberty than they have at all times used wisely. So far as this scribe can see, the Baptists of this city, and of the whole State of Virginia, are loyal to the Foreign Mission Board; and they are right glad to be assured by the RECORDER that their brethren in the "Old North State" mean to stand squarely to the front, and gloriously help forward the work of enlargement during this Centennial Year.

The outlook for work in this city was never more hopeful than it is now. Grace Street church is soon to have the best appointed, and the best adapted, and the best furnished house of worship in the whole South. It would be hard to praise Dr. Hatcher and his church too extravagantly for this splendid achievement in church building.

Grove Avenue is soon to take up with a better heart and more enthusiasm the work of occupying its splendid field of usefulness under the leadership of its new pastor, Dr. Hiden. If this church shall fail to do great things in the future, it will not be for want of a magnificent field. There can be no finer situation for church work found in the city than that of the Grove Avenue church. Dr. Hiden should be a happy man, and Grove Avenue should be a happy church.

Clay Street church has gone into sables for Clopton; and it would be strange indeed if it had been otherwise. Fifteen years of loving, wise, patient preaching and pastoral work has endeared Cloptón to the members of his church and congregation, as few men have been endeared to their people. But the Clay Street brethren do not mourn "as those which have no hope." They know that nothing but good can come to one who is so faithful and devoted; and they are determined to use the inspiration they have been gathering from his ministry during all these years in building them a new house of worship in a new and better location.

The new churches, Randolph Street and Barton Heights, are forging forward with the strides of young giants, and great things are expected in the near future in connection with them. Bro. Jolly of Kentucky comes to Randolph Street in September, and Dr. R. H. Pitt, late the successful and beloved pastor of the Venable Street church, goes to Barton Heights in October.

The "Tar Heel" brother who reigns at Leigh Street is having things very much his own way; and is leading his people most nobly and most wisely. North Carolina may righteously exact from Virginia many good things in exchange for W. L. Wright.

But the one thing that seems to me to promise most for the Baptists of Richmond and the South, is the management of the Richmond Female Institute. Dr. James Nelson is certainly a clear case of the right man in the right place. The Institute buildings are now undergoing extensive and thorough repairs to accommodate the large number of young ladies who are expected to come from all quarters the ensuing session, and the Baptists of Richmond are co operating with Dr. Nelson in a determination to make the Institute the first school for women in the South. Several of the distinguished Professors in Richmond College will assist in the future in the instruction of the Institute's classes, and no pains or money will be spared in the effort, not only to maintain the high character the school has already won, but to make it more and more able to do the work for the education of women in the South which our section has needed so long. Dr. Nelson has the right idea of female education, and no one who entrusts a daughter to him needs to fear that thoroughness of cultivation will be sacrificed to the attainment of a few showy accomplishments. He understands that the ornamental elements of a woman's education are rationally made to set off and beautify real, substantial culture, and he will manage the Institute so as to secure both thoroughness and elegance of cultivation in the young ladies entrusted to him.

Those of us who are appointed for work in this great city are expecting great things from the Richmond Female Institute, and our great interest in its work must be my apology for writing so much about it.

I lovingly greet all with whom I labored in North Carolina in the past.

HAYLEY CARR.

The Bostick Tract Reviewed.

Our North China Mission has, of late, been prolific of letters and tracts written against the interests of the Board, from whose treasury some of the writers have been and are drawing their salaries.

The latest we have received from there is a tract entitled "Mission Facts and Figures," by G. P. Bostick. On the title page, just below the above title, are these words, "Peruse! Ponder! Pray! Perform!" Now we propose to examine as well.

In the beginning of his tract Bro. Bostick indulges in some figures. It is often said that figures do not lie, and we believe that is true. But it is equally true that figures may be so used as to make very false impressions on the minds of readers. Bro. Bostick so uses the figures of the Board's report for 1890-'91 as to seem to warrant him in asserting, as he does, that the Board, in the prosecution of the work entrusted to it, spent "fifty nine per cent. of all money raised for foreign missions by Southern Baptists" "otherwise than in sending out and sustaining missionaries on the field."

In order to arrive at his conclusion Bro. Bostick uses these figures to suit himself. He says that of the whole amount reported as raised, "$16,787.64, or about fifteen per cent. of the whole was used for home expenses." But he does not give his readers any idea as to the various items covered by that term "home expenses,"—a thing which common controversial honesty should have suggested his doing when he was using the figures for an assault on the Board's work. He did not tell how much of that was expended by State Boards in the collection of funds for our Board, which expenses came to our treasurer only in the form of receipts, as vouchers, and not in cash. He did not tell how much was expended in printing the information about the work, that the people might know about it. He just sweeps all into a lump and says here is fifteen per cent. used by the Board in home expenses, leaving his readers to imagine what they please.

Then he goes on to show how many missionaries were in the field and how much these ought to have cost, and then striking a balance between what the work did cost and what he says it ought to have cost, concludes that "forty four per cent. of the entire amount sent to the various missions is in excess of the necessities of the missionaries." Here again he uses figures to suit himself. He says "there were that year, in all fields, seventy two men and women receiving support through them (the Board.) There were also a few resting at home at that time, but the Board have no regulations by which I can know how much is spent upon such. Some of them have been at home for several years, and I suppose make their own support. Among the seventy-two reckon five, who came to China in the latter half of the year, as on the field the whole year, while I do not count two who left Brazil in the early half of the year. So the seventy-two are the only ones who can be counted as certain." So he fixes up his figures on missionaries, counting in some, counting out others, ignorant whether or not any in this country were being aided by the Board as they sought health for their return, and ignoring altogether the very heavy expenses of missionaries to and from their fields of labor—an omission we are particularly surprised that Bro. Bostick should have made, for our Board has had more fault found with it about not furnishing enough money for outgoing missionaries by the very brethren who are criticising the Board in the North China Mission than by all our other missionaries put together.

Next, Bro. Bostick, undeterred by the fact that he knows nothing about the condition of things on other fields than his own, and has had only a very short period of observation on that, calmly decides to allow "$700 to cover all living and working expenses for each worker in China, $800 for each one in Japan, Africa, Brazil and Mexico, and $1,000 in Italy." Multiplying the number of missionaries in each field by what he sees fit to allow to them, he arrives at the conclusion that only $55,100 was needed to support all our missions. According to this reckoning, the outfits and travelling expenses of the missionaries, we suppose, are to be provided by the ravens and the railroad and steamboat companies, and the children of the missionaries are to be put in orphan asylums.

But we get at the animus of the whole business when we come to see what Bro. Bostick objects to in our expenditures. He says that we do not pay our missionaries such salaries as to allow them to live luxuriously. "Where then does the $48,000 excess go?" An excess, we say by way of parenthesis, a large part of which lies only in Bro. Bostick's figures, not in fact. He replies, "much of it goes to run schools, buy lands and build school-houses and chapels for the natives, to hire native men and women to do religious work," &c. Now it is all plain. Bro. Bostick has imbibed Dr. Crawford's views of mission work, which have been before the Board and before the brethren ever since Dr. Crawford's tour through this country in 1886, and all this is to prove that we ought not to help native christians to rise above their terrible surroundings, but simply preach to them, and when they believe, turn them loose to struggle unaided and alone against the fearful odds which surround them. It is the self-support idea run mad. And along with this, Bro. Bostick in this tract is urging the view presented by Dr. Crawford in his tract "Churches to the Front," noticed in a previous issue of the Journal, viz: that we should have no boards at all, but individual churches or groups of churches should support their own missionaries without the intervention of boards.

But we must desist. We notice only one other point in Bro. Bostick's tract, which point has been made by himself, Dr. Crawford, and every one who tries to show that our Board's work is carried on on wrong principles, in that native helpers are employed in some missions.

He quotes Dr. Yates. He says: "The sainted M. T. Yates, who needs no introduction to Southern Baptists, writing at length on this special evil, about four or five years before his death, calls it 'the bane, yea, the dry rot, of modern missions,' and in the same connection says: 'Therefore native agency in mission work, as it is now generally employed in missions in China, is not calculated to promote the best interest of evangelization among the Chinese.'" And Bro. Bostick prints Dr. Yates' article in connection with his own views. We presume that Bro. Bostick is ignorant of the fact that Dr. Yates, protested against such use being made of his paper, when in 1886, Dr. Crawford quoted it as supporting his peculiar views. Certainly, if Bro. Bostick had known this, he would not so have used the paper. But let us look at the history of this matter to prove our assertion that Dr. Yates repudiated such use of his utterances. In the Foreign Mission Journal of April, 1886, the editor, Prof. H. H. Harris, referring to Dr. Crawford's plan, submitted by him to the Board, says: "He (Dr. C.) refers for support to Dr. Carpenter's book on 'Self-support in Bassein,' and to a paper by Dr. Yates on 'Native Agency.' * * * * * Dr. Yates presented before a Conference of Protestant missionaries at Shanghai, some years ago, a pungent and able protest against the employment of unconsecrated men, and against the 'free use of money in the employment of native assistants, so as to make it, rather than the gospel, the attracting power.' This paper has been reprinted at Dr. Crawford's request, as being 'in the line of his lectures and plans.' We respectfully submit that he had no right to make such use of it, certainly none without the approval of its author. We quote a sentence to show the position Dr. Yates really occupied. 'What then?' he asks, 'dispense with native agents altogether?' He answers in italics, 'By no means,' and proceeds to discuss the method of testing their consecration and the best plan for assisting those who stand the test." But some one may say, that is Dr. Harris' view; what did Dr. Yates say about it? Bro. Bostick says, "These were his views then, and it is generally known that he became even more disgusted with the whole system as he neared the close of life. For his views in full on this subject, see the BIBLICAL RECORDER of February 24, 1886." So he did, with the employment of unconsecrated men. But that he was very far from sympathizing with the views of Dr. Crawford, as then put forth, or as now put forth by Bro. Bostick, is clearly shown by the following extract of a letter written by him "June 1st, 1886," and printed in the Journal of August, 1886. He says: "Since I have seen Dr. Crawford's appeal to the Convention, I have been much concerned about the effect of the re-publication of my paper to be used in connection with Dr. C's rules, under article 5. I have discussed these peculiar views with him more than once, and rejected them as absurd for Central China missions. I am very anxious to hear from the Convention. Dr. C. had no authority to quote me as supporting his views. There are evils to be abated, in which we agree, but he has not made them prominent."

We trust that the brethren who have adopted and advocate Dr. Crawford's views will henceforth cease to quote Dr. Yates as their advocate. After the statement above, from Dr. Yates himself, it will not be honest.

And the letter of Mrs. Yates, published in this paper of June 22d, will throw still further light on this question. We hope it will be read and pondered.

I have used the Pokine Remedy (prepared by W. T. Cheatham, Jr.) in case of Sciatica with the result of positive relief in a few hours, and believe if used as directed is will effect a permanent cure.
J. L. H. MISSILLIER.

MARCH 6, 1891.

For the benefit of the public, I unhesitatingly recommend Cheatham's wonderful remedy, "Pokine," to all sufferers of rheumatism. It has produced marvelous results in my case. I was a sufferer of the malady for five years, and after taking a few bottles was entirely cured.
Very respectfully,

MR. W. T. CHEATHAM:
Dear Sir—My wife was down in bed with rheumatism, and the Pokine I bought of you gave her relief after taking four doses. She has not been troubled since. It is the best medicine she ever took for rheumatism. Respectfully,
ZACK DAVIS.

MR W. T. CHEATHAM, JR.:
Dear Sir—I have been afflicted with rheumatism time and again, for the past thirteen years. I have received more relief from Pokine than any medicine I ever took, and therefore take great pleasure in recommending it to all sufferers of rheumatism. Very respectfully,
F. G. MITCHELL.

JANUARY 19, 1891.
W. T. CHEATHAM, JR.:
Dear Sir—I desire to say that in January last I was down with rheumatism; my suffering was great, and I was completely prostrated. One bottle of your Pokine completely relieved me, and I have not had any rheumatism since. My son also was relieved of rheumatism by Pokine.
Yours truly,

...ity of Division in Our Denominational Life.

...Romanism is a great hierarchy with human ...dship and doctrinal corruption. Church ...story traces the centralizing germ to its ...itage in the Romish church. Its milder ...m is seen in Episcopacy, and yet milder ...Methodism and other Pedobaptist sects. The genius of the Baptist denomination is ...nd in its organic or ecclesiastical divis...s with doctrinal and spiritual unity. ...Divide and be one" is the doctrine of Bap...ts; "unite and be one" is that of Roman...s. The former is the result of union to ...invisible head; the latter of union to a ...ible head. Individual liberty and growth ...e the fruits of the former; narrowness and ...very the fruits of the latter. Baptists ...y divide and subdivide till organic weak...ss is the result; but far better this than ...ntralized power with human pride and ...ctrinal impurity.

Our growth as Baptists has been on the ...e of organic division with doctrinal and ...iritual unity. Our cause in many of the ...lds has suffered much for want of such ...vision, and other peoples are to-day in ...ongholds over which our flag might have ...en floating. Many of our pastors are living ...o selfishly for a single church, and not ...ough for their denomination, thus circum...ribing too much their freedom in Christ ...d that of their church. No true church ...eth unto herself. The law of church in...pendence involves the equally beautiful ...w of interdependence. The weak and the ...ong are equally parts of a common whole ...unity. Greater emphasis should be given ...e Apostolic language, "They had all ...ings in common." We are to teach the ...rld the distinction between true and false ...mmunism. Looking above at night, we ...hold a common and universal brother...od—suns, planets and systems, with infi...e divisions, and yet perfect unity and ...rmony. "One star differeth from another ...r in glory," and yet all are stars, and all ...e moving together for the glory of God. ...ch is our great Baptist brotherhood of in...viduals and churches. The Scripture, ...triving together for the faith of the gos...," recently quoted by a noted preacher in ...of of centralized power, has its noblest ...fillment, not in a specific but a general ...se. Brethren of America are as truly ...triving together" with the brethren of ...ina for "the faith of the gospel" as were ...e brethren in the little church at Philippi.

"Though sundered far, by faith we meet,
Around one common mercy seat."

Paul's epistles were for all the brethren ...cattered abroad," while addressed to a ...al church. There are no Scriptures ad...essed to great churches as such.

There are two evil extremes to which our ...ptist idea of church independency may go. ...st, the evil of pride and presumption ...m centralized wealth and knowledge. ...cond, the evil of attenuated ignorance and ...esumption often seen in small churches. ...ide of knowledge is as evil as pride of ...orance. Spiritual strength, from per...al union to Christ, is the remedy for ...h. The Bible no where premiums or...nic power per se. Five thousand mem...rs were for a time in the church at Jeru...em. It was during the great Passover ...son, and no doubt the bulk of those added ...the church were of the "Dispersion." ...ese soon returned to their distant homes. ...e church in its normal state could not ...ve been materially strong, for soon after ...find Paul gathering collections for the ...r saints of Jerusalem. This church cer...nly gives no proof of centralization.

...t is said of that great military strategist, ...poleon, that he overcame his enemy by ...ing on his army in detail, and that such ...the tactics of the Devil in opposing the ...y of God. This I believe to be true, and ...reveals the wisdom of Napoleon and the ...dy of the Devil. Judged by results, the ...vil's tactics have proven to be a delight...failure against the true Israel of God, ...ether few or many in number. The track ...the centuries is everywhere marked by ...ords of his defeat. Successful he has ever ...n against great organic or centralized ...wer in the christian world, while the little ...leon Bands have been victorious in every ...flict. The first christian churches sur...ed and made conquests wherever they ...re planted so long as they were spiritually ...ong. So jealous was God of his power ...ough human weakness, he permitted ...secution to visit the church at Jerusa...m that his children might be "scattered ...road." They went everywhere preaching ...gospel, and were everywhere successful. ...k of the Devil overcoming the armies of ...d in detail because of organic divisions! ...posterous! Why Paul whipped him, ...gle handed, in a hundred encounters. So ...brave Martin Luther with all the Devil's ...gdoms against him led by a corrupt Ro...h hierarchy. Why have we not a thou...d such heroes in this nineteenth chris...n century? Because men fear to leave ...human center and cleave unto the divine ...ter. "Ye shall all leave me alone, and ...I am not alone," is the voice of all God's ...atest heroes from Enoch to William Ca...y. "Scatter, and yet be strong; divide, ...d occupy; go, and conquer," is the voice ...our Leader. The smallest Baptist church ...more than a match for the Devil if it be ...anted on good fighting ground. Did you ...er think how few of them died? I never ...ew of one to die. It is painful to note how ...en good and wise men will use the Scrip...res at times in support of a pet theory. A ...tain lovable and eminent minister, who ...vocates greater centralization of Baptist ...wer, is wont to quote against those who ...ve the temerity to differ from him, and in ...oof of his views, the Scripture, "Mark ...em who cause divisions." Again and ...ain has this quotation been made against ...e organic division of a great Association ...the State with effect among certain hear...s. Now, the words quoted have no refer...ce whatever to organic divisions, but to ...octrinal schism. The entire passage reads ...us: "Now I beseech you, brethren, mark ...em who cause divisions contrary to the ...ctrine which ye have learned." Romans 16: 17. Brethren should be exceedingly cautious not to use the word so as to hinder the spread of Christ's kingdom among men. There is far less danger now among us in scattering than in centering; in going than in staying, whether at home or abroad. Have not our churches staid at home long enough to prove their apostolic succession in doctrine and polity? Is it not time for them to go forth, giving better proof in Holy Ghost power and zeal for a lost world?

If, during this Centennial year, greater emphasis shall be placed on divinely centered men and women who count not their lives dear for Christ, it will be well.

Medicine for the Hair.

To brush and brush and still to brush is the best medicine for the hair, remembering always that it is the hair and not the scalp which is to receive the treatment, writes Mrs. Mallon in the July Ladies' Home Journal. Upon the brush used depends a great deal. In the first place it must be immaculately clean, and one's brush should be washed as religiously as one's face. The comb should be coarse, so that it will disentangle the hair if it is snarled, but if the hair is well brushed the comb really is of very little use. A fine comb is never advised. The brush should have long, soft bristles that go through the hair, taking with them every particle of dust and leaving behind them a glow that is beautiful.

Deafness Can't be Cured

by local applications, as they can not reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give one hundred dollars for any case of deafness (caused by catarrh) that we can not cure by taking Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

Cocoanuts.

I wonder how many of the readers of Children's Work have gone nutting? Those who have done so, I am sure will agree with me that it is great fun. When I was a boy I would walk over the hills for a full half day, and feel well rewarded if I brought home a quart of chestnuts or a half bushel of walnuts. Now I am a man, I believe I like to go nutting as well as ever; but I can not climb as I did thirty years ago, so I am obliged to have the boys climb for me.

There are no chestnuts, hickory-nuts or walnuts in Africa, but there are nuts of other kinds, and plenty of them, too. At Gaboon there are a good many cocoanut-trees, and all the people are fond of the nuts. A cocoanut-tree does not ripen up all its crop at one time like a walnut-tree, but it has blossoms and nuts of various sizes, all at the same time. The nuts grow in bunches just like great bunches of grapes, with from twelve to twenty nuts in a bunch. A tree growing in good soil will bear about twelve or thirteen of these bunches in a year. Each nut is encased in a thick husk, so that each as it comes from the tree is as large as a man's head. This husk is green until the nut becomes ripe, when it turns a dark brown color.

The trees, as you know, have no limbs, and are as difficult to climb as a very tall telegraph pole; yet some of the young men can go up them quite easily, especially under the stimulus of a reward. There is always rejoicing among the people when they are ordered to get the cocoanuts, for they know that all will get a share. The stem that holds the bunch is thick and tough. When this has been chopped in two, the nuts come down with a great splash and roll over the grass to quite a distance. We are all careful to stand some little distance from the tree, so the nuts will not fall on us. Some people say the water in the cocoanut is very cool and refreshing, but I have not found it so in my experience. When the nut is grated and a little boiling water is strained through it, it makes a sort of milk which tastes well in coffee.—J. H. R.

An Inside View of an African Boy's Life by an African Prince.

"A willing, cheerful obedience to our elders was required, or else we suffered harsh and horrible punishment, such as make me shudder now as I think of them. How many times have I beheld with tear-filled eyes and sympathetic heart, some young companion tied hand and foot to a post for some childish fault. He was left there for hours with the hot rays of the burning sun pouring down upon his uncovered head and body.

Here he would hang sometimes, if he was thought worthy of severer treatment than usual, till he was almost exhausted for want of food and drink. I have known some boys to remain tied in such manner for a day at a time. We dared not approach too near to him, nor offer him any food; for if we did, we would suffer the same punishment, with an extra blow or two thrown in. Sometimes an iron is heated to a white heat, and the miserable little culprit is made to take the iron thus heated in his hand. It burns deeply into the flesh, and if he does not lose the whole hand, he loses the use of it for a long, long time, and carries the scars for life. * * *

You may understand, then, that boys and girls were very careful not to give offence, and to obey always. The Vey boys stand much in fear of their elders, and have the utmost respect for them. I often think that the African boys and girls might give the civilized boys and girls a few lessons in showing respect and reverence to those who are older than themselves. * * *

When I was eight years old, I was taught to use the bow and arrow. The proudest day of my life was when I became the owner for the first time of a bow and a quiver of nicely sharpened arrows. What gay times we used to have, in spite of all the constant, ever-lurking fear of punishment, which we could not shake off.

Sometimes fifty, often one hundred of us boys, would practice shooting at a target, standing at a distance of forty feet or more. The target was a round piece of tiger-skin, with a diameter of about one inch and a half. The boys would shoot at this target in turn, the boy whose arrow pierced the bull's eye, taking all the arrows of those who tried before him and failed. Often when I was the lucky boy, the others would cheer me till they were hoarse, carry me about the town on their shoulders, and placing a wreath of palm-leaves about my forehead, after the manner of the early Greeks in their sports, would declare me a hero or king. I cannot tell you with what a glow of pride and dignity I wore my honors, till some other boy won them from me by greater skill."

After telling of his wrestling, swimming and hunting contests, Besolow says: "I can recall my mother's tender eyes and her gentle voice, when she drew my brothers and me about her, as lovingly as any white mother could, and talked to us of our father and the respect and duty we owed to him. She told us to be true, brave soldiers always, and to die rather than show one trace of fear in battle or in contests of any kind. She taught us of our gods; the respect we must show to the moon; the reverence in which we must hold the sacred crocodiles; and the love and worship we must feel for Carnabah, chief and king of all gods. How our childish eyes would open wide with horror when she told us, in stirring tones of the penalties we would bring upon ourselves by disrespect to any of these gods."

New Advertisements.

We call attention to the following advertisements in this issue:

Monroe High School has a complete and well arranged curriculum for high school work. There are six well equipped teachers, three in the Literary, two in the Musical, and one in the Business Department. To those who are preparing for college, or for any line of commercial work, or for the ordinary walks of life, this school presents good advantages.

Richmond Female Institute, located in the historic metropolis of the South in one of the most charming and retired residential portions of the city, offers surpassing advantages for the higher education of young women. Has a large and able faculty, including several eminent Professors of Richmond College. Unexcelled for Literary, Scientific and Artistic advantages. Health record remarkable. There has never been the death of a pupil in the School. No effort spared to make the home-life of the young ladies pleasant. The buildings, which cost about $65,000, are undergoing important repairs and improvement. Grounds ample for out-door exercise. For catalogue and information, apply to James Nelson, D. D., President, Richmond, Va.

Oxford Female Seminary's catalogue is before us. As Lady Principal, Mrs. M. Parham has been selected, and no better selection could possibly have been made. For twenty years she has been Co-Principal of the leading school of Henderson. She is gentle, refined, has rare tact in governing, possesses a large fund of common sense, and is withal a woman of real culture. Happy is the girl who has her guiding care and moulding influence. In the Music Department a superior course is offered, and facilities first class are provided. The teacher of Piano and Organ received all the training to be found in her native city of Albany, N. Y., and then spent two years in the Royal Conservatory of Berlin, Germany, under the instruction of Moszkowski, one of the great teachers of the world. She uses his method of teaching. The teacher of Vocalization received training in the Philadelphia Conservatory. The feature of uniformity of dress pleases us. This prevents extravagance and rivalry, and appears better.

Horner Military School has received the highest endorsements from Presidents Geo. T. Winston, Charles E. Taylor and John F. Crowell.

The Dunsmore Business College of Staunton, Va., will begin its twenty-first session Sept 1, 1892. This College ranks with the best institutions of its kind.

Col. Thomas B. Schnatterly's Experience With the Electropoise.

Having served twelve years in the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Pennsylvania, the Hon. Thomas B. Schnatterly is consequently a well known man in that State. He has been at frequent times engaged in the construction of railroads for Tom Scott.

He was treated for Loco Motor Ataxia by the most learned and distinguished physicians, that eminent nerve specialist, Dr. S. Weir Mitchell of Philadelphia, and the distinguished diagnostician, Da Costa, and also by Dr. Thurston of the Queens' Army of England.

The very best medication was resorted to in his case: had a plaster paris jacket built on him, wore it three weeks, was stretched by Dr. Mitchell's improved spinal suspensory stretcher from Feb. 1889 to July '90, he was cauterized with white heat cautory once each month for twelve months, and as many as twenty-eight burns at one time. From the Orthopoedic Hospital in Philadelphia he went to Hot Springs, Ark., in May 1889 and began bathing. He grew worse daily. He had made all preparations for death, as they did not think it possible for him to live.

In reply to inquiries concerning his experience with the Electropoise he wrote the following to Mr. E. M. Ware, 2049 Mervine St. Philadelphia:

Hot Springs, Ark., Nov. 24th, 1890.

Mr. E. M. Ware, Dear Sir:—I began the use of the Electropoise on the eight or tenth of July. I was obliged to quit bathing and was full of despair; was growing worse daily, and could not rise up with crutches. Had a constriction around the chest, continuous pain and paroxysms paralysis of the bladder; was growing numb about the waist, and the muscles of the left leg were badly wasted. In the first charge it attacked the bladder, and one by one each nerve in turn, and now the constriction of the chest is gone; have regained control of the bladder both as to retention and incontinence. My feet have lost the wriggle and I can place them where I desire; sensation is slowly returning in feet and knees. The muscles of the atrophied leg are filling up, and look almost normal; complexion much improved, gastric trouble in stomach and liver gone, appetite improved, and can rise upon my feet without any aid whatever; can balance on each hip joint and step out like a child.

I consider this most remarkable improvement in my case, because I thought I was beyond hope, and I do not feel that I have yet given it a full test.

It certainly will revitalize; it drove out a vast amount of eruptions and my bladder improvement indicates that it attacks the cause. By all means give it a trial.

Yours truly,
T. B. SCHNATTERLY.

Resolutions of Respect.

WHEREAS, Our Heavenly Father, on June 25th, 1892, called to his reward, our beloved pastor, Rev. E. G. Beckwith; therefore Resolved 1. That our faith in God leads us to believe implicity that "all things work together for good to them that love God," and while viewed from our stand point, we mourn the loss of a beloved pastor, one whose life was an example to all his congregation of real living religion, a preacher just in the prime of a vigorous young manhood, in the morning of life, with such a promising field of usefulness before him, it seems to our short sighted vision that he was cut down almost in the beginning of his life-work, leaving a good, noble and grand race unrun. Yet we know that with God no accidents occur, no lines are unfinished, but all is perfect, complete and beautiful; and while our hearts sorrow for the loved pastor, we shall greet no more on earth, "By faith we take a view of brighter cenes in heaven." We pray "Thy will be done."

Resolved 2. That in his death we have lost an efficient pastor, an able preacher of the gospel, the Baptist denomination one of its most valuable workers, Wake Forest College an earnest, faithful teacher, and the State a son of whom she might well be proud.

Resolved 3. That we tender his parents, brothers and sisters our heartfelt sympathy in their bereavement. May our Heavenly Father enable them to see even in this sad affliction traces of his love, and may they be led by the memory of the life of their son and brother to lives of consecration to the Master's service on earth and at last may the entire family be reunited where parting is no more.

Resolved 4. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, that they be spread on the church minutes, and sent to the BIBLICAL RECORDER and N. C. Baptist, with request to publish.

By order of Perry's Creek church in conference, Sunday, July 3, 1892.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Raleigh Affairs.

A good fire-works display was witnessed by several thousand persons here on the night of the 12th inst.

It is reported that Mr. Josephus Daniels will begin the publication of a weekly paper in this city next month.

The Electic a new monthly paper has made its appearance in this city. It is well filled with miscellaneous reading.

The North Carolina Monumental Association was permanently organized here last Friday. The object of the Association is the erection of a suitable monument in the Capitol square to the memory of North Carolina's dead.

The premium list for the State Fair of 1892 has been received. It will, as soon as seen, assert itself to be one of the most interesting documents ever issued by the State Agricultural Society. The premiums are more numerous than ever before and are the most liberal ever offered; and there are premiums for everybody to compete for. Railroad rates will be one cent per mile, and special trains will be run. H. W. Ayer, Secretary, at Raleigh, will send lists and particulars to all who want them. During the week the city of Raleigh will celebrate its one hundreth anniversary. This will be characterized by gorgeous allegorical floats, trade floats, decorative scenes and brilliant illuminations and fire-works that have never been equalled in the South.

General News.

Wm. E. Gladstone will again be England's premier.

Cyrus W. Field, died Tuesday morning of last week, at his country home, Dobbs' Ferry, N. Y.

The tug boat Frankie Folson capsized and sunk on Lake Peoria, Ill., on the 12th inst., and about twenty-five people were drowned.

The Grand Camp of Confederate Veterans of Mississippi met in Jackson on the 12th inst. Chief Justice Campbell of the Supreme Court, delivered the annual address.

The Senate passed the Bland Silver Bill, but the House voted down the proposition to give it a hearing. This ends the matter so far as this session of Congress is concerned.

It is reported that twenty non-union men were killed in the Frisco mine explosion, in Idaho recently.

William Harley, a bridge carpenter, killed Annie Goodwin with a club in Memphis, Tenn., on the 12th. Every bone in her body was said to have been broken. The murderer is in jail.

The citizens of Halifax, N. S., forwarded 1,100 barrells of food supplies and 35,000 feet of lumber to the St. John, N. F., suffers on the 12th inst. The naval authorities also shipped tents to shelter about 15,000 people.

William Grant, colored, was shot and killed by Aaron Frankfurter, a young Hebrew, at Danville, Va., on Tuesday night of last week. The shooting was claimed to have been in self-defence. Frankfurter was cut in several places.

The steam-ship Wilmington which plies between Victoria, B. C., and Portland, Oregon, was seized at Astoria, Oregon, several days ago by special agent Mulkey. The Captain and crew were arrested, and 902 cans of opium (about $5,000 worth) were secured. The seizure of this large quantity of opium is one of the largest ever made by United States officers.

A terrible rainstorm visited the Chamonnix valley, France on the night of the 11th inst. The river Arve inundated its banks causing great damage and loss of life. At St. Gervais, the famous health resort, over 150 people were drowned. The celebrated baths were destroyed and at least half of the buildings in the place were demolished. Hundreds of domestic animals were drowned.

Richmond Female Institute,
RICHMOND, VA.
Located in one of the most cultivated and historic cities of the country, offers surpassing advantages for the higher education of young women.
The school was organized in 1854 by Dr. Basil Manly, and has held, for a long time, a prominent place among the educational institutions of the South.
Its faculty is composed of able and experienced teachers, several having added to the broadest home culture years of study and residence abroad.
Several of the most distinguished professors of Richmond College teach in the Institute.
Richmond offers the rarest advantages for literary, scientific and artistic studies.
The health record of the Institute is remarkable. For now nearly forty years there has not been a death of a pupil in the school.
No effort is spared to make the home life of the young ladies in every way pleasant.
The people of Richmond evince the liveliest interest in the school, and the trustees, composed of some of the most prominent Baptists of the South, among whom are Drs. H. A. Tupper, W. W. Landrum, W. E. Hatcher, J. M. Frost, and others, propose to do great things for it in the near future.
As the school has a large local patronage we can afford to offer lower rates than any other institution of like grade in the South.

MARRIED.

MACK—PARKER—At the residence of Mr. A. T. Stevens of Holly Spring Township, by Rev. H. W. Norris, Dr. W. L. Mack of Orangeburg, S. C., and Miss Mary Parker of Wake county, and daughter of the late W. C. Parker of Raleigh.

DIED.

BROWN—March 9th, at the residence of her son, deacon Isaac Brown, in Warsaw, Mrs. Sarah Brown, aged eighty-six years. She retained an unusual vigor of mind and body, was deeply devoted to her family, her church and Bible. The sudden call at the midnight hour found her with "lamp trimmed and burning." O. P. M.

STRICKLAND—May 12th, at Warsaw, Louisa, wife of Deacon Strickland. She was born Aug. 25th, 1825; was converted among the Methodists in 1842, afterwards joining the Baptist church of New Hope. She bore with Christian fortitude the lingering disease that ended her life, and has entered into the "rest that remaineth for the people of God."

O. P. M.

UPCHURCH—Died at the residence of Mr. J. J. Barrow, near Youngsville, N. C., May 4th, 1892, Miss Jane Upchurch, having about reached the appointed limit of human life. She was unselfish and kind-hearted, and sincerely loved by those who had the best opportunities of knowing her. She testified before her death to a well-grounded hope of eternal life through Jesus Christ. R.

SANDIFORD—Died, near Forestville, N. C., June 15th, 1892, Miss Ailsey Sandiford, in the seventieth year of her age. A pure-hearted, humble christian, she died as she had lived, trusting in Christ. A few days before, from the same house and from bleeding hearts, a bright little child, Clarence Nuckels, was borne by the angels to the good Shepherd's arms. R.

FOUNTAIN—Willie J. Fountain peacefully fell asleep in Jesus July 5th, 1892, at his home in Southport, N. C. He was born in Darlington, S. C., in 1839. He joined Mechanicsville Baptist church at the age of fourteen. Shortly after this he moved his membership to Darlington church where he remained for many years. He died a member of Ansonville Baptist church. He was a faithful, consistent member of the church for forty-eight years. He was for many years superintendent of the Sunday-school in his church. He was deacon of his church twenty-seven years, being elected and ordained in 1865. He filled the office with pride and punctuality. His walk was pious, his thoughts pure, his manners gentle, his advice always good, his influence extensive and felt among his brethren in the church. Our brother bore his long sickness with patience and endurance. He battled long and arduously, and has now gone up to get his crown. He taught us how to live by his life and how to die by his death. He leaves a large family and a host of friends to mourn their loss. Now may the God of all grace be a husband to the widow and a father to the children. "Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints."

A. T. H.

BOYETTE—At his residence near Warsaw, June 20th, deacon Wm. Boyette. He was born Feb. 1st, 1819; was converted and baptized in 1845, along with Bro. Wm. Kennedy, during the revival conducted by Rev. Jesse Howell at the Johnson church. He was ordained a deacon in the Johnson church, and since 1869 served the Warsaw church in that capacity. He was strongly attached to his children, and made great sacrifice to educate them. One of his sons, James, is a successful medical practitioner. Two are dentists—Dr. Frank, at Clinton, and the youngest, Charles, at Mt. Olive. He leaves another son and two daughters. His last sufferings were very protracted and severe, and his prayer could but be that he might soon enter into that blest abode where dwells no pain nor sorrow. He was buried with Masonic honors, after a sermon by the writer. We commend his aged widow to the Holy Comforter.

CHOWAN
Baptist Female Institute,
MURFREESBORO, N. C.
Parties having young ladies to educate will do well to consider the following facts:—
The Institute offers superior advantages in Literature, Science, Music and Art. Only the best talent is employed to give instruction in the different departments.
The situation is one of remarkable beauty. There are twenty-eight acres of land within the corporation, but so located as to give the school all the privacy of the country, while near enough to the town to secure any advantages it may offer.
The health record is unsurpassed. During the last ten years there have been two cases of pneumonia, one of typhoid fever (brought by the pupil with her) no case of diphtheria, scarlet fever or measles. Chills have been strangers, and bilious fever almost unknown. The average of medical bills since the organization of the school has been about twenty five cents per pupil for the scholastic year. The amount paid for medical bills by the entire boarding patronage the past session was ten dollars.
This institution is the unencumbered property of the Baptists, and is the only property owned by them in the State used exclusively for the education of girls.
The dormitories have recently been refurnished, and only two pupils occupy the same room. Parties leaving points east of Charlotte, Dallville, Richmond and Washington reach the school the same afternoon via Boykins, Va., and the Murfreesboro railroad. As the property is unencumbered; the charges can be made very moderate. Board, literary and music tuition, if paid in advance, are two hundred dollars for scholastic year. The fall session begins on Wednesday, Sept. 7th. For catalogue or additional information, address

IN DISEASES OF WOMEN, CHRONIC MALARIAL POISONING, AND ATONIC DYSPEPSIA, ETC., ETC.

DR. WILLIAM T. HOWARD,
Professor of Diseases of Women and Children in the University of Maryland, says, after comparing the water of SPRING NO. 1, with that of a very celebrated water:
"Indeed, in a certain class of cases, it is much superior to the latter. I allude to the abiding debility attendant upon the tardy convalescence from grave acute diseases, and more especially to the Cachexia and Sequelæ incident to malarious fevers in all their grades and varieties, to certain forms of Atonic Dyspepsia and
ALL THE AFFECTIONS PECULIAR TO WOMEN
that are remediable at all by mineral waters. In short, were I called upon to state from what Mineral Waters I have seen the greatest and most unmistakable amount of good accrue in the largest number of cases in a general way, I would unhesitatingly say the Buffalo Springs, in Mecklenburg county, Va."

Creeping up the Stairs.

In the softly falling twilight
Of a weary, weary day,
With a quiet step I entered
Where the children were at play;
I was brooding o'er some trouble
Which had met me unawares,
When a little voice came ringing,
"Me is creepin' up the stairs."

Ah, it touched the tenderest heart-strings,
With a breath of force divine,
And such melodies awakened,
As no wording can define;
And I turned to see our darling,
All forgetful of my cares,
When I saw that little creature
Slowly creeping up the stairs.

Step by step she bravely clambered
On her little hands and knees,
Keeping up a constant chattering,
Like a magpie in the trees,
Till at last she reached the topmost,
When o'er all her world's affairs,
She delighted stood a victor,
After creeping up the stairs.

Fainting heart, behold an image
Of man's brief and struggling life,
Whose best prizes must be captured
With a noble, earnest strife;
Onward, upward reaching ever,
Bending to the weight of cares,
Hoping, fearing, still expecting,
We go creeping up the stairs.

On their steps may be no carpet.
By their side may be no rail:
Hands and knees may often pain us,
And the heart may often fail.
Still above there is the glory,
Which no sinfulness impairs,
With its rest and joy forever,
After creeping up the stairs.

A Little Girl's Talk.

A few Sundays ago I heard a little girl's talk over her pocket-book before church time. Her brother said to her:

"Where's your money? There will be a contribution to-day."

"I have two silver ten cents and a paper one."

Her brother said: "A tenth of that is three cents."

"But three cents is such a stingy little to give. I shall give this ten cents. You see I would have had more here, only I spent some for myself last week; it would not be fair to take a tenth of what is left after I have used all I wanted."

"Why don't you give the paper ten cents? The silver ones are prettier to keep."

"So they are prettier to give. Paper ten cents look so dirty and shabby. No; I'll give good things."

So she had put one ten cents in her pocket when some one said:

"I hope we can raise that $300 for home missions to-day."

Then that little girl gave a groan.

"O, this is home mission day! Then that other ten cents has to go too." And then she went to get it, with another doleful groan.

I said; "If you feel so distressed about it, why did you give it?"

"O, because I made up my mind to always give twice as much to home missions as anything else, and I shall just stick to what I made my mind up to."

Now this little affair set me to thinking:

1. We should deal honestly with God in giving. "It is not fair," said the little girl, "to count your tenth after you have used all that you want."

2. We should deal liberally in giving. If the fair tenth is a petty sum, let us go beyond it and give more.

3. Let us give our best things. That which is the nicest to keep is also the nicest to give.

4. Let us give until we feel it.—Selected.

Wanted—A Boy.

Wanted a boy, a brave, courageous, manly, hopeful boy; one who is not afraid of the truth; one who scorns a lie; one who hates deceit; one who loves his mother; one who doesn't know more than his parents; one who has the courage to say no, and stick to it; one who is willing to begin at the bottom of the ladder and work upwards; one who thinks it would be unmanly to smoke; one who thinks an education is worth striving for; one who is willing to obey his superiors; one who knows his home is better than the street; one who doesn't believe the marvelous tales told in the story paper, and will not read the vile stuff; one who won't cheat in a fair game; one who won't be a sneak and do a mean act unseen; one who won't spend every penny he earns or gets; one who thinks he should respect himself and keep himself in decent appearance; one who won't attack an old man because he is feeble and defenceless; one who won't torture dumb animals; one who won't steal; one who won't swear; one who won't listen to or repeat nasty stories; one who won't revile or jeer at drunken persons on the street; one who won't do a dirty act for another boy who is too cowardly to do his own meanness; one who loves to do right because it is right. Wanted—a boy, a whole-souled, earnest, honorable, square boy. Where can he be found? Does he live in your neighborhood? Is he a member of your family? Do you know him?—American Teacher.

"I was prostrated with a severe bilious complaint," writes Erastus Southworth, of Bath, Me. "After vainly trying a number of remedies, I was finally induced to take Ayer's Pills. I had scarcely taken two boxes when I was completely cured."

A Fable.

A little girl and boy were once sitting on a flowery bank, and talking proudly about their dress.

"See," said the boy, "what a beautiful new hat I have got. What a fine new jacket and trousers, and what a nice pair of shoes; it's not everybody that's dressed so finely as I am."

"Indeed," said the girl, "I think I am dressed finer than you, for I have on a silk cape and a handsome feather in my bonnet. I know that my dress cost a great deal of money."

"Not so much as mine," said the boy, "I am sure."

"Hold your peace," said a caterpillar crawling on the hedge; "you have neither of you any reason to be proud of your clothes, for they are only secondhand, and have all been worn by some creature or other, of which you think meanly, before they came into your possession. Why, that silk first wrapped up such a worm as I am."

"There, miss, what do you say to that?" said the boy.

"And that feather," exclaimed a bird, perched upon a tree, "was stolen from or cast off by some of my race."

"What do you say to that, miss?" repeated the boy. "Well, my clothes were neither worn by birds nor worms."

"True," said a sheep that was grazing close by, "but they were worn on the back of some of my family before they were yours; and as for your hat, I know that the beavers supplied the materials for making that article, and, my friend, the calves and oxen were killed, not only to furnish meat for your table, but also leather to make your shoes with."

See the folly of being proud of your clothes, since we are indebted to the meanest creatures for them; and now consider how thankful we ought to be to God, who has given us wisdom rightly to use the materials which the creatures supply.—Our Sunday Afternoon.

The Face on the Dollar.

Anna Willess Williams, the original of the goddess on our silver dollar, was born in Philadelphia during the Civil War, writes Alice Graham McCollin in the July Ladies' Home Journal. Her mother was of southern birth, the daughter of Dr. Arthur H. Willess, a wealthy slave owner of Maryland, who, while his daughter was still unmarried, suffered financial reverses. When nineteen she married Henry Williams, of Philadelphia, and removed with him to his native city. Mr. Williams soon became affluent, but through some mismanagement he lost all his property, and his daughter, Anna, the youngest of nine children, was born under most adverse circumstances. While she was still but a child her father died, leaving his widow, although in delicate health, with the strongest determination to care for and educate her children, and it was entirely through the endeavors of her mother that Miss Williams received her education.

Early in 1876 the Treasury Department secured the services of Mr. George Morgan, an expert designer and engraver, who had previously been connected with the Royal Mint of England. He was assigned to duty at the Philadelphia Mint upon the design for the new silver dollar which was soon to be issued. He gave his attention first to the reverse side, for which a design of the American eagle was afterward selected, hoping that a suitable idea would occur to him for the head of the Goddess of Liberty, which, it seemed proper, should be used as the principal figure on the coin. After considerable delay and frequent change of plan, it was decided that, if possible, the head should be a representation of some living American girl. In the pursuit of his duties Mr. Morgan had been thrown into the society of Mr. Thomas Eakins, an artist of considerable reputation, and the similarity of their interests became the foundation of a warm friendship between them. It was through Mr. Eakins' influence that Miss Williams, a friend of his family, was induced to pose for Mr. Morgan for the designs of the Goddess of Liberty. The sittings took place at the residence of Mr. Eakins, on Mount Vernon Street, below Eighteenth, in November, 1876. It was some time before the cap, with its sheath, was decided upon.

How Many Eggs to a Pound?

Eggs vary in size and weight. Some eggs will weigh as much as six to the pound, and others twelve to the pound. Eight eggs to one pound is considered the standard. The Minorca and Black Spanish lay the largest eggs. When we take the weight of the egg into consideration, we find that the work done by some hens is enormous. A hen laying six eggs that weigh a pound does twice the service performed by one producing eggs that require twelve to weigh a pound, provided they equal each other in the number of eggs layed. It is the exception that six eggs will weigh one pound, yet it has happened frequently. If eggs were sold by weight, the poultry men would be benefited, as he would prefer to keep hens that lay large eggs, thus securing the greatest return before the hens begin to moult. It costs more to produce a large egg than a small one, and the farmer should have this advantage in his favor instead of permitting the customer to receive more than a fair proportion.—Farm and Fireside.

No Time to Soothe Her Own Baby.

Nurse (to fashionable mother).—The baby is very restless, m'am. I can't do anything with her.

F. M.—She's teething I suppose.

N.—Yes'm. I think if you was to take her in your arms a little while it might soothe her.

F. M.—If impossible. I haven't time to spare. I am just making ready to attend a meeting of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals. Give baby some of Dr. Biggers' Huckleberry Cordial.

What He Had Lost.

A naturalist, who is both an ardent student in his branch of science and absent-minded to a degree which keeps his family on the alert, recently celebrated his silver wedding. Many guests were invited for the occasion, and the house was made ready for the reception of the company.

Just as the first guest arrived, one of the daughters was sent to summon the father, who had not come from his study. Care had been taken that he should be reminded to dress in time, so he was all ready, and so at the summons of the daughter he came to the parlor.

When they reached the room, the daughter noticed that her father carried in his hand a small wooden box, and as he shook hands with the nearest guest she saw him drop it. The cover rolled off, but she gave a sigh of relief when she saw that the box was apparently empty.

The naturalist, however, uttered a cry of dismay, and instantly went down on his hands and knees in an attempt to gather up something.

"Have you spilled anything, father?" she asked.

"Spilled anything!" he echoed, in evident indignation at her calm tone. "I have lost fifty fleas that I have just received from Egypt!"

The effect of this intelligence on the family was nothing in comparison to the effect the catastrophe had upon the company before the evening was over; and the only thing that the naturalist said to his friends in answer to their congratulations upon his happy married life, so his daughters declared after all was over, was to ask that if they carried away any of his Egyptian fleas they would return the insects to him.—Youth's Companion.

Beecham's pills sell well because they cure.

To Resuscitate a Drowned Person.

The body when recovered should be laid face downwards with a bundle of clothes, very often those belonging to the patient, placed under the forehead, another under the pit of the stomach, when a steady pressure in the back will eject all the water. Then turn over the body, face up, taking both the arms work them slowly from the body till they touch together over the head. At the same time let another person in unison press on the stomach immediately below the ribs. This is to produce an artificial respiration. Keep fanning and do not let a crowd gather around. While this treatment can be applied by anyone, a doctor should be sent for immediately. If the person does not come to immediately, do not become discouraged, but continue this until hope is gone or until successful. The body should not be rolled on a barrel as the little vitality left will be shaken out by this.

By the method here given, aided later by a physician, a person can be resuscitated after being under water for five minutes.—Norfolk Landmark.

Some Thoughts About the Bible.

Like Tabor, it is a mountain apart. It needs no argument, no analysis to persuade the spiritual mind that the breath of God is in this Holy Book; whether its vital truths be uttered in prophecy or narrative, whether intoned from the sepulchre or the crypt, whether thundered from Sinai or syllabled from Mars Hill, whether spoken by the tongue of him who spake as never man spake, or by the superb advocate whose convincing logic brought Agrippa to the confessional, it is of world topping pre-eminence. To the scholar and to the antiquary, to the philosopher and poet, it engages the loftiest meditations of the mind. Nor have the refinements of agnostic and theorist defaced its beautiful proportions. The dramatic dialogues of Plato descended into a materialism out of touch with the inspired writings of this blessed Book. German moralists in their vain endeavors to fashion an æsthetic religion have lost themselves and their theses in the mazes of a theology that has never saved one human soul, and the Bible of the Buddhist and Mahommedan are feeble counterfeits of this Book of Books.

To the historian and critic forty authors have prepared a banquet where every intellectual taste may be gratified. In its investigation the intellect rests upon a literature so grand that no plagiarist has ever dared to imitate it upon a book of poems so transcendently beautiful that God himself must have guided the pen and conceived the thought that inspires sentiment and syllable. In grandeur of imagery, in delicacy of tone, in tenderness of sentiment, in beauty of ideal, in power of narrative and description, in dramatic effect, in prophecy and inspiration, the voice of the Great Jehovah hath declared it to be the handiwork of him who hath fashioned the heavens and earth. He who hath prepared a habitation for man exceeding in loveliness and grandeur the most labored designs of human skill, a palace more gorgeous than Alhambra, its nave the picturesque earth, its dome the bejewelled heavens, its facades the emerald mountains, its shrine the altar of the vicarious sacrifice, and its Great High Priest, God, over all forever more. Every verse in the Bible is wedded to music; every paragraph is a divine symphony, and every page breathes a poem as superb and lofty as if the soul of Homer and the genius of Anacreon melted into one thought had impressed their beauty and imagery upon consonant and vowel. It abounds in sunshine and in shadow, in beauty of allegory and metaphor, with ever shifting scenes of tumult and repose, with sunlit pictures spread with a rich carpet of flowers and flowing streams, with storms and cascades, and now and then like some angry sea breaking fiercely upon a promontory of rock, stately in its isolation, the deafening roar of the frantic waters dying out in a whisper of melody. For forty centuries its entrancing beauty has delighted patriarch and prophet, and when science and nature have essayed in vain to engage the meditation of moralist and skeptic these have turned instinctively to catch one gleam of hope from its imperishable riches.

Inspiration has raised its literature above the researches of the learned and wise. Its intellectual labors are peopled with images. It fashions the most beautiful models. It discovers an avenue to the throne-room of God, and pagan and believer pursue with unflagging footstep their well-beaten paths to the audience chamber of the Great King. Here are the foot-prints of the antiquary and the pilgrim.

At a period antedating the diffusion of Bible literature the old religions were dead from the pillars of Hercules to the Ninth Cataract and a blight as vicious as put its poisoned tongue upon the empire of Pharaoh Thothnes cast a deadly shadow over fane and minaret and altar. Only in Jerusalem the temple service survived, and its Urim and Thummim, its feast days and its fasts, and its attractive and gorgeous ceremonial pointed to a hierarchy that was to blaze forth in all the splendor of imperialism in which effete kingdoms were to be absorbed and the children of Abraham were to rule the whole world, and a Royal Messiah should be their king. The ages weary in their flight had been burdened with the promise. Judea sorrowed because of the long deferred coronation. Our king delays his coming had been reverentially whispered, and its softened echoes falling now and again upon the receptive ear of priest and people quickened the devotion of those who watched and waited for him their Lord. Virgil was scarcely less prophetic than the seers of Holy Writ, scarcely less devout than the sacrificing priest at the altar, pointing as unerringly the way of life as if his matchless poem were truly the link between the pantheism of the pagan and the religion of the christian. A higher animation inspired him than a love of the woodland gods, imparting to verse and trope and rhythm a religious passion as if athwart the coming centuries the radiance of his royal approach had already begun to dazzle his expectant vision. The rhetorical beauties of the Bible are the accompaniments of genius—prophecy and poem suggest neither vain glory, nor self love. The trend of each thought is toward one grand monumental truth—that the God man coronated by the hand of an omnipotent father with the diadem he wore in heaven should be Lord of Lords and King of Kings, and its chronicles but record the step of each pilgrim foot toward Calvary's crest.

"From everlasting to everlasting thou art God." Thou has encrowned the brow of night with a thousand iridescent gems, each ray an emitted thought, each twinkle a benediction. The foundations of thy empire are as limitless as thy mercy, and here thou art God and Saviour. The tired pinion has sought surcease from its flight, and the wearied eye rests upon scarred piles whose enamelled cones and whose riven sides once echoed the alarums of human strife. Here are temples and moulderings ruins where emprise and exalted energy once ruled the hour. Sheep graze around the profaned altars where captive kings were slaughtered, and silence profound and fearful reigns in that arena where eighty thousand maddened men and women counted the pangs of wretches tortured in frightful reality to represent some prometheon fable. The very monuments arise like fungi starting forth from the seamed base of some noble ruin to tell of human savagery and decay. As an intellectual production the most exquisite creature that ever leaped full winged from the mind of man has been lost to the world of letters, and the fame of Sheridan has been sadly dwarfed because it cannot be reproduced. For three days and more the parliament of Great Britain stood poised upon every trope as if it were the very pinnacle of human excellence. For three days and more the impugned and lacerated character of Warren Hastings was pinioned fast to the tenter hook of invective while all India stood agape at the recital of wrongs she never suspected she had suffered. From the shrine of oratory falls with mellowed cadence upon the ear the inimitable exordium of Sir James McIntosh which once had the power to extirpate from the revolution the poison of its sting. How supremely dazzling the aureole in which the oration on Mars Hill is enshrined—"Him whom ye ignorantly worship declare I unto you." What all pervading pathos in the farewell sermon in the upper chamber of Troas. What ravishing music in the chords of the lyre when Israel's king swept its strings to the melody of the anthem that sent its thrills through every space of God Almighty's cathedral. "The voice of the Lord is on the sea: the God of glory thundereth. The Lord is on the mighty deep; the voice of the Lord is powerful. The voice of the Lord is full of majesty. The voice of the Lord breaketh the cedars; yea, the Lord breaketh the cedars of Lebanon. He maketh them to skip also as a calf; Lebanon and Sirion like a young unicorn. The Lord sitteth upon the water torrent; yea, the Lord sitteth King for ever."

Beside the merely pastoral and descriptive poetry of the Bible, there are other passages well calculated to have buoyed the wing of Plato in his long and ethereal flight, and to have bulged the Saxon muscle of Shakespeare in his mightiest efforts. "Behold the fear of the Lord that is wisdom, and to depart from evil is understanding." Do you ask for tenderness? "And Ruth said to her mother-in law, Entreat me not to leave thee." Do you ask for pathos? "And Cushi said, Tidings, my Lord, the king." Do you ask for natural and affecting narrative? "A certain man had two sons." I could willingly extend these thoughts to other species of composition. We have God's great anthem of Revelation. For the pensive there is the dirge of Jeremiah and the cloud-capped drama of Job. For the sanguine and hopeful, there sounds the blithe voice, and there beats the affectionate heart of old Galilean Peter; and for the contemplative there spreads like an abysmal joy the page—sunny, ecstatic, boundless, of John. Who can ask a consecration more intense than can be found in the Epistles of Paul? And for those whose poetic fancy craves a banquet more exhilarating than is the dew of Hermon and Boz-rah's red wine. I can name one genius after another that the Bible kindled, if it did not create. That Bible was Milton's poetic might. That Bible was the struggling vital force which, after years of rapt devotion, after years of mysterious mutterings, shot its pyramid of flame into old England's dingy hemisphere, and poured its living truth adown the russet steep of puritan theology.

That Bible was the torch that on the hills of Renfrewshire fired the young spirit of Pollok himself, both sacrifice and altar pile, till England spied the light and wondered at the brief and brilliant beacon.

The central truth proclaimed by Jewish rabbis was to be crowned by fullest fruition. Prophecy had prepared the grain for harvest, and the prince of the house of David, even Shiloh, was soon to sit upon his throne forever. All nations from Jerusalem to further Ind were to come under his dominion. As ages passed, the fascination of the grand Messianic hope grew even more hallowed, and became the deepest passion in the hearts of all Jewry. But beyond the gates of Jerusalem the centuries became blacker with their flight. Here were despised principalities that had not heard of this Prince, and to which the far-stretching highways that rayed out from the golden mile stone scarce reached their hithermost boundary. Here Jacob had wandered. Here Joshua had gathered the tribes to hear the law from the rounded hill-top. Here had been the gathering place of the children of Israel; and here, profaned as were the testimonies, these barren lands were to witness the marriage of nature and religion. Creeds and ceremonials, types and shadows were to be swept away, and the universal presence of this King of Kings was to make the whole world his shrine. Here the coming of Christ was to be marked by a sublimer event than the ministry of John, for the world was to behold for the first time in all the centuries the end of all national and tribal wars, the perfect union of all dominions under one sceptre. The fierce partheon and the savage of further Ind lived in peace and all secure under the shadow of the Roman eagle. And still there is but one covenant between God and man. The natal morn approaches. There is the odor of incense in the sanctuary, but there is no sound of pipe or timbrel. The opalescent sky gives forth only its accustomed lustre, and the long ramparts and bastions and blackened rocks about Jerusalem give forth no voice. The Eastern sky is luminous with a preternatural glow. A full raged star bursts with a thousand gleams upon Zion's Holy Hill and upon the valley of Jehosaphat, and shoots myriad spores of flame upon minaret and tower. A thousand eyes are turned toward the Divine Herald. What is the portent? Shall the great city be given to the plough share? Shall the dogs of Romans still further defile the beard of our fathers? rave the people. See it has motion. The Khan in Bethlehem is now lit up with an aureola of glory, and above its top is poised in mid-air this wonderful beacon. The minstrelsy of the upper air, an orchestra of suns and planets and stars are intoning an anthem, the like of which was never before heard in Jerusalem. "Glory to God in the highest. Peace on earth, good will toward men." Ah, now we comprehend. The lion of the tribe of Judah, him of whom the prophets spake, has come. Momentarily the Levitical priesthood and ceremonial ear are shaken to their foundations. The temple service is forever ended. The smoking lamb, prone upon the altar, has been cast out, for oblations of burnt offerings are no longer needed. One other covenant is now to be added to the covenant of works, and all symbols and types and shadows are now to be swallowed up in the antetype. The typical covenant between God and a typical people is accentuated upon this natal morn. Prophecies are sealed up and finished. The middle wall of partition between Jew and Gentile is broken down; even the vessels of sacrifice are carried into captivity into Babylon. Now has come the perfect freedom from all bondage, from the unjust exactions of ecclesiastical law.

Universal nature has suspended her organic law that she might send her own heralds to proclaim the triumphal march of this Prince of Peace, first to his throne and then to his cross, and to adorn the divine pageant.

Astronomy that had mapped out the pathway of the stars hurried through unmeasurable space her own glorious courier that he might convey the pilgrims to the manger, and on the natal morn led the orchestra of heaven in the divine anthem, "Glory to God in the highest."

Gravitation, until now jealous of her exclusive empire over air and water, tenacious of her mastery over storms and tides, lays a pathway over the deep that the footprints of the incarnate God might for all time to come hallow the blue waters of Galilee. Chemistry, the youngest of the sisterhood at the behest of the Great Physician, sent its life-giving oxygen into the collapsed lungs of Jairus's daughter, and turned water into wine at the wedding feast in Cana.

Geology tore asunder her stratified rocks and loosed the iron cerements that coffined her realm that pilloried in shame, the hills and valleys and chasms might groan with audible anguish when the bleeding, gasping, dying Messiah cried "It is finished."

The tree that bears the choicest fruit stands continually in the sunshine, without which the fruit can never evenly ripen and mature. Brother Herring's "Disturbing Element."

Dr. Pritchard, writing in Charity and Children of last week about Bro. Herring's ill-advised work, says with much point:

"It strikes me as not a little unfortunate that just at this juncture when we want all our strength brought to bear upon the Centennial movement, this disturbing element should be introduced among our churches."

But why let it be introduced among them? It is not necessary. Our pastors can keep it out, and ought to do so. I certainly propose to keep it out of the church here, and also out of the Mt. Zion Association, if possible. Hardly any church would suffer it to come in over the pastor's vigorous protest, and our pastors can keep it out of the Associations. So if this disturbing element comes in anywhere, the pastors will be largely responsible for the evil consequences. Whatever may be said to the credit of Bro. Herring, he is not loyal to our mission work, and should not be recognized otherwise than as unfriendly to it. Suppose that when Gen. Grant was organizing his "On to Richmond" campaign, or when Gen. Lee was preparing for his advance into Pennsylvania, and was striving through all possible channels of influence to rally to his place in the ranks every soldier belonging to his army, some captain, who had abandoned without leave his command at some distant post, had appeared in either camp full of the conceit that he knew more about the business than anybody else, and that the whole plan of organization and warfare was a mistake, and had set about the work of disaffecting the companies and regiments and persuading them to break themselves up into guerrilla bands and go out and fight according to their own notions of time and place and method—what would have been the result? He would have been shot in less than twenty-four hours for desertion and disloyalty. And what would have been thought of the captain who would have permitted this man to lay before his company his disloyal sentiments and propositions? And is it hard to guess how severe the censure would have been had he called his company together and coolly and deliberately invited him to do so? The application is easily made. Is such conduct any less criminal in the army of the Lord? It is painful to cast the imputation upon Bro. Herring; but that is the real attitude in which he stands before our people. Nor will it avail for him to insist that he is better prepared to form correct opinions than others. Granting, for the argument, that to be true; it yet remains as a fact well known that the wisest are not always in command. Many men who carried muskets in the armies alluded to knew much better how things ought to have been done than some who wore the shoulder straps and carried swords. But patriotism, ardent love of the cause, led them to put their own judgments aside and make the fight, even unto death, on the plans already adopted. They knew full well that the campaign being opened, there was no time for reorganization and change of plans. Far better had it been for Bro. Herring's reputation, usefulness and memory as a missionary, if his love for the cause had prompted him to take the same view of the situation, even from his own standpoint, and bravely remain at his post as the noble Bryan is heroically doing. The Scriptural injunction, "Let every soul be subject unto the higher powers," applies in religious as well as in civil life. Love for the Lord's work should keep us all at it whether it be going on according to our notions of propriety or not.

These are my views respecting "this disturbing element," and this is my notion as to the proper disposition of it. Keep it out at all hazards. J. L. CARROLL.

LOVE OF THE WORLD.

"Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world."

I would say, by using a great-big word, that worldly-mindedness is the prevailing sin among the Lord's people of the present day. A great many christians act as though they expected to tabernacle in this country "forevermore, world without end." The world and all that is in it wouldn't satisfy some folks. I reckon the things of this world will satisfy the soul about as well as a big drink of salt water would allay thirst. This world is a splendid thing in its place, but I am pretty certain it is too big for a christian to carry to heaven. When I was a little shaver, I looked at the pictures in a book my good father had. "Religious Emblems" was the name of the book, and among the pictures that made an impression on my mind was one which showed a poor fellow carrying the world in his right hand and dragging a cross in his left hand. With such an outfit he had set out for heaven. I didn't believe then, and don't yet, that he ever got there, as I think there was a very big smash-up on the way by the world's rolling over him and crushing him to pieces. The word of the Lord says, "Ye can not serve God and mammon." Most of the people would be very anxious to get to heaven if they could take the world along too, and if such people could get there they would be greatly dissatisfied. I guess many of them would think much about pocketing the gold and other valuable things of that glorious place. Many church-members, judging from their talk and actions, seem to have about all their interest in this world, and if they have any claim in that "better country," they don't appear to place a very high estimate upon it, or they would talk about it more. "Out of the fullness of the heart, the mouth" is very apt to speak. Some brethren are much bent on chasing the dollar in order to gratify the desires of their nigh neighbor, Mr. Self; they believe in working all they can and keeping all they can. Mr. Wesley said, "Make all you can, save all you can, and give all you can." Sometimes you can find a member of a church who is a "regular skinner" and a first-class "nickel trap" accuse some brother across the way as being very covetous. A right covetous man generally wants the people to believe that he don't have any special fondness for the "filthy lucre." A man with a big beam in his own eye can see a mote in his brother's eye, and how big the mote does look to him!

If a preacher wants to please the people, he must keep his mouth shut about money. Some preachers, who never preach against the sin of covetousness and the duty of christian giving of their means to the Lord's cause, growl very much about their churches not giving them a decent support. A good preaching brother told me one day that his preaching always brought the money, and he was made to believe that he was doing the Lord's work, and that preacher comes down on the sin of covetousness with a vim. Some preachers say they don't want any money for preaching, and I don't believe they ought to have any, for their preaching is so sorry it is not worth paying for. I would hate to offer one of that sort a piece of money if I didn't want him to take it, for I tell you he would pocket it as quick as a chicken would swallow a grain of corn. Some people carry their heart in their pocket book, and a minister can preach about heaven and the like, and some such people may get very happy and shed tears as big as grapes; but just let the preacher mention money and they will look as though they had been eating crab-apples. Shoddy goods are not much profit, so is cheap religion. If religion don't get the whole man, pocket-book and all, it is not of much account. A christian should realize that the goods of this world in his possession don't belong to him, but are loaned to him by the Lord, and he should be willing for the Lord to draw on him at any time, whether it be for one-tenth, one-half, or all. The Lord knows his business, and his Spirit is to guide us into all truth. We should rejoice that the Lord has given us the exalted privilege of worshiping him by giving of our means, whether little or much in proportion as he prospers us. A christian who does not give at least one tenth of his income to the Lord's cause, is falling short of his duty.

Most of the preachers in our country get very small salaries, but some preachers as well as other sinners think a vast deal of the things and pleasures of this world. I have seen some ministers who seemed to place most of their mind upon the things pertaining to this "low ground of sorrow." The word of the Lord says, "Set your affection on things above, not on the things of earth." There can not be any union between the love of the world and the love of God, as they are in direct opposition to each other. The cross of Christ and the world are not friendly; therefore they can not be companions. The world seems to get the mastery of us many times, as there is a great deal of "Old Adam" belonging to us.

To love the world is to have our mind placed upon the pleasures, &c., more than things above, and to take a deeper and greater interest in things earthly than in things heavenly. We as followers of the Lord Jesus must be in the world yet not of the world; must be busily engaged in the duties required of us during our sojourn here, but must not let our mind be absorbed by them; engaging in its innocent pleasures, but not to be ensnared by them. Young christians as well as older ones should not let their minds run out too much after the amusements and pleasures of this world. There are several things they can not engage in—such as drinking wine or strong drink, theatre going, dancing, playing cards, &c. Some think a christian should not engage in playing croquet, base-ball and such like; the danger in these things is getting too big a craze for them. A person has no right to waste too much of his time in sport; but if he needs exercise, an out-door game is very well. Some people condemn innocent amusements, but seem to think it is all right to sit around stores and other places, and tell smutty jokes. "Foolish jesting" is to be avoided.

We as christians expect to spend eternity in heaven, and I think it is our duty to "lay up our treasures" there in our permanent home. We ought to "endure as seeing him who is invisible. While we look not at the things which are seen, but at the things which are not seen: for the things which are seen are temporal, but the things which are not seen are eternal."

A blind or deaf man has infinitely more reason to deny the being, or the possibility of the being, of light or sounds, than an atheist can have to deny or doubt of the existence of God.—Clarke.

Try to keep clear of prejudice, and be willing to alter any opinion you may hold when further light breaks upon your mind. Be not clever beyond precedent, or weak beyond measure, who never sees reasons to change his judgment of men and things.—Dearworth.

The Biblical Recorder.

WEDNESDAY, JULY 27, 1892.

REV. C. T. BAILEY, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.
J. C. CADDELL, AGENT AND CORRESPONDENT.

OVERDONE

In our cursory reading we lately came across the name of a distinguished preacher of another denomination with such a display of titles before and after his name that we have been led to look into the matter of preachers bearing titles to that extent, that we are forced to the conclusion that the thing is largely overdone. That our readers may see for themselves the aforesaid array of titles we will give them, in connection with the convenient name "Smith," which in this case certainly refers to no member of the large and honorable family that bears that name. Here it is: Rt. Rev. Theophilus Balfour Smith, D. D., S. T. D., LL. D. We are pretty sure our readers will agree with us in saying, after they have read the above string of titles with the full name of the party bearing them, "overdone." A rather critical mood strikes us sometimes, and we are rather inclined here to pass a string of criticisms upon such a string of titles.

How about Rt. (Right) before Rev? There are quite a number of sensible brethren who object to Rev. before the minister's name, preferring what they claim as a more biblical title, "Elder." We admit that we have never been specially partial to the title "Rev.," but have submitted to it as gracefully as possible. We can but be a little amused to think of the amazement and worry that beset the aforesaid sensible brethren when they occasionally see, in the current religious literature of the day, such a name as the above with such a string of titles. But honestly, while accepting "Rev." we must ask what need is there of such words as Right, or Very, before Reverend? If a man is "reverend," is it not enough to call him such? Do those who place such titles before preachers' names mean to imply that they are more reverend than ordinary preachers? Such words before Rev. smack strongly of pride and ecclesiastical conceit. It is rather a matter of surprise to some how men of undoubted ability can consent to such superfluous words before their names.

And how about the full name—Theophilus Balfour Smith? There may be times in a man's life when his full name should be given. When in infancy he receives his name, and it is recorded in the family Bible, it is proper that it should be given in full. When he graduates at college, is married, or dies, it is again eminently proper that his name should be given in full. But we respectfully submit that the age is too fast, and we have to read too many things that make us "tired," to be under the necessity of reading the full name of any man every time we see it in print.

How about the D. D.? We must touch lightly here, for our over-indulgent friends insisted on bestowing this title, years ago, on the editor of this paper; and we have been trying, as best we can, to measure up to the dignity which the title demands since receiving it, whilst admitting that worthy brethren can be found who question its scripturalness. We must admit further that we sometimes question whether ministers should bear more than one title, and we are decided in saying that such an array as occurs in connection with the above name is altogether superfluous. D. D. and LL. D. after a minister's name ought to be sufficient; but to add S. T. D. is certainly overdoing the title business. These letters are an abbreviation of the Latin words Sacræ Theologiæ Professor, which may be translated Professor, or Doctor of Divinity, or more literally, Doctor of Sacred Theology. The brethren who bestow this title with the D. D. seem disposed to assert more than once that the bearer is a D. D., or that he is master of a more sacred kind of theology than the ordinary run of preachers.

"Overdone," then, must be the verdict of a thoughtful public. Verily, the age for faded religious aristocracy and theological coddling has passed, and if those who are so exceedingly fond of bestowing titles upon those who are regarded important church functionaries do not wish to make themselves and those on whom they bestow them ridiculous in the opinion of an enlightened and progressive people, let them be a little more chary in bestowing them.

REV. J. M. HILLIARD declined to allow his name to go before the Trustees at Thomasville last week for re-election as Treasurer of the Orphanage. Bro. Hilliard made a most faithful and efficient Treasurer during the past year.

EDITORIAL PETS.

The relation of the editor of a religious paper to the ministers of the State, or territory from which he draws his patronage, is peculiar in some respects. Considering the manner in which these faithful men often work for the paper he edits, and how they back the editor in his efforts to extend its circulation, considering the constant messages they send him, and he sends them, with the fraternal spirit existing between them, that relation is quite similar, in some respects, to that existing between a father and his family. On this account we consider it in rather bad taste and of questionable policy for an editor to show plainly that he has pets among the ministers who patronize his paper and give their influence to its circulation. It is certainly unwise for a father to have pets in his family, and bestow more marked attention on some of his children than upon others. Jacob's partiality for Joseph of old was the cause of much trouble to him and to his household, though there was possibly more excuse for it than can be found in christian households of today. The father at heart may possibly love some one of his children better than others because of an obedient spirit, superior attainments or superior gifts, but he ought to have tact and heart enough to keep his preferences to himself, and not offend or disgust the other members of his family by a marked exhibition of the same.

The RECORDER would doubtless be more popular with some ministers who are its patrons if it would spend more time in praising and petting a few favorites, scattered here and there over the State from which it draws most of its patronage. We freely admit that there are some ministers more gifted than others. There are some whose influence and good will are worth more to the paper than others; and there are others who are so prominent in denominational work that their names necessarily appear more frequently in these columns than those of other worthy and good men who are faithful toilers in the Master's vineyard. But it is equally true that the RECORDER, under the present management at least, has never gone into the petting or puffing business, and it does not propose to do so.

We wish we could say as much of some of our cotemporaries. It is positively nauseating to read in some of these the constant mention and the fulsome praise of their pets. Of course, any editor, in his column of "Personals," will from time to time mention by name, and in even a complimentary manner, some of the faithful and successful preachers of the gospel; but there is a well-defined limit within which this thing should stop. Do our editors who have their pets among ministers or laymen ever remember that if only those whom they are so fond of praising worked for them or their papers that they would soon be among those who had failed in making a success of the religious paper.

It is manifestly unjust to ask the great mass of ministers who support a paper to work faithfully for it, and then let them see that their labors are not appreciated, or that they have a small place in the editor's heart, when he exhausts his praise and bestows special notice upon the few, some of whom actually leave to others the pushing of the work that adds to his patronage. The editor, then, who forgets or ignores the persons or the work of the humbler brethren whose patronage and influence are given to him and his paper, does not show the heart and soul that the man who fills his place should possess. Such a spirit is like that shown by the city dude who dodges around the street corner to avoid meeting his "country aunt." He may save his social standing, as he supposes, and his white hands from a sturdy grasp; but he only incurs the contempt of sensible spectators who witness his want of manliness and moral courage.

AIM AT RESULTS.

On May 28th, A. D. 30, at a great gathering of Baptists in the city of Jerusalem, Elder Simon Peter preached a powerful sermon on the crucifixion of Christ, and the same day there were added unto them about three thousand souls.

At the Central Association in Georgia in 1828, Elder Adiel Sherwood preached a great sermon, and about four thousand people were converted, among whom were John E. Dawson and his wife.

Many years ago in Wales, at a Baptist Association, Elder John Elias preached a rousing sermon, and about twenty-five hundred were added to the churches in that vicinity.

The Associations will begin to meet next week. Let the brethren in preaching, in speaking, in writing reports, and in planning for work at the Associations this year, aim at results.

FROM OUR TRAVELLING AGENT.

ANNUAL MEETING OF THE ORPHANAGE AT THOMASVILLE.

The writer reached Thomasville at eleven o'clock Tuesday night. The Trustees met on Tuesday morning and re-elected Bro. Mills as general manager; and upon the resignation of Bro. Hilliard, Bro. S. H. Hall of Yadkin county was elected to act as Treasurer for the ensuing year.

There were hardly as many present this year as last, owing, it may be, to the fact that crops are later this year, and farmers are busy harvesting wheat and finishing up other crops.

The train on which Dr. Jacobs was to have reached the Orphanage—9:30 a. m.—was detained till 2 p. m.; so the Doctor and Bro. Montgomery changed places on the program as to the time of delivering their addresses. The address of Bro. Montgomery ought to be printed. The preparation of such an address costs much hard and patient labor, and on this account it contains much thought that is rich, invigorating and abiding. Before taking up his subject, "Charity as taught in the New Testament," he dwelt at some length upon the abuse and misuse of the term as practiced by different ecclesiastical bodies during the earlier portion of the world's history, and thus having fortified himself by a splendid array of historical facts, he proceeded to show us "a more excellent way." From this point to the close of the address the speaker stood by the Book, and in language warm and chaste commended charity as Christ taught it and as Baptists believe it.

After dinner Dr. Jacobs arrived, and the large arbor was again crowded to listen to his speech, which was the closing exercise of the day. Dr. Jacobs' speech, which was devoted first to the duty we owe the orphan in providing him a home, and then his support, and the development of his moral and christian character, was listened to with the closest interest by the entire audience.

Dr. Jacobs' face at once impresses you with the purity of his character, the goodness of his heart and the earnest purpose he has in his work.

I was glad to see so many of the people who live in this immediate section present at this meeting. Their presence and their baskets, which always come well filled, attest the interest which they feel in the institution.

I see from a correspondent in the State Chronicle that he urges that the legislature ought to donate $5,000 to the Orphanage at Thomasville. Without any question this correspondent has the good of the Orphanage at heart. Yet there is hardly a Baptist in the State who would not oppose the taking of five cents at the hands of the State to carry on this orphanage work. Other denominations can do as they choose about using State aid to carry on the orphanage work, but as for the Baptists I feel very safe in saying we want none of it in ours.

CHAPEL HILL.

This was my first visit here in the interest of the RECORDER. I found everybody enjoying the rest which is so restful to a college town in the vacation season. The cool shade, of which there is a great abundance, and the splendid water, are objects of much interest here just now. I met quite a good number of Wake Forest boys here taking the summer course in law. Dr. Manning tells me this is one of the best sessions he has yet had.

I found Dr. Carroll in his usual good spirits. He made my stay on the Hill pleasant indeed, and notwithstanding the extreme hot weather, he went around with me to see all the brethren, and as a result I got a number of new subscribers, which I greatly appreciated.

DURHAM.

After waiting at University Station two hours for a delayed train, I reached Durham in time to begin the last of my work for the week. The new hotel is now well under way, and the travelling public are looking forward with no little interest to the time when it will be ready for use. I understand the building will, all told, cost some $25,000 or $30,000. Business here as elsewhere is very quiet. Durham has recently had three or four large excursions, and this has taken away a large amount of money which would otherwise have gone to help along business.

The Durham brethren of the First Baptist church have for many years been most fortunate in securing first-rate men for pastor of their church. I was there but a short while before I found that the same good fortune had been theirs in the calling of Bro. Tyree, the present pastor. Brethren Albright, Reams, and a number of others, told me the church was entirely satisfied, and that his sermons were on the very highest order, and that his work as a pastor was just such as the church loved and greatly needed. After spending a short while at the parsonage and hearing him talk, and seeing the kind of woman he has for his mother, I was not surprised at the flattering accounts given me by the brethren. Earnest, faithful, and conservative, under him the cause in Durham will go steadily and safely on.

WAKE FOREST.

I was glad to meet Dr. Taylor, who is just home from a few days rest at Nag's Head. We all feel better at the evidences of renewed strength and helpful rest which this recreation has produced, and very much sympathize with him as he takes charge of the "peck" of letters which awaited his return.

Dr. Taylor, or some member of the faculty, will attend all the Associations possible in the interest of the College. If the crop should turn out as well as the prospect now would indicate, we shall have quite a large number of new students in the fall.

Every Baptist in North Carolina, who has a son to send to College, ought to send him to Wake Forest. This ought to be, because, in the first place, there is nothing to be gained in point of opportunity for securing better facilities or more thorough instruction in the State than we get here at our own College. Then, too, the College is strong in proportion to the extent of its patronage; a great number of true, loyal men who love and work for the prosperity of a College is, after all, its greatest and best source of strength. The greater the number of our Baptist people who patronize and sustain the College, the greater power will the College become and the greater will be the influence of every man who has ever graduated, or who may graduate there in the years to come. In view of this, let us not only urge our young men to go to college, but let us see to it that they go to Wake Forest College.

....Rev. C. A. G. Thomas, of Elizabeth City, has been unanimously called to the pastorate of the Greensboro church, and has accepted the call.

....This is the year for every pastor to preach from Rev. 21: 8—"All liars shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone."

....Rev. A. T. Robertson is spending the present month in rest and study at his home in Iredell county. We are glad to hear that Bro. Robertson is enjoying good health.

....Rev. O. P. Meeks went down to Warsaw Monday to administer the ordinance of baptism to a number of candidates for church membership.—Clinton Caucasian, 21.

....Bro. Hildreth writes us that he is getting along well with his work at Point Caswell. Bro. A. T. Howell is preaching for him at a revival at that place this week.

....There are forty Baptist Associations connected with the Baptist State Convention. The Central, Pilot Mountain and Richmond County Associations will hold their annual sessions next week.

....Emory Storrs said well, "When hell drops out of a man's thinking, morality drops out of his politics." And he might have added out of his practice.—Western Recorder.

....Mrs. Dr. Wm. Royall, who had been in feeble health for the last year, died at her home in Wake Forest Sunday morning. Further notice of her death will appear in our next issue.

....Politics seem to be making God's people forget about the extension of his kingdom. Receipts of Foreign Mission Board less than last year to same time. The Lord's work to the front!

....Prof. John B. Brewer, president of Murfreesboro Baptist Female Institute, was elected last week a trustee of the Orphanage to fill out the unexpired term of Hon. Reuben McBrayer, deceased.

....Rev. A. T. Howell of Southport writes us that he had a gracious meeting at Lebanon church, the week ending July 18th. Fifteen members were received into the church. Rev. J. H. Hildreth aided in the meeting.

....Rev. Geo. W. Harmon, pastor of the Baptist church at Monroe, began a protracted meeting at that place, Sunday, the 17th. Since last Sunday he has been assisted by Bro. Gwaltney of the church at Wake Forest.

....Bro. J. R. Thomson, of Keith, N. C., desires a position as assistant teacher in some good school. Bro. Thomson has spent two years at Wake Forest and would be an able assistant to any one needing help.

....Rev. Livingston Johnson addressed a card through the Wadesboro Messenger and Intelligencer last week to the Baptist churches of the Anson Association strongly urging the union of the Richmond and Anson Associations.

....Institutes for the colored preachers have been held at Elizabeth City, Weldon, Newbern and Charlotte. These Institutes are held under the auspices of our Board of Missions. Let each pastor take one collection for this work.

....Brethren Blanchard and Oliver held a very interesting and profitable revival at Salem church near Apex, last week. Many were saved and the church greatly revived. Bro. Oliver should rejoice at the growth of the interest there under his management.

....The "address" of Dr. Yates published in Bro. Bostick's tract was delivered before the Shanghai Missionary Conference, mainly Pedobaptists, to correct the mistakes of the Pedobaptists in mission work. It did not have reference to our Baptist work.

....Rev. J. B. Marsh, pastor of Mt. Grove Baptist church, called in to see us Monday on his way home from his regular monthly appointment at that place. He has been in feeble health for sometime and we were glad to see him looking better.—Hickory Mercury.

....In 1855 the missionaries of the Board in the State Mission work were Elders R. B. Jones at Charlotte, A. D. Blackwood at Wadesboro, J. J. James at Goldsboro, Haynes Lennon at Lumberton, W. M. Wingate at Franklinton, W. T. Brooks at Henderson, and others in the country.

....Rev. W. L. Wright preached morning and night to large audiences at Leigh street. His Sunday-school numbered about 600. He will take his vacation in August. Rev. J. D. Hart will supply his pulpit. There were seventy baptisms in Leigh Street church during the last associational year.—The Baptist.

....Rev. A. E. Owen of Portsmouth has been preaching two series of sermons, one on the Doctrines of the Baptist, and the other on the Ten Commandments, before large congregations. He will preach two more sermons on each series. We were glad to hear of the good condition of his church.

....The views of mission work now advocated by brethren Bostick and Herring are the views about which Dr. Yates, in a letter to the Foreign Mission Board, dated Shanghai, China, June 1st, 1880, said: "I have discussed the peculiar views with Dr. Crawford more than once, and rejected them as absurd for Central China Missions."

....The "address" of Dr. Yates, re-published in this paper a few weeks ago by Bro. Herring's request, and published by Bro. Bostick in his tract, is the same that Dr. Crawford had published in the RECORDER in February, 1880. But Dr. Yates, on June 1st, 1880, said: "Dr. Crawford had no authority to quote me as supporting his views."

....Rev. Dr. Arthur T. Pierson, writing to the Metropolitan Tabernacle Church from on board ship, says: "If he who has so wonderfully led us all thus far should clearly turn my face to you again it will give me only happiness once more to 'abide and continue with you for your furtherance and joy of faith.'" Dr. Pierson was called to the Tabernacle last week.

....In the letter of the Baptist Standard, a Kentuckian urges the Texas Baptists in the newspaper matter to remember the motto of the State of Kentucky, "United we stand, divided we fall." But how is a preacher who thinks he has not been sufficiently praised in a paper to "get even," except by starting a cheaper paper?—Western Recorder.

....Rev. C. A. G. Thomas, of Elizabeth City, N. C., preached at the Baptist church here last Sunday morning and night. Both sermons were good, logical and food for saint and sinner. His style is easy, articulation good, illustrations apt, somewhat of an orator and may truly be called one of our greatest preachers both physically and mentally. Those who have heard him here say they are not surprised at his wonderful success in Elizabeth City since hearing him preach.—Piedmont Herald.

....Warsaw church has had a gracious revival. Rev. C. A. Jenkens aided the pastor. Nine were added to the church.

....Rev. J. M. Bridges, assisted by Rev. Charles Durham, of this place, began a second revival meeting at McAdensville last Saturday closing Tuesday evening. On Sunday seven converts were baptized and eight more on Tuesday. There are several others to be baptized at the next meeting. Mr. Bridges, assisted by Rev. J. L. Sproles, will begin a meeting at Ross's Grove tomorrow.—Shelby Review, of the 22d.

....An Episcopal preacher, being called upon to open a political convention with prayer, was troubled by the fact that there was no prayer in his book for that sort of meeting. Finally he concluded that the prayer which came nearest to his needs was a prayer for those at sea. And those who have attended such meetings will see some fitness if the prayer in the prayer-book has any reference in it to storms.—Western Recorder.

....A brother writes us that Dr. T. P. Crawford was at the Southern Baptist Convention at Fort Worth, Texas, in 1890, and that he heard him talk there in a tent. We have looked very carefully over the minutes of that year and fail to find the name of Dr. Crawford among the delegates, or visitors, or in the minutes in anyway. We never heard of Dr. Crawford being in this country except in 1886.

....The report of the Board of Missions to the Convention in 1854 said: "State Missions is the foundation of every other benevolent enterprise, and upon its success depends in a great degree that of Foreign Missions and Education." The writer of this report was N. J. Palmer, a prominent lawyer of Milton, a man of great usefulness, and who died only five days before the Convention met before which his report was presented.

....At 11 o'clock Monday morning (18th) ground was broken for the handsome new building of the Baptist church at the corner of Maine and Spring streets. Brief ceremonies were performed and were witnessed by quite a number of members of the congregation and others. Rev. J. S. Hardaway, pastor, offered a prayer, asking the blessings of God on the work, and Rev. R. I. Devin, founder of the Oxford church, threw the first spadeful of dirt.—Oxford Ledger.

Rev. H. C. Horner and Rev. W. A. Barrett, called to see us last week, they are on their way to Peace's Chapel church four miles west of Kittrels, where they will spend a few days in a protracted meeting. Bro. Horner is pastor of the church. The brethren expect to work in meetings at the following places: Peace's Chapel church, Granville county; Arbor church, Vance county; and Deep Creek and Flint Hill churches, Moore county. Bro. Horner is one of the students of Wake Forest College and quite promising as a preacher of the gospel.

....Another Baptist newspaper has ended its days. The Chronicle, of Kansas City, has suspended publication, and has delivered its effects, with its good will, into the hands of the proprietor of the Central Baptist, St. Louis. The Chronical lived for two and a half years. It was ably edited by Rev. C. H. De Wolf. The proprietors spent several thousand dollars, and struggled hard to build up upon this field a newspaper which should equal in ability and worth other great Baptis newspapers which come to us from the East. But failure has now for the third time come to such an attempt. Who will be the next man willing to pay for newspaper experience?—Cor. Examiner.

The Next Session of the Theological Seminary.

It is a question of the gravest importance to many a young minister in North Carolina right now whether he ought not to spend the year following in theological study at Louisville, Ky. More dedends upon it than merely the question of a few more years in school as a finishing off of one's education. What every young minister needs now is a thorough acquaintance with the Bible. Now, a few years in the Seminary will not teach you everything in the Bible, unless you have as loose a hold upon religion as the Unitarian preacher who said he had long ago finished preaching everything in the Bible. Our troubled times need not new prophets and new revelations, but earnest, consecrated preachers, with a real and hence a fresh hold upon God's truth. A Seminary course will break up the ground and open the field for systematic and effective study of the Scriptures. Young ministers who have finished their course of College study and who are thinking of going at once into the pastorate would do well to ponder whether their usefulness will not be diminished if they deprive themselves of such a course of training. Others who are already settled in active pastoral work should consider whether after all they cannot do as others have done who have resigned their charges or obtained a leave of absence for eight months and spend it in hard work in Louisville.

At this distance from October 1, the outlook is for an even larger attendance than was the phenomenal one of last session. I hear of many yonng men of talent and consecration from North Carolina, who will spend the next year at the Seminary. I write this in the hope that it may lead others of the two classes mentioned above to weigh the matter seriously. Even a wife and family are not insuperable obstacles, as they can be provided for in the city or with relatives at home.

Those who need financial aid should write to Dr. W. H. Whitsitt, who will pay the board of those who need it. Catalogues can be obtained from A. D. Almond.

May the Seminary become a mighty factor for good for North Carolina Baptists in training many other ministers for great usefulness and devotion to the cause of Christ.

The Baptist Young People's Union of America.

THIS LODY HELD ITS FIRST ANNUAL CONVENTION IN DETROIT, MICH., JULY 14—17, 1892—WHAT WAS SAID AND DONE—CAN THE SOUTH BE IN IT?

Dear Recorder:—Your readers have doubtless heard something of the national organization of our Baptist young people known as the B. Y. P. U., and will perhaps be interested in some account of what was said and done at the International Convention recently held at Detroit. After an interesting travel of about 700 or 750 miles going from New Brunswick, N. J., by way of New York, Buffalo, Rochester, Niagara Falls, Paris and London in Canada, in company with delegates from New York, Connecticut, Illinois and other States, I reached Detroit on the day on which the Convention began, and remained till the close, and can therefore say something of what was said and done. The delegates from this section seemed to be of the right kind. As we journeyed along in full view of the beautiful Hudson river, Catskill mountains, lake Erie, lake Ontario and lake St. Clair, all on board joined in hymns of praise to the Creator and Preserver of all, and in earnest prayers for God's presence and blessing to be manifest in the Convention to which we were going. The delegates in all who were present in Detroit numbered about 5,000. It was indeed an inspiring sight to see five thousand young Baptist people assembled from many States of the Union and from many parts of Canada for the purposes of this Convention. The objects of this organization of Baptist young people as outlined by the printed constitution and other publications are as follows: The unification of Baptist young people; their increase in spirituality; their stimulation in christian services; their edification in Scripture knowledge; their instruction in Baptist history, and their enlistment in missionary activity through existing denominational organization.

The following States have formed State Unions and were represented by delegates and banners in the Convention: Maryland, New York, Connecticut, Massachusetts, California, Iowa, Illinois, Rhode Island, Texas, Pennsylvania, Arkansas, Nebraska, Oregon, Ohio, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Washington, New Jersey, North and South Dakota, Indiana, also, Indian Territory, District of Columbia, Canada, and possibly others that I do not now recall.

Dr. Lansing Burrows spoke for Georgia and some other States that have no State organization of Baptist young people, and named the Stars and Stripes as their banner. This created great enthusiasm. The leaders of different States were with the banners and colors of the respective States by young ladies dressed in white escorted to the platform, where, as the roll call of the States was heard, short reports were made by the different leaders of the condition of Baptist affairs in the States which they represented with reference to the young people. Space will not permit of my giving even a brief outline of their short talks, and I can do no more than mention some of the subjects that were discussed by the Convention in its different services.

Rev. Kerr B. Tupper, D. D., of Denver, Col., spoke on "The Supreme Mission of Baptists." "The Educational Possibilities of the Baptist Young People's Movement" in three addresses were presented by Rev. John D. Humpstone, D. D., Brooklyn, N. Y., Rev. E. E. Chivers of Buffalo, N. Y., and by Rev. R. G. Boville, Hamilton, Ont. Rev. D. D. McLaurin of New York City spoke on "The Baptist Young People's Union of America: its Principles and its Mission." Others spoke on "The New Century of Missions," and Rev. J. B. Gambrill of Meridian, Miss., pleased the audience greatly with an address on "Young People and the Stewardship of Money." Others spoke on "Systematic Benevolence," "Young People and Home Missions," "Young People and Foreign Missions," and the veteran missionary hero of India, Rev. John E. Clough, and other missionaries present, made short addresses.

The most important work of this movement is represented in the educational scheme to be found in the weekly symposium found in the official paper of the movement. It aims to educate the young Baptists of the country in the Bible and its collateral history. This scheme is a very practical one, and, when fully understood, must please all the people. For it must be confessed that there is but little systematic work of this nature done by the young people of our churches, and that as a result of the loose methods or absence of any method of instruction of this kind, there is great weakness, not to say ignorance among us as to Baptist doctrine and history. This work, and the great emphasis laid apon loyalty to the New Testament, will, if I mistake not, commend itself to all Southern Baptists.

And I wish here to call attention to this important fact, that there were no women speakers on the program of this Convention, and the new Board of Managers are all men. The Detroit papers came out with big head lines announcing the fact that the women were not in it, when the fact became known. It looked like an effort on the part of these papers to excite some feeling on the subject, but the effort failed. I give it as my opinion that if our Southern men would come more freely into such movements of our Northern people and quietly make their sentiments and convictions on this and kindred subjects known, the little leaven would soon leaven the whole lump. But this must be done with discretion and tact. This being the case, is it not unwise to stand aloof from Northern conventions and movements of this national and international character? Is it not the duty of our Southern men and churches to be in these movements for the good they can do, in the way of rectifying some things that they may deem improper? But I think that there will be, and already is, a call for great charity and tolerance of honest convictions that may differ from those that we may hold dear. Dr. Gambrill of Mississippi, in his address, said the South was coming in, and would take a through ticket, and "would endorse the omen religiously and otherwise." How about that statement from Dr. Gambrill? Dr. Lansing Burrows of Augusta, Dr. J. B. Eager and Dr. Tupper, three other distinguished Southern men, were active in the Convention, but they said nothing of that kind. One Southern man (I did not learn his name) spoke of the prejudice in his section against women taking part in public meetings, and asked the Convention to pray that this prejudice of the South might be broken down. The Convention did not hear the request, and I for one am glad it did not. That was the most disagreeable reference that was made during the whole Convention to the existing state of affairs in the South, and I am ashamed to say, was made by a man who claimed to be a Southerner. The leaders of the movement do not appreciate such references, and after talking with the General Secretary, who is the editor also of the official organ of the movement, I am convinced of the fact that his sympathies are to some extent with the Southern view of this woman question. This is encouraging. The South can consistently and heartily endorse and come into this young people's movement. It will be for the good of both the North and the South to have them do so.

A question box was established during the Convention, and some one asked this question, which was never satisfactorily answered: "If the Creator intended women to be public speakers, why did he not give them a suitable voice?"

By a resolution reported by Bro. Geo. B. Eager of Montgomery, Ala., chairman of committee on resolutions, and adopted by the Convention, a district secretary will be employed during the coming year to enlist all the Southern States in the B. Y. P. U. A., and Dr. Burrows assured the Convention that in another year they would all be in it. It is a good thing. And now is the day of opportunity for the South to cave in and help to mould and fashion the character of those who are to be the leaders of the Baptist hosts of America and of the world in the years to come. In my humble judgment, the Christian Endeavor movement has been of incalculable benefit to the world, but this Baptist organization of young people has much more in it to recommend it to the Baptist people.

My communication is already too long, so I must close, though there remains much to be said, that some of your readers would be glad to hear. The Convention was enthusiastically Baptistic and full of the missionary spirit. It was good to be there.

M. V. MCDUFFIE.

Notice.

PLEDGES MADE AT THE SOUTHERN BAPTIST CONVENTION.

At a recent meeting of the Centennial Committee of the Southern Baptist Convention, I was appointed "Treasurer"; and the duty assigned me of collecting and paying over to the Boards the pledges made for the Centennial Fund by brethren at the Convention in Atlanta. Dr. Eaton turned over to me pledges made on scraps of paper and cards, amounting in all to $1,237. The list of large pledges taken down by the Secretary of the Convention he did not have, but thought it was in the Secretary's hands. I have written to Dr. Burrows, but he states that that list was turned over to the committee along with the scraps and cards. So I am unable to carry out fully the purpose of the committee, not being able to secure the list of pledges. I can only say that if brethren who made pledges will send me amounts they promised, carefully designating the object to which they wish the money given, I will carry out their wishes. In case they have paid these amounts through their church or State treasurers, a card notifying me of the fact will be acceptable. A circular letter will be sent to the brethren whose pledges I have in hand. T. P. BELL.

Baptist or Presbyterian?

Dear Recorder:—I know a Baptist church in North Carolina, in whose manual occurs the following sentences:

"The Standing Committee shall consist of the deacons and an equal number of members annually chosen, together with the pastor, clerk and treasurer. The Standing Committee will attend to all matters of discipline, visit parties who may be at variance, endeavor to reconcile and remove difficulties, and failing in this, shall invite the parties before the church, and shall present a statement of the case with their advice to the church. No case of discipline shall be brought before the church until it has first been considered by the Standing Committee."

The usual course of proceeding in this church is for the Standing Committee to try the case and recommend to the church what it ought to do, without submitting to the church any of the evidence in the case.

Now I want to know from Dr. William Royal, Dr. R. R. Overby, Dr. J. D. Hufham, Rev. J. T. Albritton and Dr. C. Durham, whether this church acts in accordance with the Scriptures and according to Baptist usage? Let us hear from you, brethren, promptly. T. H. PRITCHARD.

The Chowan Baptist Female Institute, under the efficient management of Bro. Jno. B. Brewer, will begin its next session on Sept. 14th. This well-known institution has enjoyed an unbroken and prosperous career for nearly half a century, sending out over two hundred graduates from its halls. Its past session was an exceedingly prosperous one, and during the time no case of serious sickness occurred. Its faculty is composed of teachers of proven merit, and in every way the Institution possesses the essentials of a first-class school. For further information, see advertisement in this issue.

The Eastern Association and Foreign Missions.

I have been informed that efforts will be made to induce the churches of the Eastern Association to co-operate with the advocates of the so-called "new departure" in Foreign Mission work.

Probably, a more important question will not come before our churches for several years to come. I have not time to write much about it, and what I may say in this article will not be said in defence of, or opposition to either the Foreign Mission Board or the missionary plan set forth in the prospectus issued and circulated by the brethren who have recently withdrawn from that Board; but I shall endeavor to answer the question—"Ought the Eastern Association to undertake the appointment and support of a missionary to China, sent out in accordance with the views set forth in the above prospectus?"

If we can do this work, in addition to the work we are doing now in co-operation with the Foreign Mission Board, it might be a wise thing to undertake it. But, can we take on this additional work without detriment to our other foreign work? I think not. Our contributions to the foreign work fall under $1,000 by several hundreds. How, then, can we hope to continue our present contributions to the general work and add thereto a sufficient amount to support a man engaged in this special work? It is evident that we cannot now hold on to the general work in co operation with the Board and, at the same time, carry on the special work suggested in the "new departure."

Therefore, to undertake this special work with any hope of success, we must cease to co-operate with the Board in their efforts to evangelize the nations, and must expend all our money that has hitherto been going to the support of our missionaries in Africa, Italy, Japan, Mexico, and other nations, upon this one special work in a small section of the interior of China. This being the case, I believe that our churches should continue to work in co operation with the Board, increasing, meanwhile, their missionary information, growing in prayerful earnestness, and enlarging their gifts to the cause of general evangelization.

The unwisdom of the Association's engaging to support a missionary working under this new plan is so manifest to my mind, that I feel it to be my duty to advise my brethren against the undertaking. True, Baptist churches are independent bodies and can do as they elect; but my faith in the practical good sense of the Baptists of the Eastern Association leads me to hope that they will continue to work according to the plans which are the outcome of the combined wisdom and experience of our consecrated fathers, and which have received the sanction of the great Head of the Church in the gracious results that have been accomplished under their working.

Do not forget the two principal reasons why I think the Association should not engage to support a missionary working under this new plan.

1st. We would have to withdraw from co operation with the Foreign Mission Board. Would it be wise to do this? The Board is composed of fallible men, and their plans may need amendment. If so, let us not withdraw from the Board or seek its distruction; but rather let us seek to correct and improve their plans, where correction and improvement are needed. Surely, the combined wisdom and piety of the Southern Baptist Convention are equal to the task.

2d. Another reason why the Association should not engage to support a missionary under this new plan is, that such engagement would involve the abandonment of all other foreign work and the concentration of all our contributions upon this special work and workers. For this reason, if for no other, I would oppose, as I did in 1884, at Pollocksville, the Association's appointment and support of a missionary to any foreign field. Whenever individuals or organizations are sufficiently strong to carry on the general work with this special work added, it may be wise to make the addition. But if the adoption of this special work compels withdrawal from the general work, such adoption would be, to my mind, a very unwise thing, even though it should be done in co-operation with the Foreign Mission Board, for the simple reason that the great command of our Redeemer, instead of retaining its world embracing significance, would mean, to us,—"Go ye into an insignificant area in China and preach my gospel to the dwellers therein." To abandon the general mission work which takes in, as we are able, "all the world," "all nations," and take up this special work, is to confine to a selfish, narrow scope of meaning the broad command of our Redeemer, and to deprive ourselves and our children of the educational and stimulating influences of the general work of the Southern Baptist Convention.

What I have written has been written in opposition to the oppointment, by the Eastern Association, of a missionary to China under the "new departure," and not in opposition to our seceding brethren or their plans as set forth in their prospectus. If any individuals or churches, strong enough to add to their general work this special work, desire to engage in the latter, let them do it, and may God bless them in it!

A Word from "Cashie."

Dear Recorder:—Please say to Rev. C. N. Donaldson that his abuse of my criticism is not argument. Neither is it maintaining the point he made.

I am "crank" enough to ask the brother to do so, and until he returns to the subject which I criticised and proves from the Book that the duty of deacons is to watch their pastor's face to remove every shadow of care from it, I shall give all my space in the RECORDER to matter of more importance than anything that has been contributed by either of us. CASHIE.

From Edenton, N. C.

Dear Bro. Bailey:—I have almost finished my second months' labor with the Edenton Baptist church, and feel very much encouraged at our progress in that time. Coming as I did, a stranger to the ministry and laity of North Carolina, I would have been inclined to feel just a little lonesome had it not been for the pressure of the work awaiting me—work which must necessarily arise where a church has been without a pastor for five months. But I feel that there is very little room for lonesomeness now; my members have spared no effort to make my wife and myself feel at home, and admirably have they succeeded.

We have added nine members to our church, and hold five letters for reception soon. Our congregations are large, at times testing the capacity of our church edifice; our prayer-meetings are well attended, and the interest we believe to be increasing, while we pray for greater results and nobler efforts.

On Sunday evening, July 17th, we had the privilege of hearing a fine sermon from Rev. R. T. Vann, the former pastor of this church, who is spending a few days with us visiting his many friends. A crowded house showed appreciation of past labor.

Hoping soon to meet other fellow-laborers, and asking the prayers of all for our success in Edenton, I close for this time.

From Iredell County.

Bro. J. D. Robertson, who has recently closed his second years study at Wake Forest, has, during the past week, preached seven sermons at this place, which, considering the fact that he has preached but a few times before, and has, as yet, had no theological training, were excellent, and well received by the people.

When we think of his completing the four-year course at College, and then the three years at the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, we can but look for a strong man in the forward ranks of the master's cause.

We are grieved that his health compels him to rest a while that he may be able to be with us in our protracted meetings at Society and Bethel churches, Iredell county, during August.

We have, during the past month, received six members at this place—two by letter, and four by baptism. Bro. Robertson's sermons have, we trust, been used of God to quicken the church to greater earnestness in christian work.

Bro. J. M. Ballard of Berea church this county, a short time since, met my appointments at Society church, and at Teague's school house in Rowan county, preaching very acceptably to them.

Bro. W. A. Wilson is ont again on crutches, having been laid up with an old affliction since the first of the year. W. J. H.

Rev. E. E. Blount Returns to North Carolina.

This brother came from the mountains of North Carolina to this State, and began work as pastor of Middleburg church for half his time on the fourth Sunday in May. The unusually hot weather of last month proved too great a shock to his health, which gave way, and compelled him to return to the cool climate of Western North Carolina. We give him up with sincere regret. He made a very fine impression on our people, and began his work with bright prospects of great usefulness in our midst.

His abilities as a preacher of the gospel, his consecration and zeal for the Master's cause were soon observed, and his services were in demand for the remainder of his time at McKinney. These two churches constitute a good field, and they give him up with much sorrow. We hope that it is the Lord's will to restore his health and send him back to us soon. W. J. WARD.

Stovall Baptist Church, Granville County, N. C.

This church has recently enjoyed a precious season of refreshing from the Lord. The meeting began on the second Sunday in July. Bro. J. H. Lamberth of Roxboro, N. C., did the preaching. He preached the Word simply, fervently, effectively. The Word preached was blest of God to the edification of christians, and the conversion of sinners. More than forty professed faith in Christ. About thirty were received for church membership, twenty-two were baptized. Persons from eight to seventy-eight years of age confessed Christ. Among the baptised were some of the best citizens of the county. God be praised.

Pilot Mountain View.

Dear Bro. Bailey:—I write you to say that the Pilot Mountain Association will meet with Shiloh church at Pinacle Station on Thursday, August 4th. Pinacle Station is the nearest point to reach the Pilot from the railroad. Professor Crutchfield's school is located here. This is the livest, most aggressive point on the C. F. & Y. V. railroad west of Greensboro. We desire a good delegation from abroad. We want the College and all the Boards well represented. Dr. Taylor, Rev. W. R. Gwaltney, Profs. Poteat and others will receive a cordial welcome. We would be glad to have a number of the brethren visit us. The RECORDER especially will meet a hearty welcome at our Association.

The Baptist cause in Winston is in a healthy condition. Bro. Brown seems to grow stronger as his pastorate becomes longer. It was my privilege to hear him preach on the communion question during my stay at home. In my judgment he preached the ablest and most convincing sermon on the subject I ever heard.

Dr. Broughton is having a good hearing at Broad Street. Our membership has very much increased, while the average attendance of our Sunday-school has nearly doubled.

Winston is on a great building boom. I suppose not less than two hundred new houses will be built during the year. Many very large buildings are being erected. More anon. Yours fraternally,

S. F. CONRAD.

JOS. T. WAFF, Clerk.

STATESVILLE, N. C., June 13, 1892.

Mr. John N. Webb, Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir:—For the past two years I have been a great sufferer from asthma, my first attack lasting five months, second eight months. Two of our best doctors did all they could for me, but could do me no good. I had been confined to my room and bed for about seven months, when a friend brought me an Electropoise, but my faith wasn't as large as a mustard seed, in fact I told my wife the next morning to take it back to your agent, that I would not use it, but after a considerable amount of begging, I consented to try it longer. Next morning our little boy five months old was taken very sick with bronchitis, so bad that he would not notice anything, and had a very high fever; I treated his bed according to your directions, and placed him in it, and in fifteen minutes his fever fell six degrees, and his pillow was wet with perspiration, slept nicely for an hour, awoke seemingly as bright as ever, next day as well as he ever was. Two of my neighbors' children were taken the same way, and were sick for two and three months. You may be sure that my faith was now as large as a mountain, and I went to using the Electropoise myself, and in two months I was well. I have often said to friends that asked me about it, it is a wonder of wonders. Please excuse this long letter, and if you think any part of it worth using, you are at liberty to do so. I have many acquaintances all over this country, and if any should see this, and need the Electropoise, I hope they will not hesitate but get one at once. Hoping the Electropoise Company may succeed far above their expectations, I am

Yours truly, THAD. W. SUMMERS.

REV DR. HAWTHORNE'S EXPERIENCE WITH GERMETUER.

"I am free from catarrh. I believe that I could get a certificate to this effect from any competent physician. I have used no medicine within the last six months except King's Royal Germetuer. My health is better than it has been in thirty years."

I was troubled with indigestion and blood poison in the form of pimples on my face. I took two bottles of King's Royal Germetuer and it cured me entirely. THOMAS G. HILL.

Nashville, Tenn., Oct. 31, 1891.

Rev. M. H. Wells, of Birmingham, writes "that daughter and I were cured of neuralgia and rheumatism by the use of Germetuer after all known medical and climatic remedies had been used, by the use of Germetuer."

We are endorsed by thousands of our best known people, and are authorized in saying that Germetuer will permanently cure Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Indigestion, Bowel and Liver Troubles, Female Diseases, Catarrh, Asthma, Bladder and Kidney diseases, Skin diseases, such as Scrofula, Eczema, etc., Paralysis, Epilepsy, Erysipelas, Insomnia and General Debility.

POKINE.

I have used the within remedy (Pokine) with great success. JAMES H. LASSITER.

I have used the Pokine Remedy (prepared by W. T. Cheatham, Jr.) in case of Sciatica with the result of positive relief in a few hours, and believe if used as directed is will effect a permanent cure.

J. L. H. MISSILLIER.

MARCH 6, 1891.

For the benefit of the public, I unhesitatingly recommend Cheatham's wonderful remedy, "Pokine," to all sufferers of rheumatism. It has produced marvelous results in my case. I was a sufferer of the malady for five years, and after taking a few bottles was entirely cured.

Very respectfully, W. W. DOWTIN.

HENDERSON, N. C., March 7, '91.

MR. W. T. CHEATHAM:

Dear Sir—My wife was down in bed with rheumatism, and the Pokine I bought of you gave her relief after taking four doses. She has not been troubled since. It is the best medicine she ever took for rheumatism. Respectfully, ZACK DAVIS.

MR W. T. CHEATHAM, JR.:

Dear Sir—I have been afflicted with rheumatism time and again, for the past thirteen years. I have received more relief from Pokine than any medicine I ever took, and therefore take great pleasure in recommending it to all sufferers of rheumatism. Very respectfully, F. G. MITCHELL.

JANUARY 19, 1891.

W. T. CHEATHAM, JR.:

Dear Sir—I desire to say that in January last I was down with rheumatism; my suffering was great, and I was completely prostrated. One bottle of your Pokine completely relieved me, and I have not had any rheumatism since. My son also was relieved of rheumatism by Pokine.

Yours truly, CHARLES G. BURROUGHS.

MR. W. T. CHEATHAM, JR.:

Your rheumatic cure, Pokine, has completely cured me. I. M. GREEN.

MR. W. T. CHEATHAM, JR., Henderson, N. C.:

Dear Sir—Being asked my opinion of your rheumatic remedy, Pokine, will gladly state I deem it the only medicine of its kind on the market that will accomplish that which is exclusively claimed for it. Being a sufferer of rheumatism, I consequently tried many remedies, until finally relieved by Pokine. Very respectfully, J. A. KELLY.

Garret or Parlor?

The garret is a storage place for the refuse of the household. To its gloom and dust and cobwebs are consigned the broken, wornout or useless articles which we do not care to destroy. I saw two old-fashioned spinning wheels not long ago. One was in the garret. It was broken, and lay upon its side just as it had fallen when carelessly tossed aside many years before. The other was in an elegant parlor. Every broken part had been carefully repaired. Here and there were little touches of color and bright bunches of ribbon. The old wheel held the post of honor in the beautiful room. It wore its love-tokens as proudly as a gray old veteran might display his bronze medals of honor. The lady who saw me gazing at the old wheel said tenderly: "It belonged to my grandmother. Its music accompanying her voice was my mother's lullaby. The touch of her hands made it holy. My mother prized it above gold. She gave it to me. I keep it in my best room. It is one of my treasures. When I see it I think of my sweet mother and my dear old grandmother. Both are in heaven now."

May I introduce to you a saintly old man? He is an aged minister. He wears a crown of snowy hair. He sits in enforced idleness because of the touch of disease and the weight of years. He looks back upon a long life full of faithful and honorable service. He thought not of self, but with loving and heroic devotion sacrificed his own hopes and purposes that he might minister to others. He is poor, although he has made many rich. Does he sit in the parlor surrounded with tokens of appreciation and affection? Alas! no! He sits in the garret, lonely, neglected and almost forgotten. Fellow-christian, when your minister retires, shall it be to the garret or to the parlor?—Rev. J. Benson Hamilton.

A lady, whose hair came out with every combing, was induced to give Ayer's Hair Vigor a faithful trial. She did so, and not only was the loss of hair checked, but a new and vigorous growth soon succeeded that which had gone.

Cashie's Late Article.

Dear Recorder:—I read "Cashie's" letter in your issue of the 6th inst. I do not know who "Cashie" is, but it seems to me that he is inclined to be a little harsh and somewhat inconsistent.

I do not believe that Bro. C. N. Donaldson manifested any egotism or selfish motive whatever in his late article on "The Duty of Deacons," but rather wrote with an eye to the glory of God.

I would not in these lines be understood as advocating the use of tobacco; it is a disagreeable habit, but it seems to me that "Cashie" is a little inconsistent in his views. Have not I as much right to smoke a cigar, if I wish to do so, as any deacon or layman of my church? And is not the money paid me for pastoral work as much mine to use as I see fit, as either the deacon or layman has to use his money as he sees fit?

A great many deacons, and laymen, too, think that the money paid their pastors is a sort of charitable donation. I spurn the degrading idea that pastors are supported by charity.

"Cashie" says that some preachers are poor financiers. Yes, they are; but the false impression comes from the fact that many preachers have no money to manage.

He says: "It is an absurdity for the very last shadow of care to be removed from the pastor's face while some of our dear members are in the county poor-house." This alone is enough to make visible a care upon the face of any pastor. Certainly this case could and ought to be removed. I think it is utterly absurd for any church to allow its poor to spend their days in the county poor house.

"Cashie" calls them "our dear members." No, they are not very dear, or they would not be in the county poor-house.

I would suggest to "Cashie" that he, and his church too, if they have any of their "dear members" in the poor-house, deny themselves of some things in order to take said members out of such a place, or, in the first place keep them from ever being sent there.

I never could understand what reasons the pot has for calling the kettle black.

Deafness Can't be Cured

by local applications, as they can not reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give one hundred dollars for any case of deafness (caused by catarrh) that we can not cure by taking Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

Recommendations.

The following recommendations of the Home Board to the Woman's Missionary Union, S. B. C., were adopted at Atlanta, Ga., May, 1892, as a basis of Home Mission work for the present Conventional year:

"1. That Woman's Mission Societies make moneyed contributions (through the Board) for the support of missionaries and their families on the frontier and elsewhere.

2. That boxes of clothing and other useful articles be sent to frontier and other needy missionaries. (Number of boxes sent last year, 123. Value, $6,776.44.)

3. That Woman's Mission Societies and Bands assist in collecting the Centennial Offering of $125,000, to be expended in chapel building.

4. That the Cuban School for Girls (boarding and day school) now thoroughly established, continue to receive the aid of Woman's Mission Societies. Support of a boarding scholar, $120 per year."

The following letter from the Home Board more fully explains the purport of the recommendations:

TO THE WOMAN'S MISSIONARY UNION, WHEN CONVENED IN ATLANTA, MAY 6, 1892.

Dear Sisters:—We are deeply grateful to you for the interest you have taken in the work of Home Missions, and the generous aid you have given to it. Year by year we have seen and felt your increasing help. Allow us, at your annual meeting this Centennial year, to lay before you a few suggestions as to how you can help in our work for the coming year:

1. Your work of sending boxes of clothing and other valuable articles to our frontier Missionaries has brought help and sunshine to many homes. There comes to me even as I write a letter from one of those you have aided, in which are these words: "I do not know how we could have lived had it not been for the timely aid of the Woman's Missionary Union. God bless those sisters, they seemed to know precisely what we needed." We are sure you will continue this help which has been twice blessed, blessing alike those who give and those who receive. The Board is gratified to see that the value of the boxes sent to these missionaries has increased from $4,419 last year to $6,776 this year, and we will be rejoiced to see a similar increase during the coming year. The meagre salaries the Board has hitherto been able to give these men who endure such hardships for the gospel, are utterly inadequate to supply their families with such comforts as they ought to have. They furnish only enough to meet their bare necessities. If our Baptist women throughout the South could turn in this direction a part of the money they so freely contribute to the Lord's work, we are sure such an offering would be well pleasing to him who said, "I was hungry and ye fed me." Nowhere are there more fruitful fields or larger returns for our sowing, than those where our frontier missionaries labor.

2. The Cuban School for Girls is now thoroughly established. It is occupying a part of the building purchased for a house of worship, comprising a space about twenty-five feet wide by one hundred and twenty long, two stories high, and has good facilities for instruction for not less than one hundred pupils, with dormitory, dining room and culinary department for the twenty-five girls it is proposed to support while acquiring their education.

Bro. J. S. Paine of Boston, a Baptist brother who visits Havana every year, usually spending several weeks in the winter in that city, and who has thorough knowledge of our work there, says, in a letter to us, that nothing we have done in Havana has so much advanced our cause in the estimation of the people of Havana, and especially of the classes of the non-Catholic population, as the opening of this school. The gift of five hundred dollars by an unknown contributor for its benefit, corroborates this testimony. Those who best understand the feelings of the people towards it, think it will not be long before this school can be made entirely self-supporting. To reach this point of self-support will require that it be made equal in every respect to the best Catholic schools in the city, and this will demand an increase of teachers and an enlargement of its present facilities for imparting knowledge. We shall be grateful if our sisters will continue their contributions to this good work. Brother Diaz and others from Cuba who will attend the Convention, will no doubt speak to you about this school.

3. It is known to you that it is proposed to collect during the Centennial year $125,000 for the Home Mission Board to be expended in houses of worship needed in our mission fields. There is no more important part of our work than this. There are more than a thousand churches within the territory of the Southern Baptist Convention which have no houses of worship. In Oklahoma, few if any of our churches have houses in which to worship, and they are compelled to use school-houses and private dwellings in winter, while the groves, "God's first temples," furnish them places of meeting in the summer.

We should be glad for our sisters to enter heartily into this movement. Already an admirable plan has been adopted and placed in the hands of your Board for execution. The good work is begun, and we hope for a liberal part of the sum to be raised from our Ladies' Societies, and the Sunday-schools of our churches.

Your brother in Christ,
I. T. TICHENOR, Cor. Sec.

"Will 1892 be fraught with as mighty missionary interests as 1792? Is there a William Carey somewhere, ready to call us to fresh endeavor and holy enterprise? Is there for the church of Christ a great awakening coming? Our hearts glow with wonder and adoration as we see what God has wrought in the past one hundred years, but there are millions of heathen still in darkness, and the mass of the professing church is still steeped in apathy at home. * * If we, individually and collectively, take Carey's two historic sentences, 'Expect great things from God,' 'Attempt great things for God,' and live them out, 1892 may see things far greater than any seen as yet. Catching the echo of Expectation and Endeavor, let us go forward fearlessly but humbly in the name of the Lord."

Centennial Work in Tar River Association.

Dear Recorder:—Monday after the second Sunday in June was the time for the pastors of the Warrenton Union to begin a canvass of the churches.

At 11 a. m., Dr. Cobb and myself met with the church at New Bethel. This church is going to do more than ever before for the work this year. They take a good many copies of the Foreign Mission Journal. We got the church to appoint a Centennial Committee, who promised to see every member of the church and try to get a contribution for Home and Foreign Missions.

At 3 p. m., we met the church at Sulphur Spring, put the work before them, and took what subscriptions for the Journal we could get.

Tuesday morning, after a ride of fifteen or twenty miles, we drove up to the Reedy Creek church, where we found the people waiting.

In the afternoon, we went to Macon and had a meeting at night.

Wednesday morning found us on our way to Gardner's, where we met Bro. Perkinson, and where we had a most enjoyable meeting. At this church a large number of the brethren and sisters pledged themselves for certain amounts in addition to their regular contributions to the work this year.

Brethren Perkinson and Rodwell helped us in our way to Enterprise, where we met the church in the afternoon.

At night, we met brethren Taylor and Cullom at Littleton, but the rain interfered with our plans, and we did not realize what we hoped at this point. Some one suggested, as an argument against the wisdom of so great an undertaking in mission work this year, that it would be impossible to do next year enough to prevent disaster; that the churches will fail to respond, because the effort of this year will not be repeated, and the humiliation of recalling the missionaries will be a necessity. But just the work that has been and will be done this year can be done next year and every year as long as necessary. The plan is feasible. It will pay.

IMPRESSIONS.

The people are interested in missions. It was a very busy time. The crops demanded the farmers' attention; but they left their fields to come to church. They willingly made the sacrifice of their time to drive from five to twenty miles to take the preachers to the next church. Any action taken by our people to bring about indifference in the churches now interested must be deplored, because such action will be hurtful.

If I were able I would not let the noise about methods reach the churches; not that I believe in keeping information from them, but I don't believe the discussion profitable.

I would not keep the churches from advancing. I don't believe the plans suggested are progressive. The plans suggested don't strike me as Scriptural. Paul went through Asia Minor, and ordained elders in every church. He certainly exercised some authority over the churches he planted. He had something to do with the work of putting men in charge of the churches. His plan was under the direction of the Divine Mind. We can ask for no better one. He found a young man in his journey in Asia Minor (true, he had a Jewish mother). He employed him. "Him would Paul have to go forth with him." We find that he continued with him from place to place. Acts 17: 14; 18: 15. Paul calls him his work fellow. Rom. 16: 21. He controlled his movements. He sent him to the Corinthian christians with a message, 1 Cor. 4: 17. It was his purpose to send him to the Philippians. Phil. 2: 19.

The methods suggested are not new ones. The Moravians tried something like it before Carey went to India. Carey made some changes and he thought improvement in the Moravian plan. Judson improved upon the plan of Carey. We have in the present methods of the Foreign Mission Board the result of the wisdom and experience of all the past. Why go back to the methods tried one hundred years ago? It seems to me like giving up the improved methods of farming of to-day and going back to those of a century ago.

It seems to me that Paul did combine charity with the gospel. "Every man, according to his ability, determined to send relief unto the brethren which dwelt in Judea, which they also did, and sent it to the elders by the hands of Barnabas and Saul." Acts 11: 29, 30. The only difference, it was the converted heathen sending charity to the converted Jew.

The churches were willing to appoint Centennial committees in every church we visited, who said they would try to get a contribution from every church member.

The people would give money if they had it. Many subscribed for the Journal; many others said they would do so, but did not have the money to spare. When the harvests are gathered, we may and do expect the gifts, and expect them to continue through the years.

My church in Henderson has shown their interest in the "Chapel Card." The Sunday-school has taken hold of it, and in October we expect to have a meeting to gather in the cards and money and issue the Centennial certificates.

We are now interested in building a chapel for our Mission, which promises well. You see we are not only talking missions and chapel building, but are practically engaged in it.

Liberty Union Meeting.

The next session of this body will be held with the church at New Friendship, on Friday before the fifth Sunday in this month (July). Introductory sermon will be preached by Elder J. M. Bennett.

QUERIES.

1. Ought not our leading laymen take a more active part in our Union Meetings? Speakers—C. W. Davis and R. D. Cross.

2. To what extent has the public a right to a preachers time and services? Elders H. Morton and Thos. Carrick.

3. Is it probable that a converted man will fail to attend his church, or give for religious work, when properly instructed? Elders J. A. Summey and J. K. Fant.

4. Would it be beneficial to our denomination for our members better to inform themselves on Baptist history and distinctive Baptist principles? Elders J. M. Bennett and J. N. Stallings.

It is requested that all the churches be represented. On Sunday, the new house is to be dedicated.

R. D. Cross, Secretary.

"Continual dropping wears away the stone."

The continual breaking of lamp-chimneys costs a good deal in the course of a year.

You can stop it. Get Macbeth's "pearl top" or "pearl glass." You will have no more trouble with breaking from heat. You will have clear glass instead of misty; fine instead of rough; right shape instead of wrong; and uniform, one the same as another.

You will pay a nickel a chimney more; and your dealer will gain in good-will what he loses in trade; he will widen his trade by better service.

SHEPHERD—VICKERS—On July 13th, 1892, at the residence of the bride's father, in Durham, N. C., by Rev. A. A. Butler, Mr. John Shepherd and Miss Lucy Vickers.

HINTON—MURRY—On July 21st, 1892, by Rev. J. A. Stradley, assisted by Rev. C. A. Jenkens, Mr. W. A. Hinton of Durham and Miss Lillie F. Murry of Granville county.

DIED.

PERRY—Sister Isabel Perry departed this life in the eighty-seventh year of her age. She was a member of Chappel Hill church, and attended the services faithfully as long as she was able. For months before her departure, like a babe waiting for the coming of mother, so she patiently waited for the coming of Jesus. The writer often visited her home, and frequently read and prayed with her.

A few days before her sun went down to rise no more, she said after prayer, "I am ready to go." And as she lived, so she died. She was the light of her daughter's home. They lived so happy. But alas, the Master came and called for her.

She was beloved by all who knew her. The day of her funeral, the large crowd which gathered at the house and followed her to the grave was a proof of the love of God's people for his dear old saint. She leaves two children one afflicted son and one daughter. God bless her daughter for her faithfulness to her mother. Many relatives are left to mourn the loss of a light which for all these years had not failed to light up the pathway which leads to heaven. We shall miss her out of our church and her home, but we thank God for her Christ-like life. Though she is gone, yet her influence will live while time shall last. May the blessings of God rest upon the home, and may he sanctify her death for the good of those left behind. She is not dead, but sleepeth. JOSIAH ELLIOTT.

Tributes of Respect.

WHEREAS, On the morning of July 12th, 1892, the angel of death summoned the spirit of our brother, Reuben McBrayer, from earth to mansions above; therefore, be it

Resolved, That in the death of Bro. McBrayer our Sunday-schools lose an earnest worker; this church a consecrated member; the board of deacons a wise counsellor; the cause of education, the Orphanage and missions a faithful advocate, and the entire Baptist interest of Western North Carolina a bright and shining light.

That in this bereavement we submissively bow to the will of our Heavenly Father.

That the sorrowing wife and fatherless children have our prayerful remembrance at a rich throne of grace.

That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family of our deceased brother, and be also spread upon our church record.

That a copy be sent to the Asheville Baptist, Charity and Children and the Biblical Recorder with request to publish.

Done by order of the First Baptist church of Asheville, N. C., July 17th, 1892.

E. A. WRIGHT,
J. R. PATTERSON,
J. H. TUCKER,
Committee.

To the W. M. Warden and brethren of Lenoir Lodge, No. 233, A. F. & A. M., your committee appointed to prepare resolutions in memory of Bro. John W. Isler, who died on July 12th, 1892, submit the following:

Resolved, That while we keenly feel the loss of this exemplary brother, who for many years has been a faithful member of Lenoir Lodge, we bow in humble submission to the dispensations of the Supreme Architect whose goodness and omnipotence we reverently acknowledge.

Resolved, That in the death of our brother, masonry has lost a devoted patron, our Lodge one of its strongest pillars, the community a citizen highly esteemed for his many good qualities of head and heart, and his family a husband and father whose affectionate devotion death alone could sever.

Resolved, That we tender our heartfelt sympathy to the bereaved family, and commend them in this their hour of great distress to the tender mercies of him who has promised immortal life beyond the grave.

Resolved, That we wear the usual badge of mourning for thirty days; that these resolutions be placed on the records of the Lodge; and that a copy of the same be sent to the family of the deceased, and to the Kinston Free Press, Goldsboro Argus and Biblical Recorder for publication.

CHOWAN
Baptist Female Institute,
MURFREESBORO, N. C.
Parties having young ladies to educate will do well to consider the following facts:—
The Institute offers superior advantages in Literature, Science, Music and Art. Only the best talent is employed to give instruction in the different departments.
The situation is one of remarkable beauty. There are twenty-eight acres of land within the corporation, but so located as to give the school all the privacy of the country, while near enough to the town to secure any advantages it may offer.
The health record is unsurpassed. During the last ten years there have been two cases of pneumonia, one of typhoid fever (brought by the pupil with her) no case of diphtheria, scarlet fever or measles. Chills have been strangers, and bilious fever almost unknown. The average of medical bills since the organization of the school has been about twenty five cents per pupil for the scholastic year. The amount paid for medical bills by the entire boarding patronage the past session was ten dollars
This institution is the unencumbered property of the Baptists, and is the only property owned by them in the State used exclusively for the education of girls.
The dormitories have recently been refurnished, and only two pupils occupy the same room. Parties leaving points east of Charlotte, Danville, Richmond and Washington reach the school the same afternoon via Boykins, Va., and the Murfreesboro railroad. As the property is unencumbered, the charges can be made very moderate. Board, literary and music tuition, if paid in advance, are two hundred dollars for scholastic year. The fall session begins on Wednesday, Sept. 7th. For catalogue or additional information, address
JNO. B. BREWER, President.

Richmond Female Institute,
RICHMOND, VA.
Located in one of the most cultivated and historic cities of the country, offers surpassing advantages for the higher education of young women.
The school was organized in 1854 by Dr. Basil Manly, and has held, for a long time, a prominent place among the educational institutions of the South.
Its faculty is composed of able and experienced teachers, several having added to the broadest home culture years of study and residence abroad.
Several of the most distinguished professors of Richmond College teach in the Institute.
Richmond offers the rarest advantages for literary, scientific and artistic studies.
The health record of the Institute is remarkable. For now nearly forty years there has not been a death of a pupil in the school.
No effort is spared to make the home life of the young ladies in every way pleasant.
The people of Richmond evince the liveliest interest in the school, and the trustees, composed of some of the most prominent Baptists of the South, among whom are Drs. H. A. Tupper, W. W. Landrum, W. E. Hatcher, J. M. Frost, and others, propose to do great things for it in the near future.
As the school has a large local patronage we can afford to offer lower rates than any other institution of like grade in the South.

To Thee.

"Lord to whom shall we go?"—John vi, 68.

I bring my sins to Thee,
The sins I cannot count,
That all may cleansed be
In Thy once-opened fount.
I bring them, Saviour, all to Thee,
The burden is too great for me.

My heart to Thee I bring,
The heart I cannot read;
A faithless, wandering thing,
An evil heart indeed,
I bring it, Saviour, now to Thee,
That fixed and faithful it may be.

To Thee I bring my care,
The care I cannot flee.
Thou wilt not only share,
But bear it all for me.
O loving Saviour, now to Thee
I bring the load that wearies me.

I bring my grief to Thee,
The grief I cannot tell;
No words shall needed be,
Thou knowest all so well.
I bring the sorrow laid on me,
O suffering Saviour, now to Thee.

My joys to Thee I bring,
The joys Thy love hath given,
That each may be a wing
To lift me nearer heaven.
I bring them, Saviour, all to Thee,
For Thou hast purchased all for me.

My life I bring to Thee,
I would not be my own;
O Saviour, let me be,
Thine ever, Thine alone.
My heart, my life, my all, I bring,
To Thee, my Saviour and my King!

—Francis Ridley Havergal.

"Hold Fast Tom."

AN INCIDENT IN BRITISH NAVAL HISTORY.

The Dutch garrison at Jamestown, on the island of St. Helena, in the year 1673 were awaiting the opening of a siege from a fleet of British ships under Captain Richard Munden. The Dutch had given their whole attention to the attack in front, feeling sure that this was the only point from which they could be assailed. And they reasoned well; for everywhere else the coast was merely one great precipice of several hundred feet, rising so sheer out of the sea that it seemed as if nothing without wings could possibly scale it.

But they might perhaps have been less confident had they seen what was going on just then at the opposite side of the island.

When the English ships first advanced to the attack, the hindmost of them, while still hidden from the Dutch by the huge black pyramid of Sugar-loaf Point, had lowered several large boats filled with armed men, which instantly shot away round the great rocky bluff of "the Barn" as fast as eight oars apiece could carry them.

Away they went past headland after headland, while every eye was fixed upon the rocky shore, as if seeking something which was not easily to be found.

At length, just when they rounded the bold, craggy promontory of King and Queen point, a dull boom reached their ears, followed instantly by the thunder of a sustained cannonade. At that familiar sound the sailors clenched their teeth savagely, as they looked up at the tremendous precipices that seemed to shut them out from all hope of taking part in the battle.

"Can't we get up anywhere?" growled the captain of the frigate, who was in the foremost boat. "We're disgraced forever if they do the job without us."

"With your honor's leave," broke in a stalwart young topman, touching his thick brown forelock, "I think I could get up that rock yonder, and fasten a rope for the rest to climb by." [The capture of Gibraltar by Sir George Rooke, in 1803, was aided by a feat of the same kind.]

"What up there?" cried the captain, glancing doubtfully from the young sailor's bright, fearless face to the tremendous height above. "Well, my lad, if you can do it, I'll give you fifty guineas!"

"It's for the honor of the flag, not for the money, sir!" answered the seaman, springing from the boat to the lowest ledge of the terrible rock.

Up, up, up, ever higher he clambered, with the rising wind flinging his loose hair to and fro, and the startled sea birds whirling around him with hoarse screams of mingled fear and rage. To the watching eyes far below, the tiny points of rock to which he clung were quite invisible, and he seemed to be hanging in mid-air, like a fly on the side of a wall.

And now he was two-thirds of the way up the precipice; and now he was within a few yards of the top; and now his hand almost touched the highest ledge, when suddenly his feet were seen to slide from under him, and in a moment he was swinging in the empty air, grasping a projecting crag with the strength of desperation.

"Hold fast, Tom!" yelled his comrades, as they saw him.

Tom did hold fast, and the strong hands that had defied the full fury of an Atlantic gale to loosen him from the slippery rigging did him good service once more. He regained his footing, and the indrawn breath of the anxious gazers below sounded like a hiss in the grim silence as they watched the final effort that brought him safely to the top.

The rope was soon fixed, and the last man had scarcely mounted when the daring band were hurrying across the ridgy interior of the island towards the spot whence the cannonade still boomed upon the evening air. And there it was at last, as they crowned the farthest ridge, the tall masts standing up through billowy smoke, and the batteries marked out amid the gathering darkness by the flashes of their own cannon. A deadly volley of English musketry cracked along the cliff, and several of the Dutch were seen to fall, while dismay and confusion spread fast among the survivors. Thus caught between two fires, with the British ships thundering upon them from below, and the British marksmen shooting them down from above, the defenders had no chance; and at length brave old Van Gebhardt, with a look of bitter grief on his iron face, slowly hauled down the Dutch flag in token of surrender.

"Mynheer," said he to the English captain, as the latter came marching into the fort at the head of his men, "my followers have done all that men could do; but yours have done more."

"And if we had not done more, we could never have beaten the gallant Dutchmen," answered the captain, taking off his battered cocked hat with a polite bow.

Thus it was that the English regained St. Helena, over which the British flag flies to this day. Nor has the brave fellow who led that daring attack been forgotten; for when I visited the island, I found that the crag which he scaled (and a very grim-looking crag it is) still goes by the name of "Hold-fast Tom."—David Ker, in St. Nicholas.

The True Legacy.

There sometimes goes out of this life a character so finished, so complete, that one looks with envy at the children who inherit as a legacy the memory of such a parent. We hear a great deal of the moral education of children; the greatest moral educator in the home is the character of the parents. If children know only truth, honor, the law of kindness in the home, it gives them their standards; it makes the footrule by which men and women are measured; it represents the only world in which they could live. It is commonly said that the child who hears only the purest English at home would speak only the purest English if he never opened a grammar. Is it not equally true that if a child found in the home the same exactness in morals and ethics that is demanded in language, he would be as strongly protected against contamination in the one case as in the other? But how may parents hold themselves as rigidly to the grammar of morals as they do to the grammar of language?

Death is sometimes spoken of as a robber. It can not be, if it leaves to us an ideal that has stood the test of life. When the silence we call death comes to one who has lived a rounded life, whose purpose has been to give impulse to higher, nobler living to all within reach of his influence, there is left a legacy more valuable than crowns. When children in the full knowledge of manhood and womanhood can say "my father," "my mother," knowing that it will bring to the listener's mind an ideal man or woman; that the vision will rouse, if only for the moment, a desire for a higher purpose in life, no kingdom conferred by inheritance can offer the joy that knowledge brings. If only for this, is not the effort for character worth the struggle to gain it?

The strongest incentive to character building is the example of those whom we love. Every boy, while his knowledge is confined to his home, sees a hero in his father; every girl believes her father the finest type of man; "mother" represents to the children the perfect woman. Can money, or place, or power, gained by the sacrifice of truth or honor, ever compensate a child for the loss of perfect truth in the character of a parent?

When death comes to a life crowned with honor and the influence that, like incense, comes as a tribute to an honorable life, love is grieved, but the promise to such is too rich, too inspiring, for death to leave more than a shadow. But when death enters, and the children sit with the knowledge that the influence of that life has been for evil, then the bitterness of death is known only to the children; to say "my father" or "my mother" and blush in one's soul at the thought of what these words represent, robs life of its possibilities of joy or happiness. "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord . . . for their works do follow them." The children follow in the paths made and kept luminous because father and mother have walked in them.—The Christian Union.

Father.

Loss of sleep sustained from anxiety spent over the little one so slowly and pitifully wasting away from the effect of teething, unfits you for business, why not try Dr. Biggers' Huckleberry Cordial.

Boy in Demand.

One day Tommy had been asked to do several chores about the house. He was wanted to bring in wood, hunt eggs, run errands, etc. He grew tired of it at last, and upon some new request he said, half impatiently, half jokingly:

"Well, I think here's a boy in pretty good demand to-day."

"Good articles are always in demand," replied one who heard him.

"Oh, yes; I s'pose so," said Tommy, as he marched off to do this favor also, evidently thinking it was a little tiresome. The demand seemed to press a little hard upon the supply.

Yes, Tommy, "good articles are always in demand." This is true the world over. People like to choose the best they can find; not only the best things, but the best men. Good lawyers, good doctors, good teachers, good merchants, good mechanics, good farmers, good preachers, will all find that the great world has plenty for them to do. They are in demand.

But worthless things have poor sale. They may go a-begging. Men don't want them. The lazy, the disobliging, and the careless are not often asked to do much, when better hands may be had.—Western Christian Advocate.

A Proper Protest.

Of course, family discipline should always be maintained in the household. Children should render obedience to their parents. But parents are not infallible, as this incident shows:

A small boy got a sliver in his foot and his mother expressed her intention of putting a poultice on the wound. The boy, with the natural foolishness which is bound up in the heart of a child, objected to the proposed remedy.

"I won't have any poultice!" he declared.

"Yes, you will," said both mother and grandmother, firmly. The majority was two to one against him, and at bedtime the poultice was ready.

The patient was not ready. On the contrary, he resisted so stoutly that a switch was brought into requisition. It was arranged that the grandmother should apply the poultice, while the mother, with uplifted stick, was to stand at the bedside. The boy was told that if he "opened his mouth" he would receive something that would keep him quiet.

The hot poultice touched his foot, and he opened his mouth.

"You—" he began.

"Keep still!" said his mother, shaking her stick, while the grandmother applied the poultice.

Once more the little fellow opened his mouth.

"I—" But the uplifted switch awed him into silence.

In a minute more the poultice was firmly in place, and the boy was tucked in bed.

"There, now," said the mother, "the old sliver will be drawn out, and Eddie's foot will be all well."

The mother and grandmother were moving triumphantly away, when a shrill voice piped from under the bed-clothes:

"You've got it on the wrong foot!"—Ex.

A Little Sermon on a Big Text.

"Let brotherly love continue."—Heb. 13: 1.

Whether this text be considered an exhortation or a command, this is certain, it sacredly binds each christian to live in love with all other christians. Not to do this is to sin against God, and against christian love, the most sacred of all ties.

No one can become a christian without loving God and his fellow christians. Religion is love. In the moment of regeneration all sin and hatred is driven out of the heart, and love takes full possession. The requirement of the text is that we let this love continue.

1st. It is the nature of love to abide. "Now abideth faith, hope, love; these three, but the greatest of these is love." One prominent reason why love is the greatest is, that it abides through life, death and eternity. The true christian never ceases to love. "God is love," and when we become christians, we partake of God's nature. God continues forever. God is love. The christian partakes of God's nature, therefore it is the nature of love to "abide." Christian love is pure like God. It contains no element of decay. This love delights to "continue" in a pure heart.

2d. Love may be driven away. "Love suffereth long—is not easily provoked," but still by continued abuse and insult it may be driven away. Not God's love from his people. That never ceases. But "brotherly love"—love between brethren, is often driven away. There are many things in business, in politics, in religion about which they differ, contend, grow angry, and hatred comes in and drives out love.

In an observation of more than thirty years, I have never seen a time when the requirement of the text needed to be more carefully considered. Never, perhaps, in the history of the country has the political caldron boiled more hotly than now. New and exciting issues are upon us. Heretofore political contests, especially in the South, have been mainly between white and black voters. This political difference, on account of other differences between the races, has not seriously hindered brotherly love. But political issues are upon us now that are dividing the white race—neighbor against neighbor, church-member against church-member. How careful we should be not to allow these differences to disturb "brotherly love." There ought not to be any disturbance. Nearly all the white people of the South are agreed that "reform" is necessary. They desire it and are working for it. If possible, they are determined to have it. On this they all agree. But the thing about which they differ is the method by which reform can best be secured. Some think their method is the only way to get it, others think it can only be secured in an entirely different way. Let not differences in regard to mere method prevent brotherly love from continuing. But if these differences are debated in unguarded words, they will engender strife, which will either kill or chill "brotherly love."

Love is too pure and gentle to dwell in hearts filled with unkindness and bitter strife. Let us not drive this precious inhabitant from our bosoms. Without it we are miserable and sinful.

Let us cheerfully recognize the fact that each citizen has a right to think, talk, and vote as he believes is right, provided he does so with due regard to the rights of others who may differ from him.

I have lived until gray hairs are on my head, but never yet have I spoken an unkind word or cherished an unkind feeling towards a fellow christian on mere political grounds. I can vote against a brother, and still live with him in peace as a neighbor, and work with him in love as a christian. During this heated campaign, let us daily, hourly strive to "Let brotherly love continue."

J. A. STRADLEY.

Turning the Holy Spirit Out of Church.

"Out with the heretics" has been one of the cries of the religious zealot. The first charge made against the first christian preachers was that they were drunk. People in Corinth said of Paul that he was out of his head. His faith was fanaticism, they said.

Well, the heretics and the fanatics have gone out; and not infrequently the Holy Spirit has gone out with them. He was turned out of the Church of Rome with Martin Luther; and the Church of Rome has been barren of any great spiritual conquests since. The Lutheran church turned the Holy Spirit out with Baron von Walz, who in the latter half of the seventeenth century sought to found a "Society of Jesus to promote Christianity and the Conversion of Heathendom;" and to this day the Lutheran church of Germany has been barren of any great spiritual conquests among the heathen. In the middle of the eighteenth century, the English Establishment turned the Holy Spirit out with John Wesley; and to this day the Episcopal church in England has scarcely learned the meaning of the word evangelism. In the middle of the present century the Wesleyan Methodists repeated the folly of the Establishment of a century before, and Rev. William Booth had to find other connection for the noblest evangelistic agency of our times. When J. Hudson Taylor, the founder of the China Inland Mission, himself a Baptist, sought to go into the interior of China with the aid of missionary societies in England, he early found that to be impossible; and to do the work he felt he was led of the Spirit to do, no other alternative being left him, he organized and has since maintained the most vigorous and the most aggressive mission in China. There are between thirty and forty societies doing work in the empire, and the China Inland Mission, one of the youngest (1886) has about one quarter of all the missionaries in the field. It is worth while to transcribe here one of its distinctive principles. "The direction of the work in the field is carried on, not by home committees, but by senior and experienced missionaries, who help and guide as they are able, those who have less experience in the Lord's work in China."

All these examples carry their warning and exhortation to us of to-day. They have a special significance for the Baptists of North Carolina in view of current public discussion of brethren Bostick and Herring. It is a very striking fact that again and again in the history of missions men who have frankly accepted the New Testament have had to leave their denominational connections and have died under suspicion of insanity. Nevertheless, their testimony has not been lost, and the impression of their lives upon the heathen cannot be obliterated. William Burns is oftener spoken of by the Chinese than any other man, "because he was, in his own person, a living proof of christianity," so says Prof. Christlieb. Burns, perhaps more than any other man, influenced Hudson Taylor. George Bowen, of whom Dr. William Hanna of Scotland says, that "he exhibited a degree of self-sacrificing devotion to which there is perhaps no existing parallel in the whole field of missionary labor;" and John Crosset of North China, whose life among the natives and the impression of whose death upon them were thought worthy of mention to the department of State in Washington, are other examples.

The denominations from which these men went out might, in every case, have retained them, and have shared the enthusiasm their life and labors have created. It requires an apostle to plant a gospel; and we have read the history of christianity to very little purpose if we insist on muzzling and chaining every apostle that appears among us. The moment a man, a board, a denomination, closes its system of thought, or method against modification, and proceeds to defend it against the world, that moment it expels the Holy Spirit and enters definitely on the process of fossilization. Our salvation to usefulness in the advancing kingdom depends upon an enlarged and constantly enlarging sympathy with the infinite variety and manifoldness of the operations of the infinite Spirit of God. I would rather be Paul than the Judaizer who blocked Paul's progress; and words from Paul shall close this brief plea for larger sympathy for what are damned by many minds by being "new plans:" "Now there are diversities of gifts, but the same Spirit. And there are differences of administrations, but the same Lord. And there are diversities of operations, but it is the same God which worketh all in all."

A Lost Opportunity.

Whenever we hear a preacher beating round the bush for the first fifteen minutes of his thirty, we always mourn the opportunity lost. The minutes are few enough at best in which he is permitted to reach the hearts and consciences of men. They ought not to be wasted in trivialities which have no spiritual import, and without which the sermon would in every way be better.—The Interior.

Those that do the will of God heartily will do it speedily; while we delay time is lost, and the heart hardened.—Henry.

Resting in the Rockies.

I am Western. My brother of the Palmetto State visited my home in St. Joseph. He was assured that I am thoroughly Western. My college class-mate, Rev. Ed. M. Poteat of New Haven, declared, upon looking at my big, rough gold watch, that my watch was indicative of a Western horseman.

But I cherish the Old North State forever. When J. B. Boone was pastor in Moberly, Mo., we North Carolinians had a bounteous Tar-Heel banquet in Warrensburg in the home of the tallest and handsomest North Carolinian in Missouri, L. M. Berry. We had a speaking meeting in the Baptist sanctuary. We invited all the people to hear us tell yarns and preach.

Last June, at William Jewell College, Prof. R. P. Rider did name a dinner for North Carolina. It was a feast worthy of any State. J. Henry Simmons, Charles Lee Smith, Mrs. A. J. Emerson were among the honored guests. Hurrah for the good Old North State!

A few days ago wife and I visited Manitou and the Garden of the Gods, only a few miles from Colorado Springs, the home of my old friend, John E. Ray. It was utterly impossible for us to go to see him in his home. We were attending the Nineteenth National Conference of Charities and Corrections in Denver. I desire to name a few points in the deliberations of this unique Conference.

1. The Conference is attractive. It is composite. It is national. It is representative. It has Hebrews, Roman Catholics, Agnostics, Unitarians, Baptists, Congregationalists, etc. It represents all creeds, no creeds and self confessed cranks. It is a unity in diversity. Over half a thousand members had as many methods of doing things, but the diversity of opinion as to how to do did not interrupt the unity of purpose in charity. It was unity only in charity, and in charity it was a unity. That is worth attention.

2. The Conference was optimistic in hope, in sympathy, in work. Belief in men is emphatic. The pauper, the criminal, people poor in heart, in goodness, people delinquent in every way, can be up lifted, can become patriotic citizens, can be conformed to the divine order. We are interested not only in pauperism but in the pauper, not only in crime but in the criminal, not only in dependency but in the dependent. We work as if we believed in our work and in its certain success. That is worth attention.

3. All human life whether defective, dependent or delinquent was precious beyond all price. The cost of needed attention is not debatable. The baby hastily folded in a shawl by the hands of shame and left to sob and cry on your door-step is more precious to the Almighty Father than all the gems of the sea, than all the gold of the mountains. Contending over the expense of love, over the cost of love's inevitable ministry, is like reproaching the love of God, the expense of God's love.

4. In the work of charity and correction, wisdom, logical sense, systematic and persistent effort are essential to success. Indiscriminate almsgiving is hurtful. The gushing giver, the gusher helper is a nuisance. He is a protracted meeting calamity-howler. Take your pauper man. He is homeless, disheartened, misanthropic, rebellious. He needs more than bread, more than shelter, more than a dole.

a. Awaken in him a vivid conception of a home which exists in spite of sin; a home where love abounds, where lovely children dwell, where God is worshipped. That will arouse his manhood somewhat if you teach him correctly.

b. Awaken him to the fact that he is a member of society. His neighbors have claims upon his manhood, upon the utility, the active helpfulness of that manhood. He has something to give to his fellows.

c. He is a citizen. The government has claims upon his patriotism. He has rights, privileges, protection, liberty. His fellow-citizens have a right to expect him to be patriotic, true, noble, heroic. He can be. He must be.

d. There is a divine order. Awaken in him a sense of it. He can be conformed to it. He can rank as a citizen of the kingdom of heaven.

Almost three weeks ago we came to Estes Park, a vale in the Rocky mountains of northern Colorado. Here with wife and our two children, Maysie and Alfred, I rested last summer. Here we are again. The Park is about thirty miles' stage ride from Lyons, the mountain terminus of the "Burlington Route" railroad. Its western boundary is the snowy continental divide. In the divide is Long's Peak about three miles high. Long's altitude is 14,271 feet above the sea. It is loftier than Pike which juts against the plains in southern Colorado. We visited Pike and Manitou and the Garden of the Gods this summer. Pike is 14,127 feet above tide water. Pike has a cog-wheel railroad. That is, there is between the iron rails of the road, a couple of bars of tongued steel into which a cogged wheel beneath the locomotive engine works. This means safety in the ascent and descent. But Long has no railroad. It lacks forty miles of mountains of having a railroad. On July 23d, 1891, I spent seventeen hours going up and down Long. I spent about a dozen hours amid snow and ice. When I reached the summit I was in the shadow of nothing in the world. There's room at the top. There's not much else. I don't care to live three miles above my brethren on the sea shore. I came west to go up. I've been on the Rockies and Nevados. I've been high enough.

Away from the strife of fashion and the weary extravagance of wealth, one in Estes Park may rest. The snow keeps the atmosphere cool. A fire every evening and two blankets every night are needed in the summer. If you want anything to eat besides oats and grass and game and Irish potatoes, you must pay two prices for it. No orchards, no gardens, no farming here. Deer, elk, bears, lions, mountain sheep, badgers, coyotes, ground-hogs, chipmunks, ptarmagans are here, and trout glance in all these clear, cool streams from the snow. The sky is clear as opal. The air braces like a tonic. The thunder has echoes. The mountains declare the glory of God.

N. R. PITTMAN.

"Here am I, Send Me."

Dear Recorder:—For years I have felt that I was called to fill what some may be pleased to term a very inferior mission. However this may be, I am constrained to make a plain, matter-of-fact statement. I shall not trouble the reader with a long account of the severe trials and conflicting emotions with which I have for years been troubled before finally adopting my present course; but shall give as briefly as possible the culmination of these ordeals, and leave the reader to judge the purity of my motives and the merits of those for whom I would by God's mercy help to reclaim from sin and ruin.

First. I feel that I am called to preach.

Second. I feel that this call is directed to certain classes of persons not usually met by the ordinary ministers of the gospel.

Third. I believe these classes are to be found in dark and unenlightened neighborhoods in the country; in the slums of our towns and cities; in our common jails and other prisons; in places where liquors are made and sold; in all places where the tendency naturally would make the mean worse, the wretch an outcast, the thief a robber, and the murderer a fiend.

Behind my convictions to reach these classes there remains one other problem which I submit to my christian friends for solution. I am able to live at home, owe no man anything, and ask no alms; but I am not able to "go out into the highways and hedges and compel them to come in" at my own charges.

I am not wanting or expecting any stipend for my services; but I believe that in neighborhoods where I could hope to accomplish anything for God, brethren can be found who would be willing to contribute something toward defraying my necessary travelling expenses, if, in doing this, they could feel assured that the gospel would be faithfully presented to those worse than the heathen and at their very doors.

I want to preach to these people from house to house, on the streets, by the way, anywhere, everywhere, whenever and wherever a fallen sinner will hear me.

Now should any whose hearts yearn for the lost of their own town or neighborhood, chance to see this, I hope they will correspond with me. I want to do this work not for any reward, but because I believe God wills it, and will himself reward me in heaven hereafter.

Those wishing references can write the pastor or any member of the Baptist church at this place.

Yours for the fallen,

J. M. TAYLOR,
Rutherfordton, N. C.

A Word to Young Men.

I am young myself, and feel an interest in others. I wish to adorn the religion I have professed, and I wish others to do the same. I feel an interest not only in those who are professors of religion, but in all young men. In John 1: 2-14, the writer alludes to young men who are strong, and have overcome the wicked one. Now with this, let us remember that our Saviour says, "Let your light so shine that others may see your good works." Let us realize the responsibility resting upon us, and as we desire the salvation of others let us remember that we have an influence for good if we live up to our privileges, and therefore abstain from the very appearance of evil. Let us not visit such places as the ball, and especially the bar-room, to destroy our influence for good. Our dear Lord has told us to work in his vineyard. He has shown us that there is much to be done, and we desire to do our part. Now let us remember that the first qualification we need, to work successfully, is to have the confidence of others. If we live right we will help others to Christ. We must look to the Lord for supporting grace to enable us so to live, and to the Holy Spirit to enlighten and guide us. I have heard of a young man who was seen to go into a bar-room, and soon afterwards to a prayer-meeting where he led in prayer. One said, "that prayer did not touch me." When asked why, he told that he saw him in the bar-room. Let us avoid all such places and company, that we may have the respect of others and do them good. Let us work together for the advancement of our Lord's cause to save our fellowmen from ruin.

Yours in christian love,

Globe, N. C. A. E. CROOM.

A Colored Ministerial Institute.

LETTER TO DR. C. DURHAM.

Dr. Durham, Dear Brother:—I am glad to say to you, your Board of Missions and to the brethren of the white Baptist State Convention, that the Institute held at Weldon, N. C., conducted by Rev. R. I. Waldon and myself, associated with Rev. T. J. Taylor of the Warrenton Baptist church, was a decided success. I never in all my life saw pastors take more interest in any work than in the work done in this Institute. This Institute has done more to strengthen the pastors of this portion of the State than any other work we have attempted.

There were twenty ministers in attendance, all of whom were pastors in charge except one or two. You have done the grandest work you could do for us.

P. F. MALOY.

Raleigh, July 19, 1892.

RESOLUTION ONE.

WHEREAS, Our brethren of the white Baptist State Convention of North Carolina have done so much for us in making a grant of five hundred dollars to be used in conducting Ministers' Institutes for our special and immediate improvement in the ministry; and whereas, we as pastors are hereby solemnly impressed that this is our greatest need to fit us for our responsible duties in the ministry, and that more has been done through this grant to awaken an interest in us to improve our ministry than any other means afforded us:

Resolved, That the white State Convention and its excellent Board of Missions have our most humble thanks and appreciation for their faithful christian beneficence to us as colored pastors of the Neuse River Association. We pray that God will bless the gift and the givers.

W. R. MASON of Weldon,
S. HICKS of Rocky Mount,
Committee.

RESOLUTION TWO.

WHEREAS, Our brethren of the white Baptist State Convention have done such a noble work for us in furnishing for our ministerial improvement, ten Institutes, to be conducted in different localities of the State; and whereas, we, through their beneficence to us, now see clearly our duty to strengthen this work for another year by our own contributions; therefore

Resolved, That we go home to our fields and lay the matter fully before our people as to its vast importance, and take a collection from each of our churches for ministerial education.

S. HICKS, Rocky Mount.

CROSS-BEARER'S MISSIONARY READING CIRCLE.

For years, the missionaries and Home secretaries have felt the need of a better knowledge of missions among christians. Their efforts have been greatly hindered by a lack of sympathy with the enterprise.

The above named organization was established for the purpose of "lessening the reproach" by extending information through a systematized and carefully selected course of reading.

A handbook and other particulars as to how to organize and conduct local circles, the books of the course, the publishers of the same, requirements for membership, &c., will be sent on application to the Secretary, Rev. Z. M. Williams, A. M., St. Joseph, Mo.

Bible Influence.

The following incident illustrates what the Bible does among the most desperate men. When the Texas forces, while retreating before the army of Santa Anna, had reached the town of San Felipe, on the Brazos, Gen. Houston ordered the town to be burned in order to prevent the supplies it contained falling into the hands of the enemy. A merchant seeing no hope of saving his goods, told the soldiers to help themselves. Among them was one of Houston's scouts, known for his reckless daring. On the counter was a Bible of moderate size which, up to that moment, had found no market. The scout picked it up with the remark, "Boys, I'll take this for my share." It was a rich joke for that godless crowd. The book was an awkward addition to his knapsack, and often he thought of tossing it into the prairie, but for some cause for which he could not account, he clung to the book.

The war over, he returned to his home. The book was placed on a high shelf and orders given to his children that no one should take it down. Years passed on. No man in Colorado was more familiar with the gaming table and race track than the Texas scout. One day time hung heavily on his hands, and, without knowing why, the Bible was taken down and its pages opened. The first verse fastened on his heart. He read till his soul ached out his sins. He read until the light of the Saviour's love was shed abroad in his heart by the Holy Ghost. His last days were spent in hunting up his old comrades in sin and leading them to Christ; and when death came, it found him ready to answer the Master's call.—Central Rep.

"GONE TO SEED."

We recently heard of a leading evangelist who had been requested by the pastor and members of a certain church to hold a meeting with them. He was expected several times, but disappointed them, and finally, when pressed for a positive assurance as to when he would go, he wrote that he could not go unless two or three of the leading members of the church would give their note, or become responsible for a certain amount of money, thus assuring him in advance that the collection would not fail even if the meeting did. We are informed that the church did the sensible thing, and promptly declined the proposal, and informed him that his services were not needed.

We have purposely withheld the name of this evangelist, and also that of his denomination. We are not fond of what appears personal abuse; but we have some decided views about this matter which we will not hesitate to express. We are not among those who cry down the persons and the work of evangelists. We believe the office and the work of divine appointment; and we believe that some of them are good and true men, and are doing much good by way of strengthening the churches and reaching unconverted men and women. But while this is so, there are some things about the plans and methods of even good and successful evangelists that need attention. Let it be remembered that if they are true men they have, or ought to have been, called of God to the work of an evangelist, just as others are called to the work of a pastor. If they claim a divine call to this work, then they ought to go where the Lord directs them, whether in the crowded city, the quiet village, or the most obscure parts of the land. Now, it is a not ceable fact that most of the modern evangelists go only to the large towns and cities. Occasionally we find noble exceptions to this rule; but these, like angel visits, are few and far between. Now why is this? Are the souls of city people more valuable than those in the country? Has God called them to preach to the more cultured to the neglect of the poor and unlettered? One proof of the divinity of Christ's mission was, "Unto the poor the gospel is preached" Is the servant above his Master? Has Christ authorized evangelists to show his preachers a more perfect way of preaching his word? The truth of it is, this constant and marked preference of evangelists for town or city audiences, and the large amounts that are given them at the close of their meetings, have created a wide spread fear, if not opinion, that after all the money question is an, if not the, important feature with many of them. It is possible too that men who have not yet entered the ministry, and who have rather crude notions, or none at all, of what a call to the ministry is, may be led by the large amount of money they suppose can be reached through this channel to enter the ministry, and commence the work of an evangelist. It is a well known fact that men followed Christ for awhile for the loaves and the fishes. It is also a well-known fact that men have entered the church, and even the christian ministry, in China and other heathen lands, "for the money that is in it." Ancient human nature, Chinese human nature, and American human nature, are all the same. One of the Latin poets has written,

"Oh cursed desire of gold!
What will thou not compel the hearts of men to perpetrate?"

And there is as good ground for this question now as in the days of yore.

Now we cannot afford to be misunderstood on this particular subject. We do not mean to hint that all evangelists who habitually prefer city pulpits are mercenary; nor do we mean to intimate that they have entered the ministry prompted by mercenary motives. We are willing to admit that as most of them are preaching at their own cost, and as they are not sent out by associations, conventions, conferences, &c., with stated salaries, there is need that they should be compensated for their services. The plan to hold such meetings in cities too has become so common that many, we suppose, conform to it partly because it is the custom. But after making all the allowance that these facts, and others like them, demand, still the fact stares us in the face that the successful evangelists especially could afford from time to time to hold meetings in obscure and neglected sections of the country. Some of them get such compensation for their services at one or two cities as will nearly support them for twelve months, and the aggregate of their yearly collections is at times quite large. Why, then, can they not give some of their time to country churches? It is possible that some of them think that holding meetings at obscure places would hinder them in their general plan of receiving invitations to important places. Such an opinion shows a want of sense and of moral courage. Did not Christ preach in obscure places? Did he not preach to the woman of Samaria? Is the servant better than the Master? If a man has real merit his thoughtful regard for the poor will only add to his reputation. When it is known that the common people hear a man gladly, the millionaire is more anxious to hear him.

It would doubtless sometimes be best for associations, conventions, synods, etc., to provide for the support of evangelists. This would enable some of them to be less concerned about their own support, and give them better opportunity to labor where they expected little or no compensation for their labor, and less excuse for not doing so. There are questions involved in this matter of evangelistic work that churches ought to face, and face promptly. The number seems to be multiplying, and evangelists are becoming much more common than they were a few years ago. If a man feels impressed by God to do this work, he ought to go forward and do it, even though at first discouraged by the churches, or by his fellow ministers. But the system needs study and ventilation.

As to the brother alluded to in the commencement of this paper, we would not be too harsh in our judgment. The matter of compensation for his services may have so often claimed his attention that it had become too much a matter of business with him. But let the extenuating circumstances be what they may have been, yet the fact faces us that the said evangelist did wrong. Could he not trust the Lord and his brethren? Is the gospel a matter of merchandise? Will the day ever come in the religious history of this country when the reputable minister of Christ shall say to any church or pastor soliciting his services, "So many sermons for so much money." But even that kind of proposition would not be more objectionable than to stipulate that the price expected should be secured by a note signed by the leading members, or what amounts to about the same thing, a written promise to see the amount paid.

We are willing to admit that there are churches among us, and doubtless among other denominations, that are entirely too careless in paying the evangelist, or the visiting pastor, for his services. There are churches that will allow ministers to travel some distance by railroad, or otherwise, at their own cost, and then pay little or no attention to their compensation. It is just possible that the evangelist in question was dealing with a church that had the reputation of not being liberal; but still there was no good excuse for his course, and its general adoption would bring the evangelist and his work into deserved disrepute.

It strikes us that nothing is better calculated to draw the hearts of a congregation toward a man than for him to preach the gospel earnestly to them, and prove by his conduct that he is thinking far more of souls than for his own personal compensation. If the preacher is an evangelist, and dependent upon his labors for a support, and that fact is known to the brethren, and emphasized near the close of the meeting, he will generally be well paid for his services. It may not be amiss to add here that we seriously question the wisdom of the plan adopted by some evangelists of collecting for orphanages or other benevolent institutions that are not located where the meeting is held. This remark is intended to apply to all such cases, but especially when the benevolent institution for which the evangelist solicits contributions is supported principally by his collections, and is called his orphanage or asylum. Evangelists, like other ministers, should not lay themselves open to the suspicion of being mercenary. There is room for this, especially when the collection is general, and for the evangelist, and it is left to him to decide what part of it shall go to the benevolent institution.

PROF. W. J. FERRALL, for several years associated with Rev. O. L. Stringfield in the excellent Wakefield High School, was last week elected to the chair of Assist. Professor of Mathematics at Wake Forest College to fill the place made vacant by the death of Prof. Beckwith. Bro. Ferrall is a graduate of Wake Forest and was known throughout his career there as a talented student and a man of high moral character. We know his election will give general satisfaction.

LACK of interest in missions largely depends on lack of knowledge. Increase the knowledge of missions, and the interest in missions will be greater.

CO-OPERATION IN MISSION WORK—OUR FATHERS AND THEIR WORK

Thirty-nine years ago the Board of Missions was located at Milton. At that time Dr. A. McDowell was the President of the Board, and Nathaniel J. Palmer was the Corresponding Secretary of the Convention. In the report of the Board to the Convention for that year is the following:

"A considerable amount of missionary labor is performed through the agency of the Associations, of which neither the Convention or its Board receive any account. While we rejoice to know that the work is done, we would respectfully suggest to the Associations engaged in this benevolent work the propriety of allowing their missionaries to come under the appointment of the Convention. The Associations might raise their funds, select their missionaries, designate the fields in which they wish them to labor, and recommend the amount to be paid them, and merely refer their appointment to the Board of Missions by which the missionaries should be commissioned and paid, and to which they should report at the end of each quarter.

The report of the Board of Missions would then exhibit in one connected view all the missionary labor performed in the State, and the missionaries thus appointed would be lead, from their connection with the Convention, to speak more frequently of the Convention and its work, the tendency of which would be to remove prejudice, disseminate correct information and to engender a spirit of more enlarged benevolence among our churches."

The above suggestions in the report of the Board of Missions lead to the appointment of a committee to report on "the co-operation of the Associations with the Convention." The committee reported in substance:

"We heartily approve of that part of the report of the Board which relates to the co-operation of the Associations with the Convention, and would here respectfully suggest some reasons why all the Associations in the Convention should refer the appointment of their missionaries to the Board of the Convention.

1. The report of the Board of Missions could then show at one view the whole amount of missionary labor performed in the State, and what were its necessities.

2. Our knowledge of these matters would be most complete and satisfactory, and as our interest in these matters must depend upon our knowledge of them, this plan would most likely give us the widest and most unselfish interest in missions.

3. It is believed that the Board of Missions, from a more extensive acquaintance with the preachers in the State, could in many cases procure an efficient missionaary from another section of the State where there may be an over-supply, when one could not be found within the bounds of the Association where he was specially needed, and, if he could be found, the Board would appoint him at the request of the executive committee of the Association in which he was to labor.

4. If the Association is too weak to supply all of the destitute territory within its bounds, the Board of Missions can aid in its work, and if the Association is strong and can do more than supply its own destitution, or if it has no destitution to engage its efforts and means, then their connection with the Convention would afford them the best means of wisely disbursing their contributions to State Missions.

5. If they attempt to co operate with the Board of Missions in four of its departments—Colportage, Sunday-schools, Home Missions, Foreign Missions—and act independently of it in the fifth—State Missions—confusion and conflict of interest will often occur. It is, therefore, sincerely hoped by your committee that every Association within the bounds of the Convention will allow their missionaries to be appointed by the Board of Missions of the Convention so that there may be union, concert and harmony in all of our operations.

6. We mean by co-operation that each Association might raise its own funds, select its own missionaries, designate the field in which they wish them to labor, and recommend to the Board the amount to be paid, and refer their appointment to the Board of Missions by which they should be commissioned and paid, and to which they should report at the end of each quarter.

ELDER THOS. S. YARBOROUGH,
ELDER W. H. JORDAN,
DR. WM. M. CRENSHAW,
Committee.

After interesting remarks by Elder Thos. S. Yarborough, J. J. James, Wm. Hooper and James B. Taylor, and others, the report was unanimously adopted."

J. J. Lansdell, F. H. Ivey, L. C. Perkinson, R. I. Devin and C. J. Nelson, so far as we know, were the only delegates present when the above report was adopted by the Convention, who remain among the living. Our fathers were sagacious and unselfish men, and their one purpose was to advance the Baptist cause in all parts of North Carolina.

The committee and the Convention planned more wisely than they knew. In all the years since the above report was made we doubt whether any committee ever saw the road to denominational success in State Mission work more clearly, or presented it more wisely, than did this committee in the above report.

It is just the plan of co-operation between the Associations and the Board of Missions in State Mission work which has been prosecuted so wisely and successfully through the past thirty-nine years. It is likely to be continued through the time to come. "They rest from their labors; and their works do follow them."

FROM OUR TRAVELLING AGENT.

MOREHEAD.

The sea breeze was in lively demand here last week. Not many are here now, and the crowd has not been very large at any time during the summer. The boatmen have done very little, and consequently are not in the best of humor.

I came for work and not for pleasure. I was not so much disturbed by the offensive management of the hotel of which I heard so much complaint. Personally I have nothing to complain of. I was not a guest of the hotel, and yet I was politely invited by a colored gentleman, specialia gratia, to the privileges of the hotel. When, however, I saw that many others, as worthy as myself or any one else, who were on the inside were stood aside, I confess my appreciation of my compliment (?) was very limited.

I found Bro. Moore pretty well broken down with his work at protracted meeting in one of his country churches. He was, however, as he always is, ready to help me in my work for the RECORDER. I went to Morehead soon after Bro. Moore took charge of the work there. We then had not more than a half dozen subscribers. Now thirty-five members of the Baptist church here take the RECORDER. It is the banner church in the State in subscriptions to the RECORDER in proportion to the membership of the church, and as might be expected the pastor gets his salary and the church is meeting all of its pledges and obligations. Bro. Moore has been thinking of spending some time at the Seminary, but about this he is not yet fully decided.

If a good Baptist young man will go to Morehead and open a school he can make it a success. There are plenty of boys and girls there now to support a good school. All that is necessary is for a capable man to take hold and go to work. There is also a fine opening here for a young physician to build up a first-rate practice.

GOLDSBORO

is said to be the hottest town in the State. There is, in fact, no just cause for saying this. It has come about because the trains meet here about the middle of the day, when Main street is at its hottest, and this is the only part of the town seen by the passengers. On other streets in different portions of the town it is just as pleasant as in many other towns in the State.

Bro. Edwards, the pastor of the Baptist church, is getting ready to go to his old home in South Carolina to spend a month's vacation which the brethren have given him. I do not know of any one who needs or deserves a little rest more than Bro. Edwards. He is greatly encouraged in his work at Goldsboro. Within the past year one hundred and fifty members have been added to the church, while there has been a general revival of the Baptist cause in the country around Goldsboro.

The Atlantic Association is now one of the best organized in the State, and there is to be no changing front nor stacking arms to consider any new plans or methods of doing our work.

I was sorry to find Bro. J. E. Peterson suffering with rheumatism. For two months he has, for the most part, been confined to his room. He is better now, and the brethren hope he is soon to lay aside his crutch and take his place among them again.

Bro. Leary is in feeble health. He is, however, bearing his suffering with that patience and resignation which comes from a life spent in the service of the Master.

....At the meeting of the Board of Trustees, who met at Raleigh last week to elect an assistant Prof. of Mathematics at Wake Forest College, were: Prof. Jno. B. Brewer, Prof. F. P. Hobgood, Robt. E. Royal, Prof. Taylor, P. A. Dunn, Prof. L. R. Mills, Hon. Geo. W. Sanderlin, Dr. C. Durham, Hon. Jno. C. Scarborough and Dr. T. E. Skinner.

....Our Baptist friends look forward to a profitable session of the Richmond Association which commences here August 4th and continues through Sunday. Several important questions will come before the body, one of which will be the advisability of uniting with some larger Association, this containing only ten churches.—Laurinburg Exchange.

....Bro. C. A. G. Thomas resigned the care of the church here (Elizabeth City) on yesterday to accept a call extended by the church in Greensboro. The resignation was accepted, and I have heard he will preach his last sermon here on the second Sunday in August. Bro. Thomas has done a great work here, and will be greatly missed.—J. B. Harrell.

....In 1851, the Baptist State Convention was held in Wilmington; and, on Sunday night, they held a great meeting in the interest of State Missions. Elder L. C. Hinson spoke on "The destitution of ministers in the State," Elder J. B. Solomon on "The means of supply," Elder Wm. Hooper on "The general subject," and Elder J. J. James on "The great need of Baptist preaching in different sections of the State."

....Bro. J. S. Joyner of Franklinton died suddenly at his home on Friday, July 29th, at 6:10 p. m. He was about fifty-five years of age. He was a member of the Baptist church in Franklinton, and a most prominent and useful worker therein. Truly, a splendid man and brother has been taken from the earth, and we sincerely deplore his death. He leaves a family, with whom and the church and community of Franklinton, we sympathize in their common loss.

....Rev. L. G. Broughton, having spent three weeks at Piedmont Springs, has gone to the White Sulphur Springs at Mt. Airy, where he will remain until the second of August, when he returns to his pastorate at Winston. Bro. Broughton, assisted by Rev. J. J. Hall, pastor of the Baptist Tabernacle of this city, will begin a series of meetings at the Broad Street church, Winston, on the third Sunday in August. The addition to the church building will be completed by that time.

....In a lecture by Sir W. W. Hunter, who is high authority on the statistics of India, on the progress of religion in India, it is said: "The increase in the province of Bengal, during the nine years preceding 1891, was as follows: General population, 10.89 per cent.; Mohammedans, 10.96 per cent.; Hindus, 18.64 per cent.; native christians, 64.07 per cent. In British India as a whole, the vote was: Increase of general population, 8 per cent.; increase of christian population, 30 per cent." These are eloquent figures.

....Rev. P. A. Eubank, of our African Mission, has asked to be allowed to retire from the work in Africa, "for a year or two at least," and his request has been granted. Bro. Eubank has been driven to this action by the claim of his child upon its parents. Rev. J. A. Brunson, of our Japan Mission, also retires from the work. Bro. Brunson, after a long protracted and severe struggle, mental and spiritual, has been led to conclude that he made a mistake in thinking that he was called of God to be a missionary, and so, feeling that he is not where the Lord would have him, he comes out like a man and says so, and asks to be released. He assures the Board that he is in heartiest sympathy and accord with it in its plans of work, and promises his best efforts in behalf of that work at home.—Foreign Mission Journal.

Institutes for Colored Ministers.

Dear Bro. Durham:—I snatch a moment to give you my impressions of work done in the Institute at Winton, as conducted by Rev. J. A. Whitted of Warrenton. Let me say that I was more than favorably impressed. The character of the work was admirable—Bro. Whitted is a born teacher, and I believe incalculable good to the colored Baptist ministry of the State will result from these summer schools.

The attendance was surprisingly good—just double that of last year—and shows the growth of interest in this work among the ministers themselves.

I was present, and rendered what aid I could, and I tell you it was no holiday season, but a busy time. Standing before a black-board, lecturing, quizzing, and being quizzed for six or eight hours daily this hot weather is anything but funny and refreshing.

The exercises consisted of Lectures, and Bible Readings, and Doctrines and Discipline, Pastoral relations and Duties. Scripture exegesis was made prominent, also methods of preparation and delivery of sermons.

I was a little apprehensive at first as to my reception among them in the role of instructor, but their cordial greeting, and apparent enjoyment of my labors speedily convinced me that my fears were groundless. They even volunteered a vote of thanks for my presence and instruction.

So far as my observation goes our colored pastors as a rule seem peculiarly grateful for the appropriation for these Institutes, and make any sacrifice to attend them. Great good has resulted, and great good will yet result from the work you have enabled them to do this summer. THOS. G. WOOD.

Murfreesboro, July 26, 1892.

The above is a report made at our request. These Institutes are being held under the auspicies of our Board of Missions.

C. DURHAM, Cor. Sec.

From Colorado.

Dear Bro. Bailey:—The Central Baptist has broadened into a real, and I hope, a permanent Kansas constituency. Missouri Baptist are prospering right along. We have a strong list of educational institutions. We have a Baptist orphanage and a great Baptist sanitarium.

William Jewell College has secured Dr. John P. Greene, pastor of the Third Baptist church of St. Louis, for President. He is the strongest man among us. The Third church is the best Missouri church—not the largest, but the most beneficently felt among Missouri Baptists. L. B. Ely has added by the help of the Education Society and the liberality of Missouri Baptists, $40,000 to William Jewell's endowment.

My Patee Park church in St. Joseph grows. More than seven years have we grown together. How I enjoyed a visit from Prof. J. Henry Simmons is beyond all words. He and Charles Lee Smith honor North Carolina Baptists in Missouri. Fraternally,

N. R. PITTMAN.

State Missions—Our Fathers.

"The future success of this Convention depends very much on State Missions. With the map of the State before us we have divided the State into twelve sections, each of which will be a field sufficiently large for one missionary to occupy. We therefore recommend that a missionary be appointed for each of these sections, and act under written instructions from the Broad, unto whom they should be amenable.—John Culpeper, Sr., Ch. Com."

Report to Convention, 1833. The State was divided into twelve sections, and a missionary was appointed for each division.

"We lament to find so much diversity of opinion among our brethren on this subject,—but if we wait for unanimity of sentiment, we shall be called from our listless inactivity to account for our stewardship, and thousands of our fellow men pass into eternity unprepared, and nothing done.—Wm. P. Biddle, Ch. Com."

Report to Convention on State Missions, 1835.

"State Missions is a work of immense importance. If this is suffered to languish, all the others will suffer with it. The success of Foreign Missions will be found identified with the success of State Missions. When State Missions prosper, all of the other objects prosper, and when State Missions decline all the other objects decline with it. We regard State Missions as the ground work and support of all the other objects of the Convention.—Samuel Wait, Ch. Com."

Report to Convention, 1841.

"Your committee considers our State Missions department the main spring, not only of the successful movements of this Convention, but indeed of all our religious and denominational operations in the State. It is the legitimate province of our State Mission department to cultivate the soil on which we are to depend for the support of all other departments and operations. Your committee would recommend that the office of Agent and Corresponding Secretary be united in one person—that he be required to give his whole time to the work—that he be paid liberally for his services—that he be located in some central and convenient position—that he have near him, and near to each other, a small but an efficient Board—that to these the whole business of State Missions shall be confided—that they be required to meet statedly at least once a month—and that they be directed to give a full and detailed report of their proceedings at each annual meeting of the Convention. —T. Meredith, Ch. Com."

Report to the Convention, 1845.

"The work of State Missions lies at the foundation of the whole missionary enterprise. The supply of men to preach the gospel at home and abroad must begin here—the means for sustaining our Foreign Missions must be derived from strong and faithful churches here. Success in the labors of State missionaries is a sure pressage and pledge of enlarged ability to support all of our missionary and benevolent enterprises at home and abroad.—Wm. H. Shaw, Ch. Com."

Report to Convention, 1849.

"It is to State Missions that we are to look for an increase of effort in foreign lands. Cultivate our own waste places, and that will enable us to extend our efforts to more distant and barren fields.—D. S. Williams, Ch. Com."

Report to Convention, 1850.

"The number of missionaries under appointment of the Board is altogether inadequate to meet the wants of the destitution, and instead of seventeen we ought to have at least one hundred missionaries constantly in the field."

Report of the Board, 1866.

Meeting in Warsaw.

Rev. C. A. Jenkens of Oxford has just closed a very interesting and successful meeting with us at Warsaw. The method of conducting our meeting was a new departure. On the previous Saturday church meeting we had a reunion or annual roll-call of the membership with an all-day basket meeting. This brought out a large attendance and inspired christian fellowship. Bro. Jenkens came to us fresh from a new experience with his own churches. He became deeply impressed over a year since that the old method of preaching directly to sinners over a disorganized and dead church membership was the great cause of failure and inefficiency on the part of our churches. Scores would be added, but the church would gain little or no increase of spiritual life. Five to ten would still go on vainly trying to perform what a hundred ought to do; the church was full of deadheads; the new members soon became discouraged or relapsed into sinful habits; the fact of church-membership was no longer a guaranty of a correct life. Our brother became convinced that this state of things could be revolutionized by appealing more directly to the individual membership; getting them to break off evil habits, to take a more active part in public worship, and through a consecrated church to reach sinners. He succeeded beyond his most sanguine expectations in thus leading his churches into marvelous activity and power. Pursuing these methods in Warsaw for a few days, he has succeeded in arousing and organizing this church as it has never been before. The church is quickened with a new life.

A large number of backsliders have been reclaimed, nine were added, and we believe that blessed results will continue to follow in the months and years to come.

We earnestly commend Bro. Jenkens to any church that desires a similar work. He has special qualifications for this work, and would readily engage in it as often as he can be spared from his own field.

At Clinton on Thursday night we ordained C. P. Johnson as deacon with the aid of Rev. J. L. Stewart and Rev. J. Hartwell Edwards of Goldsboro. Bro. Edwards gave us a very instructive and interesting sermon on the Diaconate, which our people much enjoyed. We rejoice at his great success upon his field, and we are glad his church has voted him a month of needed rest and recreation.

O. P. MEEKS.

Some Thoughts as to the Mission-Methods Controversy.

And above all have fervent charity among yourselves.

Why should there be any disagreeable insinuations made against those who differ with us as to methods of mission work? Does any one really believe that D. W. Herring or G. P. Bostick are actuated by any other than pure motives in what they are doing and aim to do? When they were appointed missionaries of our Board, I with many others rejoiced at the appointment, because I believed them to be God-fearing, consecrated men; nor do I think they have ever done or said since shaken my steadfast conviction that they are consecrated to the great work of missions.

Does any one question, does any one question the consecration of our honored Board? We believe that they most earnestly desire the glory of God in the work they are doing for missions.

If what I have said be true, and I do not believe any but an extreme man doubts it, then there is no place for insinuations and doubtful and unexplained charges; and they should be entirely left out in what is said and written in all this matter. Suppose that brethren Herring and Bostick do criticise existing methods, why should we lose the sweetness of our spirit? Brethren Herring and Bostick are not infallible; indeed, it is a question whether any man, or set of men, is. I do not think we ought to hesitate to accord even to a missionary the right of private judgment, and especially where his view differs from ours only in the methods of missions. He should also be at liberty in all candor to express that judgment if he wishes to do so. More than that, I think the greater the effort to suppress an honest conviction, the greater and more overwhelming will be the reaction against any such spirit. All real Baptists will desire to know what all the talk is about, and they are going to know—and knowing will not be apt to hurt them, unless a devilish spirit gets in.

As to brethren Herring's and Bostick's views concerning mission work, I have this to say: I have thought over what they propose, viz., to refer the mission work to the individual churches, or groups of churches, alleging that a Board is unscriptural and unbaptistic; and, so far as I can see, their objection is not well founded. I do not see how a body of men deputed by the churches to carry out the wishes of the churches can rightly be considered as unscriptural. The work we are attempting—I might say are doing—could not be carried on by single churches, and to have a group of churches is, in my conception of it, the same thing as having a Board. This proposal, then, I regard as ruinous to all organized mission work. For my part, look at it as I may, I can not see how we can dispense with our Board. This is my judgment, and I claim the right to express it without presuming to claim infallibility.

But I write this article not to discuss the views of Herring and Bostick on the methods of missions, but rather to say that both Herring and Bostick are our brethren—honored and beloved in days past, and as worthy of our respect and affection now. They are qualified by piety, intelligence and experience for a notable work in China, and every effort should be made to save them for that work. They should not be alienated and estranged, but drawn with the cords of love. Nor should we criticise or condemn their plan of an Interior Mission. Their desire to penetrate into the heart of China bearing the message of salvation, in the spirit of Isa. 54:2, 3, the text that formed the basis of Carey's great sermon on evangelizing the heathen. I, for my part, would be glad to see such a department opened under the Board; and my heart would rejoice to see Herring and Bostick appointed as its first missionaries. I wonder if such a wish is wholly chimerical?

Be that as it may, these men are our brethren, and if we can not, or will not use them, I hope that God will in some way use them for the advancement of his kingdom in China.

In conclusion, I most heartily pray that God may avert from our mission work these unhappy dissensions, and cause what has already occurred to prove to have fallen out for the furtherance of the gospel.

Christ is King in Zion—No Pope for Baptists.

If Dr. J. L. Carroll was angry when he wrote the article in the RECORDER of July 27th, headed Brother Herring's "Disturbing Element," then he ought to apologize. But if he expressed his cool and deliberate sentiments, then he ought not to be a member of a Baptist church. He might suit very well to preside over a Roman Catholic inquisition, but is not a proper man for an undershepherd among those who recognize Christ as their only king and lawgiver.

It is not my purpose in this article to discuss the so called new departure in missions. But I would just say that I am glad that at least some intelligent Baptists have concluded that it is not absolutely necessary to the salvation of their souls to do everything dictated by our leaders.

Religious leaders are a good thing if we know how to use them. We ought to esteem them very highly for their work's sake and follow them just so far as they follow Christ, remembering that each individual must decide for himself after giving their views a prayerful consideration.

A Word to Young Ministers.

CERTAIN VIEWS OF PASTORAL DUTY.

I am led to believe that there is harm done by our preachers leaving their churches to go out to lecture or hold protracted meetings, or on other trips for several days, without asking permission of their churches. I think the pastor should politely ask permission of the church, or a majority of his hearers, as the church may agree, on the matter. If the church leaves the matter to the deacons, then he asks them and not the church as a body.

I think, further, that the church should give the pastor a living salary, and all the money or other contributions given the pastor, while working on those outside trips, less his expenses, he should give to his own church when he returns, with an itemized list of receipts and expenses.

Preachers are held up as models of religion, honor and honesty, and it is easy for common mortals to think the pastor loves to be gone because it helps him financially, &c. JUSTICE.

Churches of the Baptist Association can support Bro. Herring.

Dear Bro. Bailey: A good deal has been said in the RECORDER recently against the plank of brethren Bostick and Herring. I want to speak as one pastor of the Eastern Association. I have not been in this Association long, but am of the opinion that when Brother Herring comes down and offers himself to the churches of this Association they will except him enthusiastically. I think they can do it without being "disloyal" to anybody. Each church is an independent body and if one or more of these churches see fit to send one of their flock to China and pay his expenses and salary, they have a right to do so. This seems to me to be the example which the apostolic churches gave us.

This Association is able to support a missionary and still do as much for all other objects as it is now doing, and I believe it will do it. I understand that there is one church that has been giving only $25.00 for State Missions, but has effected a plan by which it can and will give Brother Herring more than ten times that amount. Some people don't understand how much it costs to send the money to missionaries; hence they do not give as freely as they will when they know that every dollar goes directly to the missionaries. Let the Board stand as it is and those who want to work through it, do so. Bro. Herring has been invited to visit my church and he is welcome to lay his plans before my people and I will advise them to contribute what they can toward his support. Fraternally, J. T. JENKINS.

Wilmington, July 26, 1892.

REV. DR. THOS. HUME, of the Chair of English at the University of North Carolina, writes us the following interesting letter from Glens Falls, N. Y.:

I have been delivering a course of lectures on the English drama, on English idioms and the development of English Prose from the fourteenth century to the present time, and am (naturally) glad that they have been largely attended. This is the third year of my connection with this National School of Methods of Teaching at Glens Falls, N. Y. Twenty-two lecturers and professors are employed to discourse on subjects of practical value to public school teachers and superintendents and to private school teachers and college men, and it happens that I am the only Southerner in the faculty. But everybody is full of hospitable kindness. The town is lovely for situation, and there could be no happier combination of opportunities for home study and much recreation than its nearness to Saratoga, to Lakes George and Champlain, and to the Hudson River, affords. Delightful outings are arranged by the faculty, many "sociables" are held, and a course of evening concerts and humorous and literary lectures from eminent men is provided. The neighborhood is that illustrated by the pen of the romancer, Fenimore Cooper, and abounds in Indian and French legendary associations. Electric cars take you for a mere song through a succession of villages, like Sandy Hill and Fort Edward, where you find the spring near which was murdered Jane McRea, the victim of an Indian horror, and her grave well tended in the cemetery and all manner of revolutionary remains. This town of ten or twelve thousand people has a $90,000 Y. M. C. A. building. Your correspondent addressed a large company in its beautiful hall last Sunday afternoon. The Baptist church edifice here is a model of simple elegance and convenience. Its pastor, Dr. Gow, is strong, devout, eloquent. I expect to preach for him before our community of teachers next Sunday. To-night we hear George W. Cable give readings from his own novels illustrative of Creole life in the South. You know how popular, too, is the representation of the negro character and dialect in the magazines and by lecturers and elocutionists.

The Education Board.

This Board aided forty-two young ministers last year—more than were ever helped before at any one time in the history of the College. To carry this large number, the Board was compelled to incur a debt. And now while we are paying off this debt, more than sixty young men are calling on us for help next year. Nearly all of these are most highly recommended to us by those whom we know to be men of character. But to more than half the number of applicants we have been compelled to say, we can not help you. The Board has adopted thirty for next year, but we shall not be able to carry them long and meet the liabilities already upon us, unless we have liberal responses from the churches. As the Associations are now beginning to meet, will not the churches remember this call. W. R. GWALTNEY.

Resolutions Rescinded and Withdrawn.

WHEREAS, The Harrellsville Baptist church in called conference, composed of about fifteen members, passed resolutions requesting the pastor's (Rev. C. N. Donaldson) resignation upon the basis of rumor emanating from Henry Clay Sharp; and whereas, Henry Clay Sharp has, in writing, withdrawn his language reflecting upon the character of our pastor, pronouncing his insinuations both unjustifiable and wrong, and expressing deep regret therefor; therefore be it

Resolved, That the Harrellsville Baptist church does now in regular conference rescind and withdraw said resolutions.

Resolved, That we sincerely hope no injury will come to the pastor's future ministry.

These resolutions were passed by Harrellsville Baptist church in regular conference, the 2nd day of July, 1892.

DOCTT TAYLOR, Church Clerk.

Warren Plains Church.

Bro. Bailey:—Pastor W. R. Cullum met his flock on Saturday, July 16th, and during conference tendered his resignation as pastor of Warren Plains Baptist church. The members knew that Bro. Cullum expected to attend the Theological Seminary and that his resignation would come, but were not prepared to cheerfully grant its acceptance. As pastor he has not only the love and esteem of his flock, but the entire community has learned to respect him as a man striving to do good as his Master did while on earth.

Rev. W. G. Y. Parker preached on Sunday, and Monday Rev. N. S. Jones came among us and assisted in conducting the meeting until Friday night. Brother Jones preached the New Testament truths in a plain, unmistakable way, carrying with it conviction to sinners and encouragement to believers. The meeting was truly a good one, and as a result of the meeting, Bro. Cullum baptized on Sunday eight believing christians, most of whom were grown people, and there are several more who have not yet united with any church. Notwithstanding the weather was warm and the building small, the congregations were large and attentive to the word of God. During several services the house was packed, and enough people outside to have filled a building as large. By the grace of God we are going to build a new house for his worship to seat the congregations that attend upon his service at this place, many of the timbers being now upon the ground.

God be praised for the work at this place.

Preaches More and Gets Less.

I happened to hear these words by some brethren: "Rev. J. R. Maynard preaches more and gets less pay than any other preacher in the country."

They, doubtless, had reference to the salary I get. As to doing more preaching than others, I am unable to say; but I can say that I have not yet done as much preaching as I have desired to do. I love to tell the "old, old story." Brethren, if I don't get big money for doing the Lord's work, I get big blessings, and look forward to receiving greater ones. The Lord never fails to pay us. He doesn't fail to pay men according to their real worth.

Owing to my disadvantages in life, I know that I can not expect the pay that I might have received had I gone to college and been sharpened up. The world likes style and fashion, but the good Lord don't give anything for these. He measures up the wheat and lets the chaff go. Some of we little fellows need more money than we get; but can not afford to quit our calling because the people don't do their duty. We don't get much encouragement, only as the Lord helps us.

I think we are helpful to some of our young college preachers, they always seem glad to see and beg us to feel at home. We help them in being good listeners to their instructive preaching. I have been with Rev. J. M. White a few days in a meeting at Cumberland Union. Bro. White is a learned man, and he knows how to use his power for good. When I am preaching in his presence, I feel that he is helping me up with his prayers. Lord, give us more such men. God knows that I love a true christian.

J. R. MAYNARD.

Morrisville, N. C.

The August number of the Baptist Home Mission Monthly is certainly a most valuable one. For some years the August issue has been an "Educational Number," and this is, without doubt, the most interesting and complete one ever issued. It contains accounts of the educational institutions of the Home Mission Society for the colored people and the Indians, and is fully illustrated, showing the principal school buildings, as well as the group of the last graduating class (ten in number) of Leonard Medical School, Shaw University, Raleigh, N. C., the only medical school for the colored people under control of the Baptists. Every one interested in the important educational work of the Society should secure a copy of this number, which we are informed will be sent free to all applicants. It shows what the Society is doing for the colored people and the Indians, and should be preserved for reference. The Monthly has been greatly improved lately, and is indispensable to all wishing to keep themselves informed of the great Home Mission work of the American continent. Price, fifty cents per year. Address, American Baptist Home Mission Society, Temple Court, N. Y. City.

See advertisement of Alleghany Institute, Roanoke, Virginia, to be found on the ninth page; also on the same page a representation of the new building of the Hollins Virginia Institute, Botetourt Co.

Talks About Law.—No. 5.

BY JUDGE R. W. WINSTON.

NOTES AND BONDS.

Laymen, by which is meant every one except lawyers, have a fair knowledge of many departments of the law.

But with the general principles that govern and control negotiable instruments, commonly called bills, bonds and notes, they have a scant acquaintance.

Such knowledge no man of affairs can afford to be without. A mistake here is often vital.

Every farmer should write and place these words above his hearthstone: "If I sign any note, the law will make me pay it, if some innocent person has bought it before due; and this, even if I received nothing on the note, or even if I was forced to sign it, or if it was a gross fraud on me."

This sounds like hard law, but it is necessary to protect society, and is the wisdom of the ages.

Now do the principles laid down above, apply to any paper or property other than negotiable instruments. Let us see: If a man steal your horse and sell him, you can claim your horse in any body's hands. No matter that the purchaser has paid full value for the horse and had no knowledge that it was stolen, it is your horse and the purchaser's misfortune.

But if a note be stolen, and transferred by the thief to a third person, in the usual course of business, before due, and for value, the person, so acquiring the note, may hold it against the world. As a wise Judge once said, a note "is a courier without luggage."

"Negotiability" means three things:

(1) That the title is in the innocent holder of the note;

(2) That you, who gave the note, can not set off any thing against such holder;

(3) That you can not show, as against such innocent holder, for value, that there was no consideration for the note.

Ignorance of these three principles brings woe to many unsuspecting persons; and knowledge of them is putting money in the purses of many sharpers.

Let us apply these principles to some cases, decided in our State. But it will scarcely be necessary to go to the books for illustrations, for the images of churn-notes, and wire-fenced notes, and beehive-notes, and other patent notes, come trooping before many of us to our sorrow.

Mr. Tillery, down in Halifax, one fine day, was at his place of business. Fink came in. For one hundred dollars, Fink would give a formula by which lubricating oil might be made at half cost. The trade is made. Tillery gives his note at ninety days for $100. Fink pockets the note, jumps into his buggy, says "Mix a white substance with ordinary oil in proportions of one-half each," and off he goes. Before the ninety days were out, Fink sold the note to Mr. Applegarth. Applegarth sued Tillery on the note. "No," says Tillery, "it was a fraud; I won't pay it." But our Court said, "The mere fact that the payee of the note may have perpetrated a gross fraud upon the defendent in obtaining the note from him, can not affect the course of justice," and Tillery had to pay the one hundred dollars.

Now we will examine a case "harder" than the foregoing:

In Rowan county in 1885, Mr. Michael bought a tract of land. He lacked $750 of paying for it. He executed his note for $750 to the vendor.

Before the note fell due, a bank acquired it. Michael did not know this fact, and paid the vendor the $750. Afterwards the Bank sued Michael. "Why," said he, "I have already paid that note."

"Not so," say the Court, "the Bank owned the note when you paid it; and it is your folly to have trusted a dishonest man."

This case teaches another lesson of great value to men who owe money on notes, to-wit: Never pay anything on a note until the credit is entered on the note itself. A receipt will not do in all cases; for your very receipt would not be good against your own note in the hands of an innocent purchaser of your note before due, as already explained. So well are these things known to the agents who sell patent rights and to some others, that they discount all notes as soon as may be and at the nearest Bank.

A curious case once fell under my observation:

A man died, supposed to be wealthy. His lands were sold by his heirs at law, within two years, to Mr. Greene of Vance county. Mr. Greene paid all cash but $3,000. He gave his notes for $2,000 due in one, two, three and four years. The executor sold his notes before they fell due. Then it was found that the estate was insolvent. Greene's land was needed to pay the debts of the estate. So Greene must, inevitably, have lost his land, all the cash he had paid, and have had the $3,000 to pay on his notes; but the case was compromised. And now Mr. Greene signs no more notes.

Verily, a note, like a dollar bill, passes from hand to hand; and when you put your name to one you will have it to pay if you are able.

As an after dinner pill, to strengthen the stomach, assist digestion, and correct any bilious tendencies, Ayer's pills are considered the best. Being sugar-coated, they are as agreeable as any confection, and may be taken by the most delicate.

Are You Waiting?

When you want an answer, wait for it. Ah! there is a good deal of wisdom here. How often do we go to the throne of God in prayer, begging for some favor, and how often do we rise from our knees and straightway forget all about the matter we have laid before Him! Why is this? Because we are not held in earnest. We want blessings; we ask for them half-heartedly, as though we did not expect them at God's hand; and too often we do not wait for the blessing to come in God's time and way.

If you want a favor you must wait for it. "It is good that a man should both hope and quietly wait for the salvation of the Lord." (Lam. 3: 26). When trouble overtakes us, it may be that we turn to God in prayer, but we are also apt to run to and fro into all companies with our complaints, aggravating our calamities, and quarrelling with the disposals of Providence concerning us. Be that far from you and me! Hope in the Lord! The difficulties that lie in the way of your relief may seem insupportable, but wait on the Lord in confident expectation, acquiescing in the Divine disposals, and you will not wait in vain.

Whatever you do, grow not remiss in your attendance upon God. "Wait on the Lord; be of good courage, and he shall strengthen thine heart; wait, I say, upon the Lord." (Psalm 27: 14). Keep close to God and to your duty. "The Lord is good unto them that wait for him, to the soul that seeketh him." (Lam. 3: 25). Are you waiting by faith? Are you waiting by prayer? Are you waiting by humble resignation to his will? Those that wait upon the Lord have abundant reason to be of good courage. "Wait on the Lord and keep his way." (Psalm 37: 34). That is the secret of happiness. Duties are ours; events are God's. If we conscientiously observe our duty, we shall be able cheerfully to refer ourselves to God for the disposal of all events; and in thus attending to the motions of his providence, we shall be enabled carefully to observe them, and conscientiously to accommodate ourselves to them. "Rest in the Lord, and wait patiently for him." Reader, are you waiting?—Selected.

A Rectified Mistake.

"The members of our church are very stiff." That is what she said. "Your statement is not a fair one. Some of the people are 'stiff,' and some of them are very cordial, and the cordial ones far outnumber the 'stiff' ones. Would it not be much wiser and fairer to say, "The members of our church are very cordial?" That is what he said. And he added other words—he was her pastor: "For the next three months, instead of looking for cordiality, suppose you spend your time in being cordial; look up the shy and the strangers, and greet them warmly; expect nothing for yourself, and do your best to make others happy and at home in the church. Try this for three months and see how it will work." She tried it, and it worked well. The plan is commended to others.

When one tenth or even one quarter of the people of a church are wanting in cordiality, the statement that "the church is cold and unsocial" is both untrue and injurious. —O. C. S. W., in Young People's Union.

Rheumatism.

We have heard and read a great deal of late about the wonderful cures performed by the Electropoise. Having some curiosity as well as anxiety to learn something more of its curative power than can be gathered from advertisements and rumors, the editor of the Review and Appeal called on Dr. W. H. Morgan, an eminent dentist of Nashville, who is dean of the dental department of the Vanderbilt University, and formerly President of the National Dental Association. Having heard that the Doctor had been greatly relieved of rheumatism, the editor asked, "Doctor, what can you say about the Electropoise as a curative agent?" The Doctor is a modest man, and somewhat averse to going into print, particularly to recommend any nostrum or remedy. He replied: "I can only tell you about my own case. I have constitutional rheumatism, and have suffered more or less all my life. My right leg was dwarfed a little from suffering with it in boyhood. From 1886 to 1890 I was never in any condition almost free from pain, except during a severe illness. For several years I have been so that I had to use a crutch and stick to walk at all. I had been so badly afflicted with rheumatism that I could not walk with my crutch and stick more than forty yards. Mr. DuBois called on me and asked me to try the Electropoise. I protested, because I had failed to get any substantial relief from the treatment prescribed by eminent physicians. I commenced the Electropoise with no faith in it. In two weeks I was better, and almost free from pain. I have been using the Electropoise for ten months, and though I am seventy-three years old, and have suffered all my life, I can now walk a little without crutch or stick; I can with a crutch and stick walk half a mile. My digestion has become good, and a heart trouble, incident to my rheumatism, which manifested itself in the loss of a beat occasionally and a pulse always as high as ninety and sometimes as high as one hundred per minute has given away and has given me no more trouble. My pulse has come down within the seventies per minute, and my health in every respect has been greatly improved."—Franklin, Tenn., Review and Appeal.

Said President Porter, of Yale College, "Don't drink; don't chew; don't smoke; don't swear; don't deceive; don't marry till you can support a wife. Be earnest; be self-reliant; be generous; be civil; read the newspapers; advertise your business; make money, and do good with it; love God and your fellow-men."

by local applications, as they can not reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give one hundred dollars for any case of deafness (caused by catarrh) that we can not cure by taking Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

Six Reasons for Observing the Missionary Centennial.

BY R. T. VANN.

1. It is a memorial, and God favors the right kind of memorials. The Passover and the Lord's Supper were divinely appointed memorials. God often reminds his people of Abraham and David, and Mary must always be remembered for her service of love.

2. It is a blessing to remember great and good men. What a power for good is the history of Washington! And Carey stands second to none in moral grandeur.

3. We are all interested in men; and the careers of the pioneer missionaries will be sure to awaken interest, and thus increase the popular information on missions.

4. The Centennial effort is a missionary protracted meeting, designed to accomplish for mission work what the ordinary protracted meeting does for the general work.

5. It is likely to reach very many Baptists who have been doing nothing for missions.

6. A great revival of the mission spirit will be followed by a general revival in the churches and a mighty enlargement of the kingdom of Christ.

Our Opportunity.

An opportunity is a responsibility. A great opportunity and a great responsibility lies in the celebration of the Centennial of Modern Missions. It is not only a memorial of things past. It is the opportunity that shall decide the triumph or failure of our missions in the coming century. To fail to do the great things planned for this year is to cripple our missionary work for the next fifty years.

Southern Baptists have set before them two objects. 1. To send to the mission fields one hundred new missionaries. 2. To raise a permanent and chapel building fund of $250,000 for Home and Foreign Missions.

These things cannot be done without a great awakening. From whence? From whom? The first christian church was not prepared for mission work until endued with the Holy Spirit. We must be touched and awakened by this Spirit. The awakening must come to the great sleeping mass of the church. These things cannot be done by the few, but by the many; by you and by me.

As far as we fail to come up to the full measure of this opportunity, in so far will this effort be a failure. If we do not help, we hinder. Better be dead than stand in the way of God's onward moving church. He who is not for us is against us. The cry is, Forward!

Country Work for Women.

[Extracts from a paper read by Mrs Ament, A. B. Mission, before the Peking Miss. Association.]

Will you join us in a trip to the country? The pastor is about to visit a village in which there is a small company of believers, and he thinks it wise to take his wife with him, that she may meet and instruct the women of the village.

Year after year streams of men come up to the capital to seek employment, or to transact business. Many of them stray into the street chapels and get a few ideas about the "Jesus religion;" and, in course of time, some of them may become inquirers. The pastor, or country helper, visits them; and ultimately they unite with the church. But it is not often that a Chinaman is found who will take pains to explain the doctrine to the women of his family; much less teach them to read. On occasion of public services in the neighborhood, inquiries as to their families only succeed in bringing a few old women and their grandchildren within sound of the preacher's voice. So that the question of work for women in the country is one of the most important problems in the evangelization of North China, and one full of difficulties that are hard to overcome.

We will take our children with us. In all work for the children in country homes, yes, for their mothers, too, it is a help to have with us two small disciples who have a genuine interest in the little heathen children, and whose presence disarms fear and dislike.

The foreign food box, with its compartments for coffee, milk, butter and self-raising flour, and made to fit the cart, is an adjunct not to be despised.

With its aid we can make use of many native products, and still preserve health and strength for the work undertaken.

Upon hearing of our arrival in the village, the people throng us. The pastor draws off the men and boys, while the "foreign lady" is given a seat on the hastily-swept kang, and an infusion of willow leaves is prepared for her.

A few words spoken in Mandarin, reassure our hostess; our picture book adds to the interest and, if at a loss for a text, we have only to listen for a few moments to the talk of those about us.

Is it wrong to allow precious time to slip away in general talk? Surely no time is wasted which gives a clearer knowledge of the interests and superstitions of those for whom we work, and without which knowledge our talk is like a thrust in the dark.

While listening to them, it will not be long before something will be said which will suggest a theme.

After talking and singing with them for a little time, we determine to relieve the hostess who is beginning to wonder how she is going to get leisure to cook her meal. We get down from the k'ang. In answer to inquiries, we say that it is a good plan to take exercise every day, and that we are about to walk.

Wondering at this foreign peculiarity, the women separate while we take a turn about the little village. Entering it again by some new road, we run across one of our recent auditors. She is busy on the threshing floor, and asks us to stop.

The evident pleasure at receiving a call from the missionary is a decided contrast to the treatment to which most of us are accustomed in our Peking work, and constitutes one of the charms of such a tour.

In the country it is rare that more than one family occupies the same court. So there is less fear of ridicule if foreigners enter. Then there is the traditional difference between simple-minded country folk, and the reserve of those bred in a great city. But explain it as you will, a welcome awaits you in the country and goes far to compensate you for the inconveniences incident to a tour.

Our new friend cheerfully rolls a sheaf of grain stalks along for us to sit upon, and in the shade of her silos we linger till the husband or brother in law comes up with more sheaves of millet, and in a gruff voice complains of her slow progress; then we move on, fearing to bring down further reproof upon her if we stay and hinder her work. Across the road is a company of girls and women washing their clothes in the little stream that runs through the village, and beating them with wooden rollers. Here we find texts ready to our hand—"Living Waters," "The Need of Soul Cleansing," "Wash me and I shall be whiter than snow."

We must not forget, however, to search out the women who are not free to come to us; the young women approaching the time for their marriage, who are kept closely at home. The young and middle-aged wives and mothers, whose lot it is to tend the pigs, harness themselves to the domestic donkey (alias mill) and grind the corn. Sometimes we find her weaving rush baskets, the baby creeping about at her feet. Sometimes she is out in the corn field; her garment sewed into a bag to receive the white pods. So the morning passes. We refresh ourselves with a noonday meal and again set out; this time looking up the women met and instructed on the last tour.

Here is one with the inevitable shoe-sole in her hand.

She, at least, can sit down and listen while she weaves the long thread to and fro.

We will read her a bit of the good book, explain it simply, and perhaps others will come in. Yes, here they are—the sisters-in-law—one with a bit of a baby buttoned up in her kua tzu, to keep it warm, only its head peeping out.

How well they listen to the first few words as we read a parable and begin to explain it. But now some one calls—all run out and leave the missionary alone.

Ah! here they are, come back and more women with them. We will begin again; accept the frequent interruptions and the irrelevant inquiries with patience, remembering how undisciplined are the minds of these women.

Perhaps, as not long since, a brawl occurs in the court-yard, and voices of the combatants drown the sound of the gospel message. The missionary's efforts at peace-making being successful, it is the natural thing to follow the affair by a pointed discourse on the love and reverence which ought to exist between mother and son.

A noisy child, whose mother is straining her ears to hear, gets a hard blow on the side of the head. This leads on to a few points about the delicate structure of the ear, which is endangered by such rough usage and of the moral effect of rude treatment upon the child. So what might at first have appeared as a hindrance, will often prove the missionary's opportunity; the incident being remembered by those who witnessed it, and the teacher's advice referred to long after it was given.

We are encouraged by finding the desire for the truth stronger and the enjoyment of the little prayer-meetings greater; some going from house to house with the missionary, as she seeks out the "shut in" women; till the last places visited will hardly contain the number thus gathered.

By night some of the women will have attended more meetings than there are days in the week, and helped in the volume of song that has ascended.

Hymns, written in a bold hand upon strong paper, which may be pinned to the wall before us, are a help in the singing.

Though the progress is slow here, it is not time wasted; since the music is a comfort to the singer though torture to the musical ear of the teacher.

The oft repeated words of Jesus' loving care and saving grace will find their way to other hearts, which the singer could not reach by spoken words.

So the days go by, and our allotted time having passed, we must go back to duties in the city. After repeated visits of this kind to a village, we find it easy to select a few of those whose interest seems genuine to spend a few weeks in Peking, to study the doctrine. Here knowledge of their home surroundings will stand us in good stead and help us to adapt our teaching to their needs. But the number of those who can leave home is necessarily small, and the need of other such visits will therefore remain.—Woman's Work in the Far East.

The Foreign Mission Board and Rev. D. W. Herring.

As it now appears to me, the Board is right and Bro. Herring wrong. The only evidence, looking to the contrary, is the disinclination on the part of the friends of the Board to allow Bro. Herring to be heard. If the Board is right, as I now believe it to be, certainly its officers and friends will be able to demonstrate to the satisfaction of the denomination that Bro. Herring's position is wrong, and the sooner Bro. Herring is given an opportunity to present his side and answers thereto are made, the better it will be for Foreign Missions and its Board. Just so soon as the great masses of the denomination feel that there is behind the Board and its management something that the Board is trying to conceal from the people, just so soon will confidence be shaken, and when confidence is shaken, contributions will fall off. Of all religious denominations, Baptists hate rings worse, and delight in being acquainted with the inside workings of all their Boards more. They believe in open and free discussions of all questions, and that any other course is pursued by persons having in charge any of the work of the denomination, just in that proportion is the work crippled.

A few years ago, a proposition was made by one good brother in the Tar River Association to another to talk over and arrange beforehand any changes which it might seem desirable to make in any of its work, so that public discussions of such could be avoided. The proposition, I do not doubt, was made with good intentions, nevertheless, being wrong in principle, was rejected. The reply was: "No, sir, whatever is done by the Tar River Association ought to be done in open session—before the great body of its members—discussed freely, fully, and aboveboard, and not arranged beforehand, and so long as I remain a member of it such shall be done."

This brother had the right view of Baptist polity—the right idea to get the hearty, cordial and liberal support of the denomination; for my observation is that, when questions are discussed fully and openly, there is little danger but that the people will decide them right, and having done this, will give their hearty support accordingly.

Let Bro. Herring be heard in our Union Meetings—in our Associations—in our State Conventions—in the Southern Baptist Convention—through our religious papers. Let the friends and officers of the Board meet his arguments and satisfy the denomination that he is wrong, and the matter will end. If it can't be done, let's adopt Bro. Herring's views and revolutionize the present method of Foreign Mission work. What we all want—certainly what we all ought to want—is to convert the heathen, and the best method of reaching them ought to be desired by all.

Since the above was written, my attention has been called to Dr. Carroll's article in the RECORDER of July 27th, in which he expresses merciless condemnation of Brother Herring. It was an old Roman maxim that he who condemns a man unheard is unjust though he condemn justly. According to this truth—a self-evident one—Dr. Carroll stands convicted, by his own confession, of the grossest injustice. He says that an army officer, acting as Bro. Herring has done, "would have been shot in less than twenty-four hours for desertion and disloyalty," adding, "Is such conduct any less criminal in the army of the Lord?" I do him the credit to suppose that he would inflict this sentence only metaphorically since the spirit of the times render it inexpedient to advance such sentiments as his article implies. He accordingly takes upon himself the two-fold office of passing sentence and himself carrying it into execution.

I do not like his figure, which savors too much of Salvation Army tactics; but, to continue the same figure, we Baptists acknowledge Christ as the Great Head of the Church, and our first allegiance is due to him, loyalty to him and to his truth being the highest duty. It is related that the Czar of Russia on one occasion, wishing to show the German Emperor the perfect discipline of his subjects, called on one of his officers and commanded him to jump out of the window. The fatal order was unhesitatingly obeyed. The German monarch then called in one of his officers and gave the same command. "Is it for the Fatherland?" was the query. When told it was not, he refused to obey, choosing to preserve his life for the service of his country. So Bro. Herring owes a higher allegiance to what he believes to be his duty than to the Foreign Mission Board. The Board is only the instrument for the extension of Christ's kingdom and the evangelization of the world. Is the instrument of more value—to be more honored—than the work itself?

As I have already said, with the lights before me, I believe the Board to be right. But of Bro. Herring's consecration and devotion to his work and of his perfect sincerity, I have not the slightest doubt. And I do not see how he, with his convictions, could consistently act otherwise than he is now doing.

It is needless for our brethren to become panic-stricken as to the effect of this "disturbing element" upon the work of the Centennial year. The efforts of one man, if he be in the wrong, can not avail against the prayers and labors of God's people. If he is in the right, God speed him. If by investigation, he is found to be in the wrong, the Board will be on a firmer footing and will enjoy the confidence of the people to a greater extent than before.

Ordination.

Dear Bro. Bailey:—On the 16th of July, a presbytery met at Berea church for the examination of Bro. T. M. Leary, preparatory to his ordination to the full work of the gospel ministry. Rev. J. F. McDuffie of Durham was Moderator, and Rev. J. W. Millard of Goldsboro was Secretary. The next day was appointed as the time for the ordination. The sermon was preached by Bro. Millard, after which the prayer and charge were delivered by Bro. McDuffie.

In the afternoon of that same day, a new presbytery was formed, by the addition of Bro. Leary to the two former brethren for the ordination of three deacons for the Berea church in Durham county. These brethren, W. C. Mason, H. J. Pope, and P. H. Massey, after a satisfactory examination, were then ordained, Bro. J. W. Millard being the Moderator of the presbytery, the prayer being offered by Rev. J. F. McDuffie, Bro. Leary delivering the charge.

Bro. Leary is a young missionary brother in the eastern portion of the State, and is at present a student at Wake Forest College. He is serving the church at Berea faithfully as pastor, and the church having lately become the mother of the new church at Efland, lost to it some of her former deacons, called for the ordination of three new ones for her own service. Thus making herself ready for active service, the next week was devoted to a protracted meeting. In this week's work, I helped Bro. Leary, preaching twice a day. As the one most competent to judge, I can say that never in the time I have known the good people of this church, have I seen them so thoroughly aroused to the work of the Lord. There were some dozen professions, which however represent only a part of what was really accomplished. May God help this band of noble christians in their labors for him.

Some merchants get the best they can; some get the meanest they can.

Your dealer in lamp-chimneys--what does he get for you?

There are common glass and tough glass, tough against heat. There are foggy and clear. There are rough and fine. There are carefully made and hap-hazard.

You can't be an expert in chimneys; but this you can do. Insist on Macbeth's "pearl top" or "pearl glass" whichever shape you require. They are right in all those ways; and they do not break from heat, not one in a hundred.

Be willing to pay a nickel more for them.

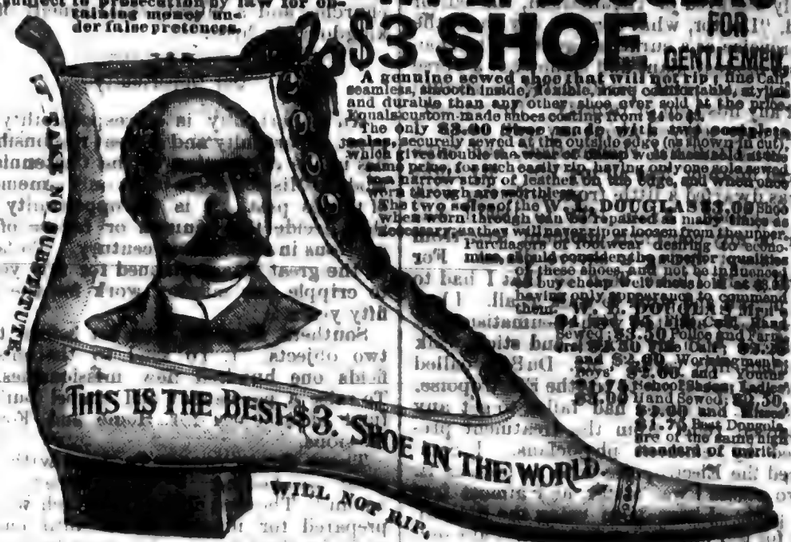
W. L. DOUGLAS $3 SHOE FOR GENTLEMEN.
CAUTION.—Beware of dealers substituting shoes without W. L. Douglas name and the price stamped on bottom. Such substitutions are fraudulent and subject to prosecution by law for obtaining money under false pretenses.



A genuine sewed shoe that will not rip; fine calf, seamless, smooth inside, stylish, comfortable, and durable; as any other shoe ever sold at the price. Equals custom-made shoes costing from $4 to $5. The only $3.00 shoe made with our patent leather tip, accurately sewed at the outside edge (as shown in cut), which gives double the wear of shoes sewed the same price, for such easily rip, having only one row sewed through a narrow strip of leather on the edge, and when once worn through are worthless. The two soles of the W. L. DOUGLAS $3.00 Shoe when worn through can be repaired as many times as necessary, as they will never rip or loosen from the upper. Purchasers of W. L. Douglas shoes can save from one to two profits usually paid dealers, and buy cheaper of their home dealer, as they have only a small profit to add to the cost of shoes before they reach the consumer. Beware of dealers who have other shoes which they claim are "just as good" as W. L. Douglas $3.00 Shoe, when they have no equal. Take no substitute. If your dealer cannot supply you, send direct to factory, enclosing advertised price, and shoes will be sent you by return mail or express, postage free. Name your kind, size and width wanted. Will give exclusive sale to shoe dealers and general merchants where I have no agents. Write for catalogue. If not for sale in your place send direct to Factory, stating kind, size and width wanted. Postage free. W. L. Douglas, Brockton, Mass.

The Richmond Pastors at an Association.

One of the speakers complained that the Richmond preachers occupied all the time of the body, and seemed to manage every thing their own way. All who were present must have sympathized with the remark. It was really painful to see how they struggled for the floor. Nothing whatever could be done with Clopton. He spoke at length and with disheartening frequency. Dr. Whitfield was a sight to see. He spent his entire time endeavoring to get the eye of the Moderator. Joel Tucker seemed to think that if he did not have a hand in everything that went on, it would certainly go wrong. Dr. Cooper spent all three days in front of the Moderator, getting up and down. Landrum, of course, was simply irrepressible. Cade consumed a vast amount of valuable time in useless disputation. We never saw the mild-mannered Hutson so utterly unmindful of the rights of others. He was everlastingly talking. Bro. Hines was like a jack-in-the-box and spent about half the time talking. We were particularly outdone with Dr. Hatcher for the way he acted about the Orphanage when it was under discussion. Brethren will remember that he was evidently opposed to hearing Dr. Woodfin. And when Dr. Woodfin was through, they will recall that there was a vast throng of speakers clamoring for the floor, but that no amount of pleading could induce the Doctor to give way to anybody. We never felt ashamed of the Doctor before. Brother Wright, too, gave us no end of worry in the same line. But the man of all others who was absolutely unmanageable, who seemed utterly and hopelessly incorrigible, and who consumed, we judge, about two thirds of the entire session, was Bro. Kirk. When it is remembered that the churches represented by these brethren form so feeble and inconsiderable a part of the Dover, their conduct becomes all the more reprehensible. The Richmond brethren must take a back seat. —Religious Herald.

Cholera has decreased in towns in Russia in which it first made its appearance, but in those places most recently affected it is increasing rapidly. In Kooban, the most seriously affected of the western districts, there were eighty-six new cases and twenty-four deaths Wednesday. In Dagheston, on same day, there were 379 new cases and 154 deaths, and in Tirek 388 new cases and 208 deaths.

Alice Mitchell, the young girl who murdered Miss Freda Ward, in Memphis, Tenn., some time last year, was on trial at Memphis last week. The jury gave in a verdict of insanity, and Alice Mitchell will be sent to an insane asylum. Should she be released at any time she can be then placed on trial on the charge of murder, as she was only tried as to her mental soundness or unsoundness at the time of her trial, the question as to her mental condition at the time of the commission of the homicide not being touched upon during her trial.

The New York Herald has announced a novel plan for the present presidential campaign. To the person who most nearly predicts the popular plurality of either Cleveland or Harrison, it will give a free trip around the world, paying all expenses; to the person making the second best prediction it will provide a trip to London, Paris and return, and the third best prediction will be rewarded by a trip to London and return. Competition is open to residents of all parts of the United States, the only conditions being that the prediction must be made on a ballot which is printed in the Herald every morning. Any one can make as many predictions as he has ballots.

MARRIED.

WHITE—BUXTON—On June 27th, 1892, in Jackson, by Rev. Thos. G. Wood, assisted by Rev. R. E. Peele, Dr. J. Herbert White of Elizabeth City and Miss Ruth Buxton of Jackson, N. C.

DIED.

NEEDHAM—Went home to heaven July 18th, Jennie, infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. B. Needham, of Columbia, N. C. Only two months ago we buried all that was mortal of our darling Jennie, her oldest sister; and now her little namesake has joined her. "The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord."

BROTHER.

SAUNDERS—Little Johnnie T. Saunders, son of W. L. and Lillie A. Saunders, was taken from the arms of his fond parents and borne to the bosom of Jesus on June 30th, 1892. Not quite two years had he been here when God took him.

He was too promising a flower
To bloom upon this earth,
And God did give him angel power,
And bright celestial birth.

The world was all too bleak and cold
To yield him quiet rest;
God brought him to the Shepherd's fold,
And laid him on his breast.

There, mother, in thy Saviour's arms,
Forever undefiled,
Amid the infant cherub band,
Is thy beloved child.

ISLER—It is with a sad heart that I announce the death of our beloved brother, Col. J. W. Isler, which sad event took place at his residence in Wayne county on Tuesday, July 12th. He was one of our purest and best men and was held in high esteem by all the people of this entire section of the State, and had repeatedly represented his county in the State legislature, and held other high positions of public trust. It is saying a great deal to say that he was a good and pure man, but I go further and say that he was an earnest and devoted christian.

Bro. Isler was in his sixty-second year, and for many years he had been a devoted christian and a faithful member of the La Grange Baptist church, being at all times the friend and helper of his pastor, and often will this writer miss his fatherly advice and substantial encouragement in our church work. Death came in an unexpected moment, but we feel confident that it found him ready with his hope and trust well grounded in Christ.

He leaves a faithful and devoted wife, five loving and affectionate children to mourn their loss, and with them in this their deep sorrow is the loving and tender sympathy of a host of sorrowing friends. May the God of all consolation and grace sustain them.

G. L. FINCH.

Tributes of Respect.

Resolutions of Lumberton Baptist church on the death of Solomon Crump:

WHEREAS, The Lord in whom we trust and who causeth all things to work together for good to them that love him, has seen fit in his wisdom to call from labor to rest our beloved brother and deacon, Solomon Crump; therefore Resolved 1. That we gratefully accept with reverence and humility, all of God's dealings with us and his own, and in this loss to us as a church, we bow in humble submission to his wisdom; that in the death of our brother, we lose a member in whose every-day-life the true principles of christianity were exhibited; that as a deacon of the church for twelve years, he has faithfully used his influence "for the faith which was once delivered to the saints" in its apostolic purity, always humble in his work and kind and just in his dealings with all men.

Resolved 2. That we extend to his widow and children our sympathy in their loss, and commend them to the God in whom their loved one trusted, as a comforter who can heal all sorrows and give solace when all human words and deeds have failed. We specially point them to the power of Christ in the life of their departed husband and father, and trust that his life as seen by them in his home, in his church and in the community may be a source of joy for their consideration and an example leading them to greater faith and increasing love for the Saviour.

Resolved 3. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family; that they be spread upon the records of our church, and that a copy be sent to the Robesonian and BIBLICAL RECORDER with the request to publish.

Parties having young ladies to educate will do well to consider the following facts:—
The Institute offers superior advantages in Literature, Science, Music and Art. Only the best talent is employed to give instruction in the different departments.
The situation is one of remarkable beauty. There are twenty-eight acres of land within the corporation, but so located as to give the school all the privacy of the country, while near enough to the town to secure any advantages it may offer.
The health record is unsurpassed. During the last ten years there have been two cases of pneumonia, one of typhoid fever (brought by the pupil with her), no case of diphtheria, scarlet fever or measles. Chills have been strangers, and bilious fever almost unknown. The average of medical bills since the organization of the school has been about twenty five cents per pupil for the scholastic year. The amount paid for medical bills by the entire boarding patronage the past session was ten dollars.
This institution is the unencumbered property of the Baptists, and is the only property owned by them in the State used exclusively for the education of girls.
The dormitories have recently been refurnished, and only two pupils occupy the same room. Parties leaving points east of Charlotte, Danville, Richmond and Washington reach the school the same afternoon via Boykins, Va., and the Murfreesboro railroad. As the property is unencumbered, the charges can be made very moderate. Board, literary and music tuition, if paid in advance, are two hundred dollars for scholastic year. The fall session begins on Wednesday, Sept. 7th. For catalogue or additional information, address
JNO. B. BREWER, President.

The Home Circle.

Transverse and Parallel.

My will, dear Lord, from Thine doth run
Too oft a different way;
'Tis hard to say, "Thy will be done,"
In every darkened day.
My heart grows chill
To see Thy will
Turn all life's gold to gray.

My will is set to gather flowers,
Thine blights them in my hand;
Mine reaches for life's sunny hours,
Thine leads through shadow-land.
And all my days
Go on in ways
I cannot understand.

Yet more and more this truth doth shine
From failure and from loss:
The will that runs transverse to Thine
Doth thereby make its cross.
Thine upright will
Cuts straight and still
Through pride and dream and dross.

But if in parallel to Thine
My will is set to run,
All things in earth and heaven are mine;
My will is crossed by none.
Thou art in me
And I in Thee,
Thy will and mine are one.

—Selected.

The Right Boy in the Right Place.

In answer to your question I would say that in order for a boy to achieve any permanent success in the business world, he must have

1. High moral character. I know how one may thoughtlessly say, "What do some immoral and irreligious business man care about a boy's character? They have none of their own, and they think light of it in their employes." This may possibly be true in a few cases, but in the vast majority of instances, shrewd business men want those in their employ whom they can trust. They feel safe only when they are thus surrounded. Who wants to put any responsibility upon a morally weak person? He will fail you in some critical moment. He is well compared to "a weak jointed pair of tongs, such as pusillanimously cross their legs, let their burden drop and pinch the hand that trusts them." Did any business man, however indifferent he might appear to high moral purposes, ever go out to a horse race and look about among the young men gathered there for a boy in his office? Did he ever select a partner for his skill in playing billiards in the saloon? Does he select for a trustee to care for his children's property the man who spends most of his time in the social club? To ask such questions is to answer them. Within a few days one of the wealthy merchants of our city, who makes no claim to religious principles and seldom attends any church, told me that it was his chief concern to have about him in his office men of the highest character, and he would have no others. Recently a bank was to be examined for some special purpose, and the president told all the clerks they must work on the Sabbath. One young man refused. He said he would work till 12 o'clock Saturday night and commence work again Sunday at midnight, but to work on the Lord's day was against his principles. The president told him that he should be discharged if he disobeyed, and, although he had a widowed mother dependent upon him, he chose to lose his place rather than go contrary to his conscience. Now note the sequel. Within a week, a capitalist called upon this president and asked him if he could name a trustworthy man for a bank cashier, and he recommended in the strongest terms possible the clerk he had discharged. His loyalty to the right gave him his advancement. And this is always true. It is the boy of unflinching integrity that, when the "hard times" come, keeps his place when others are discharged; and that is sure to be advanced in the prosperous days.

I have a young manufacturer in my Bible class, who is able to sell what he makes at a higher price than any of his competitors. And what is the secret of it? The father's name for half a century has stood for all that is honorable in the business world, and the son is known to have inherited the same sturdy principles. The whole product of his mill is always sold, because it is known that he will deliver the best that can be made, without any attempt to reduce the quality, and this on his simple promise without any written guarantee.

2. He must be careful of his companionship. It is impossible to overstate the importance of this. The old maxim runs, "A man is known by the company he keeps," and it is a fair judgment. A young man's companions will ordinarily make or ruin him. Because it is so important, the business man asks, "Where are my clerks at night?" and, "With whom do they associate?" These are the test questions. When the day's work is over, when the tension is off, and he is allowed to do as he will without restraint, then you may know what the young man really is.

3. As a rule he must not be reared in a home of wealth. We often hear expressions of pity for the poor boy, but the rich boy is to be pitied a hundred fold more. Every business man knows that in the vast majority of cases the lad that has come from a home of luxury is useless. His father's money is about all there is to him. He has been trained to have all his wants gratified; he has little ambition; he lacks any incentive to be industrious. The poor boy, on the contrary, has been trained to habits of frugality. He is conscious that he must make his own way in life, for there is no one to help him, except as he earns promotion. This thought, ever present, is the constant spur which prevents him from yielding to the temptation to be idle and indifferent, until those permanent habits are formed which finally give him his character and his business standing. When I want a boy, I always pass by the one who presents himself in kid gloves, and take the boy whose jacket sleeves may have been outgrown, but who has a pair of hands that are not afraid of honest work.

4. He must be dead in earnest. Every mercantile interest is now so crowded that there is not the slightest chance for success for the heedless and indifferent. We often hear the remark made that everything is free in this country and that all places are open. But this is a falsehood; there is nothing open here, for very long at least, except to the boy who works. The idler and the dawdler might as well emigrate. The young man who puts his whole soul into his business and makes his employer's interest his own, is bound to suceed; you can not keep him back. But every business man knows how difficult it is to find such a boy. Advertise to day and you will have fifty or a hundred applicants. Then look them over, and how few there are that you will consider for a moment. You can see at a glance that there is no "snap" or "go" to them. They are for the most part young men that are drifting with little or no earnest purpose in mind. They never get anywhere in particular, for they are sailing for no definite port. As a part of this thought, every young man must master his own business. He must be "all at it and always at it." It is the age of the specialist, and the man who only half knows his trade will be outstripped in the race by his competitors. He must put his whole thought into some one business and keep it there, or else he will fail. The man who tries to carry on two or three will never succeed in either. The truth of this is seen in the mercantile failures, for they are almost all due to the fact that men have gone into outside things with which they were not familiar. Paul's motto, "This one thing I do," is as good a maxim for the young man in business as in religion.

5. He must, in order to master his own business, study the broad questions which are so important to the whole mercantile world. He should study the problems of free trade and tariff; the silver question; emigration and the shifting of population; transportation; the proper adjustment of capital and labor. There is no end fo literature upon all these questions, and it is within the reach of all. It broadens a young man thus to come into touch with the world; it will greatly increase his value to his employer, and will open up to him more certainly the path of honorable success. I have in mind as I write one of the best business men in this city, who started as a poor boy with only a poor grammar education, but he put his first earnings into books and his time into reading them, until he is thoroughly posted on all business questions, and his counsel and advice are constantly sought. What my friend has done, any young man may do if he will.

6. One final thought. Every young man ought to have an earnest desire to achieve success. It is a worthy ambition to work towards having an "interest in the business." Putting it on no higher plane, a young man's chance of reaching goal is increased many times by entering at the beginning of his life into the divine partnership with Jesus Christ's offers. No young man can open his heart to the incoming of the Spirit of God, without its enlarging and blessing him in every way. His mental faculties are enlarged with the spiritual. He has better judgment, he is cooler in an emergency, he is more ready in resources. As the mind reacts upon the body, and especially as he is taught to believe that that body is sacred because it is the dwelling place of God, he will be physically a stronger man because of his religious convictions. He will care for it more wisely. He will use his whole being as a trust. He is strong always, because he is conscious that his life is a plan of God; and that there is a divine will leading him on. The world often wonders how some men accomplish so much, but there intimate friends know the reason, because they talk freely with, and take their guidance from, him who is wisdom and power. "Godliness is profitable for the life that now is;" and other things being equal, the young man who, in the whirl and excitement of the daily business, never forgets the Silent Partner above, will be the victor. "Come up higher" will be the summons to him in the marts of trade, and the same words will be repeated with a richer, fuller meaning when he enters the real life beyond.—Samuel B. Capen, in The Advance.

W. C. Lourd, Leesburg, Ala., writes: My little babe, ten months old, was almost dying from teething, gave it Dr. Biggers' Huckleberry Cordial. The happiest result followed. Every home should have it.

Great Borrowers.

There is a class of persons in the world who are great borrowers—borrowers of trouble. Such have been thus well described: "They have the foolish habit of always borrowing trouble from the future. The trials of to-day are not enough; they must send a telegraph into the future, to inquire what may be to-morrow. Such men are frightened at their own shadows. Their fear leads them to suspect a foe where they find a friend—like the man in the fog, whose heart beat because he saw a monster form approaching on his path, which he found to be his "Brother John." While there is prudential wisdom in preparing for the worst, there is equal wisdom in always hoping for the best.

Some one has said, "The greatest troubles he ever had were were those that never happened." They were supposed or anticipated troubles that haunted him like so many ghastly specters, but which vanished as he approached them. The one who dwells in this realm of imaginary evils is a very unhappy person.—Christian Standard.

A Second Thought.

Look over your morning paper and you receive the impression that the world is filled with crime and disaster. You lay it aside with a feeling almost of despair. But you were abroad all day yesterday, threading miles of streets and mingling with thousands of people, and you saw no crime committed. You did see, however, enough of duty done, of kindly helpfulness, of cheerful self-sacrifice in time, convenience and service, to have filled a dozen newspapers with the recital of them. Here are columns of the papers filled for weeks with the doings of one woman who is said to have poisoned her husband. Well, you know of some wife whose daily self sacrifice for a helpless husband would furnish materials of noble heroism for a volume; but such devotion is so common as to pass without comment. Wifely devotion is no "news," while wifely infidelity is news, and there is a deep, hopeful, reassuring meaning in it It would be a bad world if it had to be raked all over every day to find good deeds sufficient to fill a newspaper.—Christian Standard.

You should expect temptations; you should not be afraid of them; for although the Devil can tempt you against your will, he can not conquer you, unless you consent to be conquered.—Peschoud.

LOVELY FACES,
WHITE HANDS.
Nothing will WHITEN and CLEAR the skin so quickly as
Derma-Royale
The new discovery for dissolving and removing discolorations from the cuticle, and bleaching and brightening the complexion. In experimenting in the laundry with a new bleach for fine fabrics it was discovered that all spots, freckles, tan and other discolorations were quickly removed from the hands and arms without the slightest injury to the skin. The discovery was submitted to experienced Dermatologists and Physicians who prepared for us the formula of the marvelous Derma-Royale. THERE NEVER WAS ANYTHING LIKE IT. It is perfectly harmless and so simple a child can use it. Apply at night—the improvement apparent after a single application will surprise and delight you. It quickly dissolves and removes the worst forms of moth-patches, brown or liver spots, freckles, blackheads, blotches, sallowness, redness, tan and every discoloration of the cuticle. One bottle completely removes and cures the most aggravated case and thoroughly clears, whitens and beautifies the complexion. It has never failed—IT CANNOT FAIL. It is highly recommended by Physicians and its sure results warrant us in offering $500 REWARD.—To assure the public of its merits we agree to forfeit Five Hundred Dollars CASH, for any case of moth-patches, brown spots, liver spots, blackheads, ugly or muddy skin, unnatural redness, freckles, tan or any other cutaneous discolorations, (excepting birth-marks, scars, and those of a scrofulous or kindred nature) that Derma-Royale will not quickly remove and cure. We also agree to forfeit Five Hundred Dollars to any person whose skin can be injured in the slightest possible manner, or to anyone whose complexion (no matter how bad it may be), will not be cleared, whitened, improved and beautified by the use of Derma-Royale.
Put up in elegant style in large eight-ounce bottles.

Church Committee on Discipline.

As Bro. Pritchard has asked for a prompt reply to his question concerning the church committee on discipline and its duties, I herewith submit my views for what they are worth.

I believe that a standing committee on discipline, whose duties are clearly defined and faithfully performed, is very helpful in the administration of gospel discipline, for several reasons.

1. Many alienations and difficulties among brethren are avoided or healed by the timely intervention and counsel of the committee.

2. Offenders against morality and religion are more promptly arraigned before the church that has such a committee. Brethren generally are very reluctant to report offenders to the church, and offenders too frequently ascribe their arraignment to malice or ill-will. But when offenders are reported by a committee in the discharge of official duty, the offender has less ground for the charge of ill-will or malice.

The appointment of such a committee, however, does not release any member of the church from obligation to work for the peace and harmony of the church by seeking to remove misunderstandings, settle personal difficulties, and prevent alienations among brethren. Nor is any member released from the obligation to report public offences either to the committee or the church.

While I believe it to be wise for brethren to report public offences to the standing committee, by them to be brought before the church; yet it is every member's right to report to the church.

To the question, "Whose duty is it to arraign a public offender?" Dr. Mell makes the following answer: "Any one who witnessed the act, or has heard the rumor of it, or has felt the effect of it. On no plea of obscurity, or youth, or sex, can church-members excuse themselves for silence and inaction, while public offenders are wounding Christ in the house of his friends." Cor. Ch. Discipline, pp. 38, 39.

As to the rule,—"No case of discipline shall be brought before the church until it has first been considered by the standing committee," it strikes me as being violative of scriptural church polity; and, therefore, it should be repealed or modified. The law concerning personal offenders, as expressed in the eighteenth chapter of Matthew, requires the aggrieved brother, who has taken the gospel steps to reclaim the offending brother and has failed in the effort to bring the matter before the church. According to the foregoing law, he could not obey his Master, for the standing committee are thrust between him and the church.

According to scriptural church polity, no committee can try cases of discipline. They can only act as peace makers where alienation exists or is about to arise, or counsel brethren who are in danger of going astray, or investigate damaging rumors or charges against members and report to the church when necessary.

The trial must be by the church. The accused has the right to demand a hearing, to meet the evidence against him, and have a fair and impartial trial before final action is taken in his case. Says Dr. J. L. Reynolds, in Church Polity, page 224, "Trial by jury is justly regarded as the palladium of personal rights. In a christian church, a member, when arraigned upon any charge, enjoys the benefit of trial by a jury of his peers, composed of all his fellow-members."

I wish to add a word or two on the make-up of the committee on discipline.

When other capable brethren are to be had, it seems to me unwise to have the committee to consist, in whole or in part, of deacons. These have their specific work—to serve tables—enough to fill their hands, if they understand their duties and try to discharge them. Dr. Gill has misled many brethren by his own misconception of the duties of the deaconship. Among other things pertaining to the office, he places these: "To exhort, admonish, and reprove; * * * to reconcile differences between one member and another, and to prepare matters to be laid before the church at church meetings, when needful." These are not the peculiar duties of deacons, but duties growing out of the obligations of church-membership, and binding upon other brethren as well as deacons.

The pastor is the last man in the world to be placed upon a committee on discipline. It is his solemn duty never to allow his name to be placed there.

In personal matters between brethren the pastor should maintain the strictest neutrality, decide questions of order, and clearly announce, from pulpit and chair, the scriptural teachings bearing upon the case, and at the same time keep within his own breast his opinion of the facts in the case, and of the guilt or innocence of the parties at variance.

In dealing with public offences the pastor should be governed by the same principles as in private offences.

I close with a quotation from Dr. Mell's Corrective Church Discipline:—

"In the pulpit and the chair, the pastor bears, in many respects, the same relation to the church in the trial of public offenders that the judge upon the bench does to the court in the trial of criminals. To the pastor it is reserved to see that the trial is commenced and prosecuted upon gospel principles. From the beginning to the end, he is to intimate no opinion, publicly or privately, of the guilt or innocence of the accused who pleads not guilty; but to hold the scales of justice even. The Saviour has devolved upon his churches, and not upon his ministers, the responsibility and the duty of condemnirg and putting away from them wicked persons." pp. 59, 60.

Centennial Children's Day.

The Baptists of the world propose to celebrate the second of October, 1892, as the Centennial Anniversary of the birth of Modern Missions. On that day was organized, in a private parlor in Kettering, England, by twelve apostolic men, a society whose fame has filled the earth and whose blessings have reached almost as far as the race of man extends. In Great Britain, in Canada, in Burmah—throughout the world this day will be commemorated. The Baptists of the South will observe it in a great convention in Louisville, Ky., and the Centennial Committee propose to render it forever memorable in the history of the Baptist Sunday-schools of the South by making it the "Children's Day of Centennial Offering."

Let us make this a great day in missionary work; and to this end we earnestly appeal to every Sunday school superintendent and teacher in the entire South to weigh the following considerations: If we are going to make this Centennial year a success; if the cause of missions is to be moved forward permanently, we must reach and interest the young, teaching them the facts of missions, and inducing them to give to this blessed cause.

We believe that the Chapel Card will do this latter work more effectually than any single instrumentality, and for the following reasons: The Card Plan is so simple that it can be easily understood. It affords a convenient opportunity of appealing to all classes, and of gathering up the small sums, as well as the large, and thus helping us raise the Centennial Fund of $250,000.

We respectfully suggest that this Children's Day be observed by every Sunday-school in the South. A beautiful Centennial program, handsomely illustrated with a series of pictures relating to William Carey's life, has been specially prepared and published. It contains hymns, original and copied, recitations, appropriate Scripture selections, etc., furnishing a complete and varied exercise for the day's celebration. The programs will be furnished free, in numbers sufficient for each scholar to have a copy, to every Sunday school in the South which will promise to take up a Centennial collection for Home and Foreign Missions on October 2d, (or other convenient day), or will press the Chapel Cards previously distributed or initiate their use. We would further suggest that the Chapel Cards be distributed beforehand, so collections upon them, in part if not in whole, may be reported upon this day. Also that the occasion be utilized to give out cards to all, young and old, who have not yet received them.

We confidently believe that a very large sum will be gathered into the treasury of the Lord by the general observance of this day.

The Centennial Chapel Cards are free; so are the certificates, circulars and leaflets, "Annie's Bricks," and "Miss Keziah and her Tracts," and with the Centennial Children's Day Program, can be had by application to Maryland Baptist Mission Rooms, No. 9 W. Lexington St., Baltimore.

The armor which God provides for us we ought to put on. We need to study, to pray, to worship; we need home influence, Sunday school influence, church influence, to fit us for the fighting, which we cannot shirk if we would like to. However strong we feel in the Lord, we are not strong enough to meet our enemies with anything less than a full suit of spiritual armor, and the approved weapon which God proffers us.—H. C. Trumbull.

Spiritual Photography.

Have you a camera?—If so, I am glad for you. The use of a camera not only gives relaxation and amusement, adding zest to needed physical exercise, but is most helpful in expanding mind and heart as well. Even a slight study of artistic effects in forming a picture will lead to a new appreciation of every scene in nature. It is surprising what charms present themselves to one who has begun to be educated in his love of the beautiful. Single objects, quiet nooks, graceful lines, odd shapes, as well as lofty hills and extended vistas appeal to his imagination.

But I do not intend to dwell on the artistic advantages of a camera. Let me simply offer one or two spiritual suggestions.

1. The sensitive plate. This is the foundation of photography. Without it no picture is possible. A glass plate is covered on one side with a delicate film, so sensitive to white light that a very short exposure, even through a small aperture, is enough to stamp a permanent impression. Accordingly, these plates must be carefully kept in the dark until the time comes to take the picture. They are transferred in the darkness to the plate-holder of the camera, and the camera itself is simply a dark box with every ray of light excluded, so that when the plate-holder is in position, the only chance for light to enter is through the little hole in front. This hole is covered by a cap, which is removed when the picture is being taken.

Now suppose these precautions are not taken, what results? The plate is spoiled. If light finds its way to the plate before the picture is taken, the sensitiveness of the film is lost, and the picture, if taken, would be indistinguishable in a "blur" or "fog." How many pictures have been thus spoiled, let amateur photographers say!

Now, the heart is a sensitive plate, designed to receive permanent, spiritual impressions. How sensitive it is, let parents, Sunday-school teachers, and all who have to do with children, say. How sensitive it is, let every one of us say when God has touched by affliction, disappointment or distress. It will not do, then, to expose these hearts of ours to evil influences, lest we destroy our sensitiveness to good. Many and valuable pictures have been missed, all because the heart had lost its freshness and susceptibility. Is there not here an explanation of much of our chastisement? God sends trouble and sorrow to renew the sensitive film, and to prepare us again to receive with tender hearts impressions of good. My friend, if your heart is thus sensitive, keep it so. Guard it carefully. Expose it not to every passing picture, but wait for noble themes, grand imaginations, permanent truths.

Is there here a suggestion to parents also? Be exceedingly cautious what pictures are offered to the sensitive hearts of your children. Much as has been said of the comparative value of early training, in the light of this thought it has not been too much. Heaven gives the child-nature a very delicate film, and now is the time for beautiful life pictures to be made.

2. The dark room. From this goes forth the sensitive plate to receive its impression, and back to it comes again to be "developed" and "fixed." What a mysterious process! How we hang over the plate with wonder in the harmless red light as the picture gradually appears on the film. What subtle agencies are hydroquinone and hyposulphite of soda, working in the darkness to bring out and render permanent the impression which has been made! And when at last the plate is brought forth, a clear, fine negative from which numbers of prints can be taken, what satisfaction is ours!

There is a spiritual "dark room," the closet. It is there in the presence of God, apart from the world, where right impressions are to be deepened and fixed. From the closet we go forth with hearts sensitive to truth and the varied lessons of experience; back to it we come that the good we receive may become a part of us forever. The "dark room" is where many plates are found to be worthless. So we shall find that in the closet we must reject many pictures which were treasured outside.

That which comes from the "dark room" is the negative. Against this, sensitive paper is placed in the light, thus receiving the picture. From the closet we go forth to find sensitive natures pressed against us on every hand to receive our influence. Remember that you are but a negative. God's light streaming through you does the blessed work. So God is in the dark and God is in the light! Yes, "the darkness and the light are both alike to thee."

Have I forgotten the most blessed application? Dear reader, do you wish your life to have its highest possible charm and usefulness? Then, if you have not already done so, seek your closet and pray that God may make your heart sensitive to his blessed Son, pray that Christ may be "formed within you" that so you may become the medium of transferring his divine likeness unto all within your reach.—Rev. E. P. Burtt, in The Watchman.

To be truly sensible of sin, is to sorrow for displeasing of God, to be afflicted that he is displeased by us more than that he is displeased with us.—Bunyan.

The nobleness of life depends on its consistency, clearness of purpose, quiet and ceaseless energy.—Ruskin.

Spiritual Habit.

Physically, we are constantly doing things without any thought. That is, we have done certain things so often that we continue to do them from force of habit. There should be a cultivation of spiritual habits in the same direction. What more practical and beautiful prayer could be offered than the one Dr. Arnold of Rugby prepared for his daily use before going into the schoolroom? It was as follows:

"O Lord, I have a busy world around me; eye, ear and thought will be needed for all my work to be done in that busy world. Now, ere I enter upon it, I would commit eye, ear and thought to thee. Do thou bless them, and keep their work thine; that, as through thy natural laws my heart beats and my blood flows without any thought of mine for them, so my spiritual life may hold on its course at these times when my mind can not consciously turn to thee to commit each particular thought to thy service."—Young Men's Era.

How to Increase Your Happiness.

If you would increase your happiness and prolong your life, forget your neighbor's faults. Forget the slander you have ever heard. Forget the temptations. Forget the fault-finding, and give a little thought to the cause which provoked it. Forget the peculiarities of your friends, and only remember the good points that make you fond of them. Forget all personal quarrels or histories that you may have heard by accident, and which, if repeated, would seem a thousand times worse than they are. Blot out as far as possible all the disagreeables of life; they will come, but they will only grow larger when you remember them, and the constant thought of the acts of meanness, or, worse still, malice, will only tend to make you more familiar with them. Obliterate everything disagreeable from yesterday, start out with a clean sheet for to-day, and write upon it for sweet memory's sake only those things that are lovely and lovable.—Lutheran Observer.

Nothing Can Hinder Prayer.

Nothing can destroy or detain a real prayer; its flight to the throne is swift and certain. God the Holy Ghost indites our prayers, God the Son presents our prayers, and God the Father accepts our prayers, and with a Trinity to help us in it, what cannot prayer perform? I may be speaking to some who are under very severe trials—I feel persuaded I am—let me beg them to take this promise to themselves as their own; and I pray God the Holy Ghost to lay it home to their hearts and make it theirs, "I will never leave thee nor forsake thee." God will not fail you though you fall yourself. Though you faint, he faintest not, neither is he weary. Lift up your cry, and he will lift up his hand. Go to your knees, you are strongest there; resort to your chamber, and it shall be to you none other than the gate of heaven. Tell your God your grief, heavy to you, it will be light enough to him. Dilemmas will all be plain to his wisdom, and difficulties will vanish before his strength.

Oh, tell it not in Gath, that Israel can not trust in God; publish it not in the streets of Askelon, that trouble can dismay those who lean upon the eternal arm. With Jehovah in the van, O hosts of Israel, dare you fear? The Lord of hosts is with us, the God of Jacob is our refuge. What man's heart shall quail, or what soul shall faint? Lift up the hands that hang down, and confirm the feeble in heart. "Be strong; fear not. God is with you; he will help you and that right early."—Spurgeon.

An opportunity came to you to be saved. Oh! how bright and attractive it was as the Spirit of God gently warned your heart and urged you to accept it. It was an awful hour with your soul. The Spirit sweetly urged you on with all his gentleness and love, to yield your heart to Christ. Your friends seeing your indecision, came and plead, but all in vain. The Devil laughed with hellish glee as he saw you refuse the offer of eternal life. The Spirit spread his wings and took his flight. Time rolls on. The years come and go. An opportunity presents itself again, but no Spirit stirs your heart within to accept it; you see nothing attractive in it; you care nothing for it. It is a gem indeed, but not to your eye. Others grasp it with joy, but it is a cold, dull, lifeless thing to you. "My Spirit shall not always strive with man." Gen. 6: 3—Prisoners of Hope.

Trust God for the future of humanity. The world was not made in jest, nor does the kingdom of God rest on a contingency. Faith, as well as love, casteth out fear. Two boys were talking together of Elijah's ascent in the chariot of fire. Said one: "Wouldn't you be afraid to ride in such a chariot?" "No," said the other, "not if God drove!" God drives the chariot of human progress, and it mounts as it advances. God is in his world, not outside of it. He is redeeming it from sin. He is making men. He is fulfilling his holy and beneficent purpose. Fear not, but believe and hope, for the power as well as the glory is his to whom be glory forever and ever.—Philip S. Moxom.

Brother talker, do something. Good doing makes forcible speech.

Summer Vacation.

Will you take your religion with you when you leave home this summer for your vacation? Will you, in some very substantial way, let people know that you are a christian? Will you stand up for Jesus, and refuse to engage in such amusements as will bring reproach on you as a professing christian and dishonor on your Master?

Will you make choice of a summer resort where you can have spiritual helps, so that you may come home in the fall greatly strengthened and better prepared for christian work than ever before?

If you have been weak, and wanting in courage in the past, will you turn over a new leaf this summer, and take a bold stand for Jesus?—Epworth Herald.

The Evening Service.

With good air, good light, good preaching and good music there may be a successful evening service in any church which is not already overworked without it on Sundays. Of course above all the aim must be to stir men's spiritual natures. Mere entertainment, whether as an end or a means, never succeeds in filling a church after the novelty has worn off. The music must be kept devout, the sermon simple and earnest, the prayers rich in faith and love and pleading, the saints interested in the service for sinners and the minister sympathetic with those on whom the church does not yet get a saving hold. Where churches do not crowd one another, they can usually have the ear of the people if they want it. A church intensely in earnest and aggressive keeps the pews filled. A minister full of faith and of the Holy Spirit keeps the church earnest. Such a minister and such a church united have a commanding influence in the community.—Congregationalist.

Wise Words.

God lights no man's house who shuts up all the windows.

The right kind of a man is never hurt any by persecution.

Take the nails out of the church and down goes the steeple.

The man who works for God always gets his pay in advance.

The surest way to win the love of people is to become lovable.

Whenever a wise man makes a mistake it teaches him something.

When Christ fills us the first thing he does is to empty us of self.

If you are willing for God to use you in his own way he will do it.

The man who tears one leaf out of the Bible will soon disbelieve it all.

When the last hypocrite dies, the devil will not own a foot of ground on earth.

Some of the organ's sweetest notes come from pipes that can not be seen.

Going down low to work for Christ seems very high up from where angels look.

On the day that a man finds out that he is a fool, he has become a near neighbor to wisdom.

The man who does not believe in a hell always has material enough in his heart to start one.—Ram's Horn.

A Heavenly Message.

During the early ministry of Charles H. Spurgeon, he was invited to preach in the vast Crystal Palace at Sydenham. He queried whether his voice would fill the immense area, and, resolving to test it, he went in the morning to the palace, and thinking for a passage of Scripture to repeat, as he reached the stage this came to his mind: "It is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptation, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners." Pronouncing the words, he felt sure that he would be heard, and then repeated the verse in a softer tone. More than a quarter of a century later, Mr. Spurgeon's brother and co-worker was called to the bedside of a man, an artisan, who was near his end.

"Are you ready?" asked the minister.

"Oh, yes!" answered the man, with assurance.

"Can you tell me how you obtained the salvation of your soul?"

"It is very simple," said the artisan, his face radiant with joy. "I am a plumber by trade. Some years ago I was working under the dome of the Crystal Palace, and thought myself entirely alone. I was without God and without hope. All at once I heard a voice coming from heaven which said: 'It is a faithful saying and worthy of all acceptation, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners.' By the hearing of these words, I was convinced of sin; Jesus Christ appeared to me as my Saviour. I accepted him in my heart as such at the same moment, and I have served him ever since."

This voice was from heaven, though human lips uttered it; and God's word shall not return to him void, but shall prosper in the thing whereto he sends it.—Our Sunday Afternoon.

The elements of a manly course do not consist in wealth, birth, blood or intellect; but in a manly effort for the promotion of virtue, a manly interest in the elevation of the race and in a manly submission to the government of God.—D. O. Elder.

CHRISTIAN FELLOWSHIP.

The Apostle Peter exhorts christians to "love one another, with a pure heart, fervently." This command, if studied carefully by us, will be found to be quite forceful and strong in its demands. The necessity for obeying it becomes stronger when it is placed alongside the many commands in God's word that plainly teach the same great duty. There are two words in the Greek language that may be translated "to love," one is phileo and the other agapas. The first means a love largely composed of regard or admiration; such love for instance as an American feels for Gen. Washington; the other, love of the most tender, affectionate kind, such as a man feels for his wife and children. It is a significant fact that Peter here uses the latter verb, and hence exhorts christians to feel one for another that kind of love that they feel for the members of their own household. How many of us love our fellow-christians in this manner!

Let the reader notice, however, that the apostle makes his meaning plainer, and the passage stronger, by using the phrase "with a pure heart." What does this mean? Well, many things, and among them a heart without guile, without hypocracy, a heart that is not fickle and changeable, a heart that is moved to sympathy and love not by fleshly reasons; a heart that loves for the Master's sake, and hence, has a charity that hides the faults of even rude and unpolished disciples, and loves them over and through them all. Again, we may ask how many of us love our fellow-christians "with a pure heart?" How often is there policy mixed with our love! How often do we have men's "persons in regard because of advantage," and for fear that this quotation from God's word may not be well understood we would attempt to throw light on it by asking how often do we greet our rich brethren effusively and our poor brethren coldly, or perhaps not at all! How prone we are to feel indifferently toward the brother or sister whose early training and social standing are not all that could be desired, and gush over those who have enjoyed superior advantages! Ah, well, the Master has shown us how to do these very difficult things, for he loved the poor nameless woman who bathed his feet in her tears even as he did the rich nobleman who came with the question, "Good Master, what shall I do that I may inherit eternal life?" loved the poor sinful woman of Samaria well enough to preach to her one of the noblest sermons recorded in the New Testament, and when she spoke of the Messiah who was to come, said to her, with a plainness seldom used with the great or noble, "I that speak to thee, am he."

Once more, let us notice that the apostle uses the word fervently. What a strong word this is to close a strong sentence with! It is like a strong armed man driving a nail, and then with one mighty blow clenching it. What fervor and warmth breathe through the whole sentence, and especially the last word. The language is as strong perhaps as the pen of inspiration could make it; and we do not hesitate to say that few of us have learned to love in the manner here enjoined. And one great secret why we do not love the disciples of Christ more dearly is, we do not love the Master as we ought. If we love the father it is easy to love the children, though there may be great diversity in their gifts of mind and heart, and even in their personal appearance.

It was quite common in the sad centuries when the people of God often suffered even martyrs' deaths for the truth's sake, to hear the remark, "Behold how these christians love one another." Did the christians of old love one another better than they do now? Possibly they did, because persecution and suffering do at times draw people nearer to God, and hence, nearer to one another. But why should we wait for these things to teach us the duty of love? Why can we not love the Master well enough to love his people as we should? What a mighty power would the existence of more love among Christ's disciples have for good upon the ungodly world! Ah, how often do christian millionaires have their own off-spring "clothed in purple and fine linen, and faring sumptuously every day," while only a few doors from their homes are the orphan children of their brethren in rags!

We are sorry to say it, but there are some human societies that put to blush some of the churches of Christ. We were reading a speech made by a prominent Mason, at a recent public Masonic celebration, during which he related an incident showing the prompt relief this ancient order extended to some suffering orphan children. As well as we remember the incident, the facts were about as follows: In a certain town, in the more northern section of our country, three weary and travel-worn children were seen trudging along the snow-covered streets, and having stopped in a certain portion of the town to rest, their weary and helpless condition soon attracted a crowd about them. The oldest was a girl, and she related their sad story, that their father had died and left them penniless in another State. Their mother had preceded him to the grave. Before their father's death, he had told them of some relatives that lived in another State, and they were trying to reach their homes on foot. Whilst she was relating her sad story a Mason in the crowd happened to notice the Masonic badge on a little pin with which she fastened a faded shawl around her shoulders. He asked her where she got it, and she told him that her father had belonged to some society, and gave her the pin before he died telling her to keep it as it might be of some service to her. Instantly the news spread that these helpless waifs were the orphan children of a dead Mason, and a handsome purse was soon made up for them; and, after being well fed and clothed, they were placed on the train and sent to their relatives; some one doubtless writing in advance to learn their whereabouts.

The point we make here is that the crowd, or the Mason, ought not to have waited to see the wonder-working badge upon the person of the helpless orphan. Their appearance itself should have appealed in strong terms for the help they needed. We honor the Masons for their benevolence; but the church of Christ should suffer no human society, organized among men, to surpass her in deeds of charity or benevolence. Now if the orphan alluded to had incidentally said in her sad recital that her father had died a christian, would that statement have had the same effect upon those that heard, that the sight of the badge had upon those who understood its meaning? In some christian communities; in others it would not. And let it be understood that where true christianity exists that the sight of such suffering will move to action, and procure help, even without the spectators knowing that the sufferers are the off-spring of christian parents; for the Scriptures instruct Christ's followers in these words: "As ye have opportunity, do good unto all men, especially to them that are of the household of faith." In this christianity has the advantage of masonry or any other human organization. She extends, or should extend, her shield of protection over the suffering and the helpless, even when she can discover no badge of fellowship.

But again, we say, we are far from the standard in this respect that our Master would have us reach. A little honest self-examination at times, brethren, is amazingly helpful. In no line do we need it more than in that of christian love. When Christ said to his disciples, "A new commandment I give unto you, that you love one another," we do not suppose he meant to teach that that commandment had never been given before, but that the great duty of loving one another was to be so prominent in the New Dispensation that it came with the force of a new commandment. In this rushing, selfish age, there is perhaps no commandment that is more frequently forgotten. It would help the average christian, day by day, to repeat Christ's words, "All things therefore whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them." The thirteenth chapter of 1 Corinthians contains wholesome doctrine that we would do well to heed.

CENTRAL ASSOCIATION.

This body met with the Wake Forest church on Tuesday, August 2d. The morning was devoted to religious exercises. In the evening the body proceeded to organize by re-electing last year's officers, viz.: Bro. N. Y. Gulley of Franklinton, Moderator; Prof. C. E. Brewer, Clerk and Treasurer; Bro. W. B. Royall of Wake Forest, Historian. They are excellent officers, as was attested by the business-like dispatch with which they executed their duties.

In the absence of the Moderator elect, who was detained at home, Bro. Phillip Johnson was chosen temporary Moderator, and he, with the aid of an advisory committee, proceeded to appoint the various committees.

The report of the committee on periodicals was read and discussed Tuesday afternoon, and our thanks are due the brethren for the good words that were said for the RECORDER in our absence.

At night, Dr. Cobb of Raleigh delivered the introductory sermon, and held the closest attention of the people throughout his discourse.

On Wednesday morning we had good speeches from brethren Taylor, Scarborough, Durham and Gwaltney on education. After the speeches, the Association pledged itself to support seven ministers at Wake Forest College next year. The First church at Raleigh will support three, the church at Wake Forest two, and the rest of the Association will undertake to support two. The other Associations will do well to follow the example of the Central in this matter.

Bro. Gwaltney stated in his speech that while there were about seventy applications for help from the Board, as the finances now stood, they could hardly aid more than thirty.

If every Association would pledge itself to support one minister while at college, we believe that almost every application for aid could be granted and incalculable good would be done.

Wednesday afternoon was devoted to the celebration of this Centennial year of Missions. Brethren VanDeventer of Henderson and Carter of Raleigh made ringing speeches, and held the attention of the people for more than two hours.

Wednesday night was given up to devotional exercises. Bro. Tyree of Durham preached, and the sermon was enjoyed by all.

On Thursday morning Bro. W. H. Edwards made an earnest appeal for the Orphanage and was listened to with marked attention. He was followed by Dr. Cobb on the colored ministers' institutes. He told of the good that had been done in other sections, and made a good speech in behalf of the education of colored ministers at Shaw University.

Thursday, at 12:30 o'clock, the Association adjourned, after one of the most harmonious and profitable sessions ever held. The spirit of the meeting was excellent, and the people of the Hill cannot be thanked too much for their unbounded hospitality. The next session was unanimously voted to the church at Flat Rock.

FROM OUR TRAVELLING AGENT.

PILOT MOUNTAIN ASSOCIATION.

The Association met on August 6th at Pinacle, a new church built by Rev. S. F. Conrad. A nice little village has sprung up here at the foot of Pilot Mountain, containing now several good stores, one or two tobacco factories, and a number of neat and pleasant dwellings. Brother Crutchfield has established a good school here, the academy is new and nicely equipped for the accommodation of students, last session the school was good, and already he has assurance of all the pupils he can accommodate.

Our train brought about fifty delegates and visitors on the day before the Association met. Bro. Culler met us at the depot, and it was only a few minutes before we were all quartered at our homes for the session. By eleven o'clock Tnursday there was a large crowd present, every church in the Association being represented.

The introductory sermon was preached by Rev. H. A. Brown from Titus 2: 11, 12. The sermon was just such a one as Brother Brown's brethren would have expected of him—full of the plain, nourishing truths of the gospel, and was an inspiration to us all during the entire session.

Brethren D. F. King and Valentine were re elected Moderator and Clerk.

All the churches were represented, and I think all reported the pledges of last year collected, and some even paid more.

On Friday from 9:30 to 10 a. m., the report on Periodicals was read by Rev. W. H. Wilson and discussed. The RECORDER is no where more earnestly and enthusiastically recommended and supported than by the brethren of this Association. There were few delegates present who were not subscribers to the RECORDER, and the high appreciation which the brethren showed for the paper was to me a joy and a real source of strength and encouragement in my work.

10:30 to 11:30 a. m. was the time devoted to the discussion of State Missions. The report was read by Bro. C. Haymore, who followed with an earnest speech for the enlarging of this work in the Association. His heart is in the work, and there are no two brethren in the State who have done more to advance the State Mission work than brethren Haymore and Conrad. The worth of brethren who are content to do the Master's work in the highways and among the lowly will not be known till the day of final accounts. Dr. Durham followed in an interesting and instructive account of our State Mission work from its inauguration to the present year. And even to Dr. Durham, with all of his enthusiasm for the work and confidence in the judgment and liberality of the brethren, was, I think, surprised on the roll-call of the churches to hear the delegates increase their pledges fifty per cent. over what they gave last year.

Previous to the reading of the report on Foreign Missions, Bro. Herring spoke to the Association on the plans and methods which are advocated by him and Bro. Bostick for carrying on the mission work in China. Bro. Herring's plans contemplate the utter breaking up of all organized plans as they now exist for doing our Foreign Mission work. He severely criticised the Board and its managers. With his views of the Board and its management, I do not think he could have done otherwise than to dissolve his connection with it. While very few, so far as I could learn, agreed with Bro. Herring, yet the Association gave him a patient and respectful hearing.

Bro. L. R. Pruett read the report, and made a splendid speech, earnestly urging an enlargement of our work upon the present plans by providing more means and a greater number of men to go to the foreign fields.

Dr. Durham's speech on Foreign Missions surpassed any effort I have ever heard on the subject. Comprehensive, plain, simple in illustration, conservative in tone, and above all full of the spirit of him in whose name all our work is to be done.

The brethren were glad to have with them Prof. W. L. Poteat of Wake Forest College, who came up to the help of the Association in several of the discussions. Especially were we glad to hear him speak for Wake Forest College when education was being discussed, We hope to see him at other Associations.

Bro. W. R. Gwaltney made one of his very best efforts in behalf of ministerial education, and met, as he always does, a liberal response on the part of all the churches.

Prof. F. P. Hobgood spoke in the interest of Oxford Female Seminary. He is in fine health, and delighted with the prospect of his school for next session.

At this stage of the proceedings I am compelled to leave, with a number of other brethren, who cannot remain over for the exercises of Sunday.

The Association was a great success and a season of much pleasure to the brethren. We had preaching each night of the session, —on Wednesday night by Bro. Wilson, Thursday night by Bro. Rufus Weaver, and on Friday night by Bro. L. G. Broughton. Bro. Conrad and his people took care of the Association in a royal manner. Every one seemed to think he had been specially provided for. My home was with Brother Moore, upon whom and his interesting family, we left our benediction for their kind attention and boundless hospitality during the pleasant stay I had with them.

....The Baptist church of Leaksville has called as their pastor Rev. J. B. Richardson of High Point. We understand that Bro. Richardson will accept.

....Rev. R. W. Weaver has been engaged in a protracted meeting at the Baptist mission, Greensboro, for the past two weeks. About twenty-five have professed faith in Christ.

....A protracted meeting will be held at Independent Hill Baptist church, beginning next Sunday. Rev. J. A. Hoyle, assisted by several local preachers, will conduct the meeting.

....Rev. Walter Gilmore, who has been preaching and teaching in different parts of the State since he graduated from Wake Forest College two years ago, will attend the Louisville Seminary this fall.

....Colorado is to make the experiment of a General Divinity School at Boulder, the seat of the State University. The idea is to have a theological instructor for each denomination. Rev. Kerr B. Tupper represents the Baptists.—Ex.

....Hon. J. J. Davis, one of the Associate Justices of the Supreme Court of North Carolina, died at his home near Louisburg, Franklin county, last Sunday night. A good man gone.

....Bro. J. M. Hilliard, who has been Treasurer of Thomasville Orphanage, will be associated with Dr. J. N. Stallings as business manager and treasurer of High Point Female College.

....The next session of the Leaksville High School and Business College will open Septr 5th with a full corps of experienced teachers. We hear that the prospects are bright for the coming session.

....We are glad to hear that Rev. J. C. Rockwell, the pastor at Newport, Tenn., is well pleased with his field. The Newport church has built a handsome pastorium since Bro. Rockwell became its pastor.

....Rev. G. A. Sowell of Wake Forest conducted a good meeting at Oak Grove church the last week in July. Six professed religion, and four were added to the church. This week Bro. Sowell is engaged in a meeting at Mt. Olivet.

....Dr. Durham was at the Central Association and entertained the people with good speeches on almost every subject that came up while he was there. Bro. Durham had to leave on Wednesday afternoon to attend the Pilot Mountain Association.

....Rev. C. W. Cooper, pastor of the Disciples's church at Asheville, united with the First church, Raleigh, last Friday night. Bro. Cooper will continue in the ministry, and we cordially recommend him to any church that may need a pastor.

....Rev. Dr. J. W. Carter has been granted leave of absence by the First Baptist church of Raleigh until the first Sunday in September. He left Raleigh on Tuesday morning last for West Virginia, where he will spend his vacation with his mother and others.

....Rev. Dr. C. R. Henderson resigns the pastorate at Woodward Avenue church, Detroit, to accept the position of Recorder and Lecturer on Sociology in Chicago University. The Doctor recently declined the position of Secretary of the Home Mission Board of New York.—Ex.

....Bro. W. B. Wingate left Greensboro on the morning of the 4th inst. for Denver City, Col., for the purpose of probably going into business there. The Workman says "We regret the loss of Bro. Wingate to this community and State," in which expression we heartily join.

....On Wednesday morning of the session of the Central Association, the ladies held a missionary meeting in the lower chapel. This meeting was largely attended and much interest shown. Talks were made by Mrs. Dr. Carter, Miss Fannie Heck and Mrs. T. H. Briggs of Raleigh.

....Brother Stringfield writes us that he closed a glorious meeting at Mt. Vernon on August 1st. Twenty-one professed faith in Christ. Bro. W. H. Reddish, a ministerial student of Wake Forest College, rendered valuable service in the meeting. Bro. Stringfield went to Mt. Moriah on the 6th inst. to begin another meeting.

....Rev. Dr. Hume, of North Carolina, preached at the Baptist church yesterday. As is well known Dr. Hume is a speaker of great power, and his sermon was listened to with close attention. Professor Sawyer, who has a well cultivated, smooth and rich baritone voice, sang in the choir.—The Morning Star, Glenn Falls, N. Y.

....Rev. D. W. Herring, who was announced to preach at Brooklyn Baptist church to-morrow, in a note to Mr. Alfred Alderman, received yesterday, says that he cannot fill the appointment on account of the sickness of himself, his wife and youngest child. Mrs. Herring is very sick with typhoid fever, and the baby dangerously ill.—Wilmington Star, Aug. 6. Bro. Herring has our sincere sympathy, and we hope for the speedy recovery of himself and family.

....Mrs. Maggie Nutt Herring, wife of Rev. D. W. Herring, died at the home of her father in Mt. Airy, on Sunday afternoon last at seven o'clock, where she had been since her return from China. Sister Herring had been sick two weeks with typhoid fever. Her little daughter Margaret preceded her one week, having died the Sunday before. She leaves three children, all boys, the youngest being about two months old. We extend our sincere sympathy to the bereaved.

....We learn from the Wilmington Messenger that on the 5th instant, while resting in the pavilion at Ocean View, Dr. W. A. Nelson was struck half an inch under the lower lid of the right eye by a stray bullet fired at a target. The bullet was extracted by a sharp knife, and rallying, he returned to the Island Beach Hotel. Here while at the supper table a telegram was handed him from Nashville, Tenn., announcing the death of his brother, Hon. Anson Nelson. The latter was distinguished in Tennessee and had been a journalist in the cities of Knoxville and Nashville. Death also bereaved Bro. Nelson of a daughter some four weeks ago. We sympathize with our brother in his afflictions.

....The Tribune lately published an article on the New York clergy in which there appeared the following: "What do you think of our New York clergy?" I asked a dear old country parson visiting the city, who has not changed the least of his views for the last forty years. "Well," he said saidly, "I found a few believers among them, but, dear me, how friendly they are with the heretics. They visit and joke with them just as though they were sound in the faith. I don't understand it." Whereupon the Sun commenting on the above, remarks: "It is no wonder that this old country parson was sad, and he would perhaps have been yet sadder if he had heard a remark that was recently made by another parson here. 'I am an Episcopalian clergyman,' he said, speaking slowly, 'an Episcopalian, with leanings toward christianity!'"—Inquirer.

If to College—Where?

Just now the question is being considered many households as to the future of lads and young men. Parents ask themselves whether a son has those inclinations that it may be well for him to go to college, and whether having had a college education it will be serviceable for his success in life should he devote himself to commercial pursuits.

Every year is showing us that education is advancing in the appreciation of our people and that, whether attained in school or college or elsewhere, that a disciplined mind well stored with knowledge is indispensable to influence and usefulness. There can be no doubt that college life in many ways contributes to the making of a man. The boy who goes from a village in which he has gained a reputation for smartness will lose much of his self esteem by the friction of college life. While honest endeavor in emulation of his associates will be rightly rewarded, the vanities and weaknesses of a man are sure to be discovered, and unless he is impenetrable in feeling and comprehension, they will be corrected. It may be doubtful whether a college education will enhance a man's ability for money-making. Many a grab-all little country merchant or city dealer could give surer direction for getting rich than the faculty of a university, but it is certain that if a young man has right principles education will give him qualifications for usefulness that otherwise he could not possess, and thus his life will be ennobled and his happiness augmented. Much, however, depends on the institution to which a young man goes. One who is viciously inclined or lazily disposed will probably find some congenial associates in any school. But there are colleges where christian influences are dominant and where a young man in the critical period of his life will be helped to fight a good fight.

There are institutions which have a great reputation, but no college can make a man great who has no capacity and concentration of mind. While we hear much of Yale and Harvard, it is to be remembered that but a small percentage of the hundreds of men whom they graduate become famous. In a great college there is far more opportunity for a so called student not to do his work properly than a small one. The men who just now are taking the front rank as educators received their college training in institutions comparatively little known, as they are sometimes scornfully stigmatized, "one-horse colleges." President Schurman, of Cornell, was graduated at Acadia College in Nova Scotia; President Harper, of Chicago, recognizes Muskingum College as his alma mater. The Republican candidates for the highest places in our government are both graduates of Miami University in Ohio, a college which certainly has had very limited renown. The "stuff" must be in men if they prove successful in life, and, while we would not claim that all colleges will alike develop a man's powers or awaken his enthusiasm, yet we do claim that, after all, very much depends on himself whether he is a failure or a success in life.

When choosing a college parents ought to consider where the best moral and religious influences will be exerted. Young men must learn to endure temptation, but there is no need to place them where there are multiplied enticements to wrong doing. Nor ought denominational considerations to be overlooked. Young men may be sent to colleges where all the influences are, not perhaps intentionally, but nevertheless are really and perpetually antagonistic to their denominational training. If the principles parents hold are valued by them, they desire their children to walk by the same rule and mind the same things. When they place sons and daughters at school they ought to remember the influence association may have on their church relations. We have academies and colleges, of which we have cause to be honestly proud, and no Baptist can find just excuse for sending son or daughter to institutions under the control of other denominations—Christian Inquirer.

We answer the above inqdiry by saying, send your boy to Wake Forest College. In every respect it is the college for the sons of Baptists in North Carolina. It is the equal of any college, if not the superior, in its moral influence as well as in its educational ability. Its reputation may not be as great as some colleges further North, but you will very seldom hear of a Wake Forest graduate who is not a man and a christian and a success in life.

Meeting at Social Plains.

Dear Bro. Bailey:—May I say through the RECORDER to those who would like to hear of the Lord's work, that he very graciously and abundantly blessed us in a meeting at Social Plains last week. When I took charge of the church the first of this year, it was in a very low state spiritually and every other way; indeed, the church had nearly gone down.

We began a meeting there on Saturday before the fourth Sunday in July, and closed on the fifth Sunday with a glorious revival, which reached all the members of the church, and many others who were present from other churches. There were seventeen professions during the meeting, eleven joined the church for baptism, and we expect others to join at our next meeting. The Lord be praised for his mercies to the children of men. R. D. HARPER.

Dukes, Aug. 5, 1892.

We call special attention to the advertisement of Messrs. Julius Lewis & Co. of Raleigh as a firm of old standing (twenty-five years) and of proven reliability. They come to your notice with great inducements for your patronage, viz., one of the largest stocks at very low prices. For anything in the hardware line, you would do well to see them or write before purchasing.

Elder R. R. Savage.

In the death of this man, many North Carolina Baptists did not know how great a loss they sustained. For, looked at all round, he was one of the most remarkable men that has yet appeared in their history.

Born in Virginia, he graduated from Wake Forest; and immediately after the war, on the recommendation of Elder A. McDowell—name illustrious and venerable—took a pastorate in the Chowan Association. Here all his subsequent life was spent and most of his work was done.

Bro. Savage's intellect was of a high order. Clear and vigorous thought, logical method, cautious statement, and transparent honesty characterized his public utterances. Upon these qualities, and upon no tricks of rhetoric or twisting of facts or trifling with the emotions, did he rely for effect. And while never affecting oratory—his mind was not cast in that mould—these elements of style gave him great power as a preacher, especially with thoughtful people. His breadth of thought and clearness of perception, together with his well-known caution, made him exceedingly wise in council. So that his suggestions in the Convention and in the Board of Trustees of the College always received respectful consideration; while the Association and C. B. F.-Institute very largely took their policy from him: such was the regard entertained for his judgment by those who knew him best.

But perhaps his moral and religious character was even more remarkable than his intellect. Entering the service of Christ at an early age and the ministry on leaving college, he gave his life to faithful, patient toil till disease prostrated him six years ago. He ever took an active interest in the work of the denomination. He rarely failed to attend its meetings, and for many years, till disabled by sickness, served upon the Boards of Trustees of the College and C. B. F. Institute, being the president of the latter body.

He was eminently just and upright. He loved righteousness and truth and hated even the appearance of meanness. No man more keenly enjoyed the approbation of his fellows, but none ever saw him turn aside from duty to secure that approbation. While he delighted to commend all merit and goodness, he never flattered nor fawned; nor could he be moved by these arts. In any given case the only available appeal to him was through his judgment and consoience.

He was far above the littleness of envy or jealousy. With nothing like condescension but with fatherly interest, he recognized the merit and encouraged the efforts of his younger brethren. And it was beautiful to observe with what sincere delight he hailed their rising power. Never self seeking, he did not covet leadership; but when thrust upon him, he quietly assumed the responsibility and gave the cause his patient, earnest care.

Very broad was his benevolence and generous was his sympathy. Deserving need never appealed to him in vain.

And yet, so quiet was he withal, so unobtrusive, that comparatively few in his own State appreciated his value. Those best knew the flavor of his fruit who lived beneath his shadow.

"There are some hearts like wells, green mossed and deep
As ever summer saw,
And pure their water is—yea, pure and sweet:
But you must come to draw."

Such was he. And so his own people cherish his memory not only with fragrant love but with that tender reverence also which great characters always inspire. Love and reverence! Add now a gratitude that never can forget how much it owes to him, and you have the motives that prompt this humble tribute. R. T. VANN.

Union Meeting of the Mt. Zion Association.

This body convened with Yates' church, three miles from Durham, on July 29th. The introductory sermon was preached by Rev. W. C. Tyree of Durham.

On Friday evening and Saturday, the subject of missions was discussed by Rev. Dr. Carroll, Rev. A. A. Butler, and Rev. S. C. Tapp.

Sunday morning there was a Sunday-school reunion, which was opened by a speech from Rev. S. C. Tapp. He clearly showed that no one except a christian ought to be a teacher in a Sunday-school. His logic was clear, style easy, and illustrations apt.

After some talks from some other brethren, the Union was closed by a sermon from Rev. John Cough of Virginia. X.

The Baptist Teacher for September is out and full of good things. Clearly without intention, the Rev. William Hurlin states a double truth in the title of the leading contributed article in the September issue. He sets forth the work of the Holy Spirit as described in the Book of the Acts, but equally true it is that the presence and power of the Spirit is shown in the acts or work of the Apostles. Mr. Weddell follows the first article with one of his crisp and brief essays in recognition of the Spirit in personal experience. Mr. Cheney brings to mind "the memorial ordinance," with glimpses of the past, and a suggestive outlook especially addressed to young christians. Dr. McDonald, in his terse and forcible manner, discusses the ordinance of baptism as being for believers only. The third, concludes the excellent articles by President Weston on principles of interpretation of the Scriptures. Mr. Hull clearly indicates some of the numerous opportunities of the Sunday-school teacher. A little gem of song closes the list for this month. No one can well afford to be without this valuable periodical, so full of variety and excellence. It costs but fifty cents per year in clubs of five and more and is published by the American Baptist Publication Society.

One Month from To-day.

One month from to day the new session at Wake Forest will begin. I already hear of many new students from almost every part of North Carolina, as well as from the adjoining States. The outlook is hopeful.

THE CENTRAL ASSOCIATION

met at Wake Forest last week for the first time in thirty-four years. It was no small pleasure to have our brethren with us. Eloquent addresses were delivered by brethren Vandeventer and Carter on Foreign Missions, McManaway and Cobb on Home Missions, Durham on State Missions, Gwaltney on Education, and Gulley on Sunday-schools. Meeting before any of the other summer associations, the Central moves forward in several respects and invites her sisters to follow her example in the larger work she has undertaken. Bro. Tyree, the new pastor of the Durham church, preached a sermon of unusual freshness and spiritual power. The Association was a success.

METHODS IN MISSIONS.

Bro. Hardaway of Oxford very nearly expressed my views in his article in the RECORDER. Brethren Herring and Bostick are good men and true. Their piety and consecration no man can question. And they are not crazy. But they are liable to errors of judgment and to mistakes in their plans. So are we all. My own opinion is that they are making a mistake in cutting loose from the organized work of the Southern Baptist Convention. The Baptists of North Carolina have had an object lesson in the independent work of brethren Baldwin and Carson Powell. I know personally most of the Foreign Mission Board in Richmond, and have confidence in their wisdom. And I cannot see how we can hope for perpetuity in our work in China or elsewhere without organization. The individual dies; the Board lives. But the logical outcome of Bro. Crawford's plan would be the destruction of Boards, Conventions, and even our Associations. I am sorry that brethren Bostick and Herring, whom I esteem and love, have committed themselves to independent methods which necessarily antagonize what our fathers and we have been painfully toiling to build up through so many years. Yet as they begin their experiment, unfortunate though, as a matter of judgment, I consider it, I can but pray God's blessing on them and their work. Meantime when the regular Foreign Mission work of our Convention seems in danger of suffering grave and permanent injury, I feel as if I want to labor more earnestly and give more largely than ever before for its support.

SISTER M. E. WINGATE

was laid to rest this evening by the side of her husband, Elder W. M. Wingate. She was one of the most unselfish of women, always ready to sacrifice her own ease for the comfort of others. She was ready and willing to die. There have been several deaths in the town and neighborhood during the summer, but there has been only one case of typhoid fever. The health of the community is now excellent.

Fort Barnwell Church in Craven County.

Dear Recorder:—I have just returned from holding a twelve-days meeting at the Fort Barnwell church in Craven county. We feel the Lord blessed our humble effort. The church was very cold, they having been without a pastor for over a year. (Some churches being neglected so long might have been so frozen, we would not have been enabled to thaw them out even with this July.) This little band has been holding together as best they could without a shepherd, and they deserve much credit for their faithfulness. Our principal aim in this work was to get the members of the church to fully realize their christian duty. The Lord blessed this humble effort. The members reconsecrated themselves to the work and promised to be active christians in the future. This church was reorganized in 1854, and they had neither declaration of faith nor constitution. A committee had been appointed by the church. We had a conference and adopted a declaration of faith and constitution, and elected the following additional officers and appointed the following committees: two deacons—brethren J. W. Lane and W. H. Carr; a finance committee and a special committee. We revised the roll and put everything in good working order.

We also organized a woman's missionary society with the following officers: President—Miss Lizzie Biddle; Vice-President—Mrs. Caroline Carr; Secretary—Miss Rosa Lane; Assistant Secretary—Mrs. F. H. Dawson; Treasurer—Miss Everline Lane.

We found the members of this church willing to do their christian duty when instructed.

If we are allowed to state our humble opinions (we hope we can do so without creating any controversy or stir under the present mission excitement), this Fort Barnwell mission field has been neglected by our Mission Board already too long for the good of the work in this section. If our humble opinion is worth anything (and ours is the opinion of some very good people who live in this section of Craven county), this mission field needs attention right now as bad as China, Africa, India, or any other foreign field. In our wild excitement or enthusiasm for Foreign Mission work among the heathen, I am afraid we are neglecting our own. I believe in Foreign Missions, but I say God help us save some of the perishing souls of Eastern North Carolina, who need the simple gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ.

I hope our Mission Board will help this field as soon as possible, and when they do send a pastor, I hope they will make special contract that he is to visit his people as well as preach to them.

We were assisted a few days ago by Bro. R. D. Carroll of Greenville. We predict a bright future for Bro. Carroll, and hope Eastern North Carolina will secure his services on some good field. He is a sound, practical preacher. There were eight professions and five added to the church. For these blessings we praise the Lord and take courage. JNO. T. EDMONDSON.

Resolutions Adopted by Mt. Ruhama Baptist Church.

We, your committee, appointed to draft resolutions relative to the removal of the Association from Catawba to Newton, beg leave to report the following:

Resolved 1. That we oppose the removal of the Association, as ordered by a part of the Executive Committee, without the sanction or knowledge of the churches.

2. That we request our sister churches to appoint their delegates to Catawba, in accordance with the proceedings of the last session of the Association and in conformity to the constitution.

3. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to sister churches for consideration, and to the BIBLICAL RECORDER for publication.

Letter from Rev. G. P. Bostick.

Dear Bro. Bailey:—In the Foreign Mission Journal of May, 1892, I find an editorial headed "A strange movement in North China," the closing words of which are: "But if Bro. Bostick determines to remain in China as an independent missionary, we think he should seek some other field of operation than that occupied by the missions of our Board. It would hardly seem right for him to stay there and reap the fruits of the labors of missionaries of the Board in all the years that are gone. He ought to lay his own foundations and build thereon, and not on ours. And especially is this true when all precedents in such movements go to show that the presence of such an independent worker on the field occupied by the missionaries of the Board he leaves, is a prolific cause of friction and confusion."

I desire to say a few words about this language in the BIBLICAL RECORDER, because I am more immediately concerned with North Carolina Baptists, as having been supported by them since coming to the field. 1. This language assumes that I am to set up an independent work for myself against that of the Board. I have had no such idea at all, but mean only to work on as before. The Board can have the results, if they desire them. 2. This language seems to smack of the idea of working to glorify self or the Board. I came to China to work for Christ, my Master. This I mean to do as long as he permits me to remain in China; or wherever I go my first purpose shall be, by the grace of God, to glorify him, who has done so much for me. I have no sympathy whatever with independent workers who seek their glory before that of Christ; and I have just as little sympathy with the body that so labors as with the individual. It does seem to me that we have gone to such a point in our work for the Lord that much of it is done with the idea to glorify man rather than God. Witness the many memorial churches, windows, colleges, &c., to men, which would not have been erected unless some individual should be greatly glorified thereby. 3. The language of the Journal states that "all precedents" in such cases as mine go to show that such missionary is a source of friction and confusion. I think the writer simply fails here of being in accord with the facts of history. He speaks of "all precedents" as though they were numerous. I do not know one parallel case in all the history of our operations. The only case that is in any respect like mine is that of Bro. Cook, who was quietly called back from Africa without any explanation given to the public for his recall. He afterwards turned Campbellite and returned to Africa, and I learn has given trouble. But his case is by means parallel to mine. I am a Baptist, and expect to remain one till death, as I now see things. I do not know what the writer means by "all precedents." Our Board has a few self-supporting missionaries, but I cannot suppose the editor means to refer to these.

I desire now to say to my brethren and sisters in North Carolina that my present purpose is to remain here and work on as heretofore. When God's finger points away from this field I stand as ready to leave it as I was to come to it. At present there are only three such Southern Baptist missionaries in this province of 36,000,000 souls who can preach Christ—and two of them can do so only imperfectly as yet. Only one of these is now connected with the Board. Why should the two who do not receive money through the Board leave these people, where seeds have been sown for so many years and seek a new field? I do not know how long I can remain here, as no church or churches have as yet signified their purpose to support us. I verily believe that such a support will be sooner or later forthcoming. I ceased to receive any salary from the Board May 31st. In accepting our resignation, they authorized me to draw an amount sufficient for the journey to America. For this I drew $600, which is about the amount which Mr. and Mrs. Sears spent in coming last autumn. This I am using while we wait for further action from the churches at home. Should no support come, so that we are finally compelled to return we look elsewhere than to the Board for the means to do so. I desire, too, to say that in the last year and a half my wife and I have given back to the Board of our regular allowance $350. Besides, I am acting as Treasurer of the Mission here from May 31st to Sept. 30th without taking any salary from the Board. This is owing to a mistake of the Board in failing to inform Bro. King, who was appointed my successor, of his appointment and to send him a Letter of Credit.

I make these statements so that my brethren who know me may understand exactly what are my purposes. It would be pleasant to me to work at home again—indeed it would have been pleasant, yea delightful, to have remained in Durham when I left, but God called me here, and I am remaining here on my faith in him and his churches. I do not approve the plans operated by the Board. I do not believe that such a Board is in accord with New Testament ideas of mission work. See Acts 13: 1. Certainly the Board is stimulating but little advance in the work. See the efforts put forth during last Conventional year in printing, in rousing meetings, big speeches, &c., with an increase from 1,250,000 people of only $800! I do not believe the present plan is putting proper honor upon God's individual churches. I believe in getting back to that plan by which these bodies are honored. I believe it can be done. Hence my present position.

I am well. Will my brethren pray for me? I love them as of old, and shall still do so, though they may think me wrong in my ideas. Affectionately,

G. P. BOSTICK.

The Faces of the Children.

It strikes us often that the faces of children are much better than the faces of adults. Aside from the physical charm of the rounded lines, and the grace and buoyancy of their movements, there is a charm of soul in children, as a class, which seems to be gone in adults as a class.

They are candidly inquisitive, these little souls. They enter on the pursuits of facts and truths with a disconcerting straightforwardness. They express their likes and dislikes freely and emphatically. They take pleasure in living, and find the world good with a relish that is not wholly due to undiminished physical vigor, but also to their moral qualities. Above all, they have a faculty of loving which finds utterance in little unstudied movements, in attitudes of worshipful adoration, and in ecstacies of stormy caresses. They have enough love to spare to answer the smile of a passing stranger with an arch and wistful look that seems to say: "I like you, and if you will stop and play with me, I am ready to love you." Their intellectual natures also are superior. They are brighter, subtler, more imaginative, more inquiring, on their standard of life, than adults are on theirs. The experience of the scribes in the temple is a very common one. Grown people are often taken off their feet by the remarks of children and pushed off far beyond their usual depth of intellectual bathing by the questions of the little ones.

Now, every child is a promise of things to come. It is the swelling lily bud that lets the white beauty of the flower peep out through the green wrap. Why do the blossoms in the flower garden of the world so seldom fulfil the promise of the buds? Why are the flowers so often stunted, frayed at the edges, and wilted before they are half open? Why is the candor of the child's brow gone from the face of the man? Why is the faculty of love which regards the presence of a human being as cause sufficient for delight and love, chilled into distrust and indifference? Why these eager, narrow, cunning, sensual, greedy faces that pass in a long stream down-town? Why does one so seldom meet with a face in the crowd that gives one a sensation corresponding to that which one has constantly in watching the children in the park?

Verily, "the world lieth embedded in wickedness." The children represent man as he comes from the hands of God. Even with generations of wrong and suffering preceding him, there is still so much sweetness, strength and goodness in man. But then the world lays its hands upon him. It polishes down the child's candor into the man's prudence; the child's generosity into the man's calculation; the child's love into the man's politeness; the child's quick sense of equity into the man's conformity to the laws of society. The child is man as God makes him. The man is man as the world finishes him. The child is God's possibility; the man is society realization of it.

Look at the faces of the children. Then look at the faces of men and women, and answer these questions: "Does the totality of human life as it exists make for good or evil? Is sin a power? Is the wages of sin the destruction of life? Is the world in need of redemptive forces? Are you an incarnate force of redemption?"

Every child is a thought of God in the flesh. When we pray, "Thy will be done on earth," this is included in it, that the possibilities which lie in children shall become actualities. The kingdom of God perfected will be the kingdom of perfected childhood. For the Master said: "If ye would enter the kingdom, become matured children."—Examiner.

It is scarcely possible that any of our readers will take our playful paragraph in the last Herald about the Richmond preachers at the Dover seriously. Still, for fear some who were not there may not see the point, we will take the precaution to say that the city bishops were unusually quiet. Many of those named in our attack (!) were almost entirely silent, some were not present during the entire session, others were present only a part of the session, and yet others spoke seldom and briefly. We have known a great many preachers in our time, but we have never known a more brotherly group than those who preside over the Richmond churches. And we feel compelled to add that when publicly criticised—and as it seemed to us unjustly so—they bore it in perfect good humor. But we suppose this caution is hardly necessary.—The Religious Herald.

Thoughts—No. 5.

BY SCATTERHEAD.

REST.

"Come ye yourselves apart into a desert place, and rest awhile."

Rest comes in very nice to a fellow after he has been doing a lot of hard work. Rest is sweet to the weary. Some people seem to want to put in about all their time resting. I reckon there are very few lazy folks in the world, but the number of folks who are born tired, and want to put in their full time doing nothing aint scarce. Just lots of people hunting and scouring this world for rest, and the poor deluded creatures never find it. People are not apt to find it when they are just hunting for it. I never heard tell of rest coming to a fellow when he was busily engaged doing nothing. Rest is a sweet balm only to tired folks. If anybody wants to get acquainted with rest, just go to work pretty hard, and you'll be pretty certain to know it when it visits you. The body needs rest when tired. So does the mind; so does the soul.

The disciples of the Lord had been doing some pretty hard walking and preaching too, and the Master told them they needed some rest. Preachers rode a foot-back in those days. I suppose it was no disgrace for a fellow to travel around that way; if it was the disciples were along in powerful good company.

This is a wonderful fast age since everything has got to be run by steam and lightning. Just catch a preacher walking, now, and he is put down for a tramp in nine cases out of ten. I think a preacher ought to do the Lord's work, even if he does have to exercise his legs a little. It is a mighty hard matter to ride in a car when a person has no money, or when there is no railroad; and it is a powerful hard matter for a fellow to ride fast when he has no horse to ride.

I don't remember of reading that the apostles preached to the people to join the church and do better, or just quit their "meanness" and join the church; but I think they told them to repent. If a fellow repents he is dead certain to quit his "meanness," but he may quit the meanness in sight of the people and be called a very nice fellow, and yet know no more about true repentance than old Satan himself.

Well, at any rate, the apostles had been out on a mission trip preaching repentance, healing the sick, and doing all the other work their Master told them to do, and they came to Jesus and made a report of their work to him. His kind and loving heart knew what his poor tired laborers needed—rest for the whole man. He did not tell them to go off to some fashionable watering place and rest, but he says to them out of a heart overflowing with tender love, "Come with me into a desert place and rest awhile." He wanted them to rest with him—in his company. He very well knew there would be no rest to them unless he was in their midst. He deeply sympathized with his poor weary followers. They had met with lots of hard trials, and had been called low-down fellows because they were the followers of the despised Nazarene. They came to the Master "weary and heavy laden," but he gave the rest for which their souls yearned. He took them for a little while into a quiet place, aside from the busy world, and they received the needed rest. All the true soldiers of the Lord who fight daily get much wearied from the severe conflicts, and need a few minutes rest for their souls at least three times a day. They need to turn aside from the world and be alone with the Lord Jesus—talk with him, feast on him, and rest in him. The christian alone with the Lord, though but for a few minutes, gets new strength for the further work and trials which await him. Christ should get more precious to the christian every day he lives, and he should want to love him more and more; and I believe he does if he is walking close to him. The more a christian is in company with Jesus the more he feels the need of him, and the more he wants to be with him. Jesus alone can satisfy his soul. No rest aside from the Lord Jesus. Over-worked laborers of the Master need a vacation, perhaps, once a year in order to rest up and so be prepared to do better work in the Lord's cause. A change of places and work is one way to get the needed rest. The Lord does not want his ministers and workers to go where he cannot accompany them. The Lord does not tarry very much at some of the big and noted watering places. Satan is might apt to be the biggest fellow there. Somehow or other he gets such people in the notion to just turn themselves loose for a spell and have a big time to please him, and they serve him to his utmost satisfaction. I don't know, but I expect the old fellow induces some of the Lord's children who are seeking rest to peep in the ball room where the people are "closely" engaged in satanic worship. I don't believe it is very safe for a person to try to see every thing. The Lord says don't look upon the wine, and I guess it is not right to look upon the dance. Mean things might fly in when we open the windows. I heard tell of a man once who was sort of a preacher and a splendid horse trader. When he would start off to trade horses he would tell his companions that they must lay down their religion till they would get back home. Now that may be the way with some of the church members who visit the great summer resorts. They don't want to be bothered with their religion at such places, because they are bound to try to enjoy themselves; so they just leave it at home. Some people's religion is a sight of trouble to them, especially where they are trying to keep it themselves. I always thought the Lord was the one to keep a fellow's religion, and if a fellow is pretty certain he is keeping it for him he don't care much about going where his Master is not a welcome guest. I am no Solomon, but I have noticed that the kind of religion a person could lay down at will was very suitable to grease the track that leads to Satan's headquarters "down below." Some people do have a wonderful chance of religion, so called, while Christ is an entire stranger to the heart. "Christ formed in the soul the hope of glory," is what I call the genuine article, and the person who has experienced such never gets as much as he wants, but is all the time thirsting after more. Christ dwelling in the believer is religion indeed.

Now if the brethren are bound to rest, be powerful sure you have Christ with you. You may go to some of the watering places and find the needed rest, and I know you will if you can hear the Saviour's lovely voice say, "Come and rest awhile, I will keep near you and will give you the needed comfort and rest." It seems to me there is some "salt" needed powerful bad at some places, and the kind that is mighty strong. I am sorter of the opinion a fellow's "righteous soul" would be powerfully vexed to see so much wickedness. But the Lord must have witnesses to testify for him. It takes a great deal of Christ in any one to denounce sins where they are so popular and prevalent. He alone can give the strength needed. Christ alone gives rest to the fainting and weary soul. Many, yes all, of the soldiers of the Lord Jesus are growing tired from the conflicts of their warfare, and desire to enter into that eternal rest prepared for them. Soon the great Captain will come and take his weary laborers home to ever enjoy his comforting presence in endless peace, joy and rest. "There remaineth therefore a rest to the people of God."

Dear Sir:—I take great pleasure in saying that, from the use of the Electropoise, I have been greatly benefitted. For several years I have been a great sufferer from Nervous Prostration, with yearly attacks of fever, followed by almost continued indigestion. My lungs are also affected and for six months before using the Electropoise, I suffered from frequent congestions of the lungs; but since using the Electropoise I have not had a single congestion, and am now far better in every respect than I have been for several years. Long live the Electropoise man!

Very truly, R. S. PLONK.

The Help of Prayer.

Prayer does not directly take away a trial or its pain, any more than a sense of duty directly takes away the danger of infection; but prayer preserves the strength of the whole spiritual fiber, so that the trial does not pass into temptation to sin. A sorrow comes upon you. Omit prayer, and you fall out of God's testing into the Devil's temptation; you get angry, hard of heart, reckless. But meet the dreadful hour with prayer, cast your care on God, claim him as your father, though he seem cruel, and the degrading, paralyzing, embittering effects of pain and sorrow pass away, a stream of sanctifying and softening thought pours into the soul, and that which might have wrought your fall works in you the peaceable fruits of righteousness. You pass from bitterness into the courage of endurance, and from endurance into battle, and from battle into victory, till at last the trial dignifies and blesses your life. The answer to prayer is slow; the force of prayer is cumulative. Not till this life is over is the whole answer given, the whole strength it has brought understood.—Stopford Brooke.

The Wm. Carey Missionary Movement Chronologically Stated.

"E. G.," a London correspondent of the Chicago Standard, has just completed a series of articles to that paper on the great William Carey missionary movement of one hundred years ago. We clip the following from the closing article:

Carey was succeeded at the Harvey Lane church by one whose name is not remembered at this writing, and then by Rev. Robert Hall. "It was from Harvey Lane pulpit that Hall discoursed with such stately eloquence on the death of Princess Charlotte, and to the same chapel distinguished men from all parts of the country came to hear the greatest orator of his day. But we doubt whether any association is so memorable as the designation of Carey and Thomas for the work whereunto the Holy Spirit had called them! The morning of March 20 was spent in prayer. In the afternoon 'Brother Thomas preached from Psalm xvi, 4, and a public collection was made for the mission.' At night Bro. Hogg, then of Thrapstone, 'delivered a suitable discourse from Acts xxi. 14, and after him Bro. Fuller addressed the missionaries from John xx. 21.' The Kettering pastor, in preaching from this text, 'Peace be unto you, as my Father sent me, so send I you,' dwelt on 'the objects you must keep in view, the directions you must observe, the difficulties you must encounter, and the reward you must expect.' In closing Mr. Fuller said, 'We shall meet again. Crowns of glory await you and us.'"

In closing these articles, which we hope have been interesting to the readers of The Standard, we make up a chronological summary, which may serve to help the memory in connection with one of the greatest movements in the world's history:

MISSIONARY CHRONOLOGICAL TABLE.

1761—August 17. William Carey born at Paulerspury, Northamptonshire.

1765—Northamptonshire Association—First meeting at Kettering.

1775—Carey apprenticed as a shoemaker at Hackleton, when fourteen years old.

1779—Carey converted to Christ at Hackleton, when eighteen years old.

1781—Carey a member of the Baptist church at Hackleton.

1781—June 10, married at Piddington.

1782—June, at Northamptonshire Association at Olney, Carey met some friends from Earls Barton, and engaged to preach there, continuing to do so some three and half years.

1783—Oct. 5, baptized by Dr. Ryland in the River Nen at Northampton.

1784—At Nottingham the "Monthly Concert of Prayer" was inaugurated.

1785—July, Carey joined the Baptist church at Olney.

1785—Carey moved to Moulton, to preach to the church.

1786—Licensed to preach by the Olney church.

1786—Carey wrote the "Enquiry into the Obligations of Christians to use means for the Conversion of the Heathens."

1787—Carey became a member of the church at Moulton, and was ordained as pastor.

1789—Carey moved from Moulton to Leicester as pastor of the Harvey Lane Baptist church.

1791—April 27. Northamptonshire Association Ministers Meeting held at Clipstone, where Baptist Missionary Society was born. Sutcliff and Fuller preached sermons. Carey proposed a question, "Whether it were not practicable, and our bounden duty to attempt somewhat toward spreading the gospel in the heathen world."

1791—June 16. At Northamptonshire Association at Oakham, Sutcliff and Fuller requested to print the sermon preached at Clipstone.

1792—Carey's "Enquiry" published at Leicester.

1792—May 31. At Northamptonshire Association held at Nottingham, Carey preached his great sermon "Expect great things from God, attempt great things for God." The subject which was introduced at Clipstone was revived and a resolution made, "That a plan be prepared before the next ministers' meeting at Kettering, for forming a society among the Baptists for propagating the gospel among the heathen."

1792—Oct. 2. Northamptonshire Ministers Meeting at Kettering the society formed in Mrs. Beeby Wallis' house styled: "The Particular Baptist Society for Propagating the Gospel among the Heathen." Rev. John Ryland, Renold Hogg, William Carey, John Sutcliff and Andrew Fuller, appointed a committee, three of whom were empowered to act in carrying into effect the purposes of the society. Rev. Renold Hogg was appointed treasurer and Rev. Andrew Fuller secretary. Subscriptions amounted to £13. 2s. 6d.

1792—Oct. 21. Second meeting of the Primary Society at Northampton, when Rev. Samuel Pearce of Birmingham was added to the committee.

1792—Nov. 13. The meeting of the Primary Society at Northampton, when the name of Dr. John Thomas, the Bengal missionary, was brought before them in a letter from William Carey.

1792—Thomas arrived in England.

1793—January 10. "Another committee meeting at Kettering, when the secretary reported the results of his enquiries respecting Mr. Thomas, which were satisfactory to all present." Decided that Carey and Thomas should go to India as missionaries.

1793—March 20. Farewell meeting in Harvey Lane Chapel, Leicester, to Carey and Thomas. Andrew Fuller addressed the missionaries.

1793—March 24. Carey left Leicester.

1793—June 13. Carey and Thomas set sail on board the "Princessa Maria," a Danish East Indiaman, and after five months' voyage landed in India.

1799—Joshua Marshman and William Ward with other missionaries brought to Bengal by the pious Captain Wickes of Rhode Island.

1800—Krishna Pal, the first convert baptized in the river Ganges, with Carey's son Felix the last Sunday in 1800.

1800—Fort William College at Calcutta founded by Lord Wellesley. Carey professor of Bengali.

1803—First Sunday-school opened in India.

1823—William Ward died.

1834—June 9. William Carey died after forty-one years of missionary service.

1837—Joshua Marshman died.

1842—May 31, June 1 and 2. Jubilee of the Baptist Missionary Society held at Kettering. Report after fifty years: Mission stations, 157; missionaries, 71; teachers and native preachers, 127; members, 30,000; scholars, 18,000; Scriptures translated in forty languages and dialects; copies issued in the year 1841, 85,000. Slavery abolished August 1, 1838.

1892—May 31, June 1, 2, 3, Centenary celebration at Nottingham, Leicester and Kettering. Total income since the society was founded, £2,413,566, or about $12,000,000. At the present time: missionaries, 126; evangelists, 754; stations and sub-stations, 625; members, 50,957; Sunday scholars, 26,798; Scriptures translated into fifty-six languages and dialects.

In 1845 the church at Harvey Lane in Leicester erected a new edifice in Belvoir street at the time Rev. J. P. Mursell, the pastor, was at his best as one of the celebrated preachers of the country. Rev. Mr. Thew is now the esteemed pastor, but is absent on account of ill-health. Carey, Hall and Mursell were all wonderful men and the tablets with inscriptions, erected on both sides of the pulpit in the Belvoir Street Chapel indicate the estimate in which they were held by the loyal and loving people of the church. The following is the inscription on the Carey tablet:

In memory of the
REV. WILLIAM CAREY, D. D., who entered on his work as pastor of this church A. D. 1789, and left his native country as a missionary to India A. D. 1793 where he rose to the highest eminence as an oriental scholar.
Devoted to the ministry of the gospel
among the heathen,
he was chiefly engaged in the translation of the sacred Scriptures into the various dialects of the East, and became professor in the Sanscrit, Bengali and Mahratta languages.
He was distinguished by elevated piety indomitable perseverance and disinterested benevolence,
and having built for himself
by his vast attainments and great labors a bright and imperishable monument died at Serampore 9 June, 1834,
Aged 72 years.

How Indians Bury Children.

One who roamed the Northwestern territory years ago relates the following pathetic story of the burial of a papoose near Seattle, which he happened upon by hearing the mother's lament:

"Creeping nearer," he said, "I saw two squaws in the door of a tepee cowering over the embers of a dying fire. Both were wailing, keeping the wake for the dead, and one held clasped to her breast a little stiffly-bound bundle. Starting in a low, gurgling sound, their wail rose louder and louder on the still night air, until at last it culminated in a prolonged shriek. It came and went, and came and went again; that lament for the dead over the little body, incased in its stiff wrappings, that had been all the world to her.

"To-morrow would see it pass from her sight forever—to-night it was cradled in her arms. After a little the passionate lamentations subsided, and by and by the mother began to croon to herself a lullaby, used by the women of the Flatheads for hundreds of years. Roughly translated, it runs thus:

Swing, swing, little one, lullaby;
Thou'rt not alone to weep;
Mother cares for you—she is nigh.
Sleep, my little one, sleep;
Gently, gently, wee one, swing;
Gently, gently, while I sing,
E-we-wa-wa, lullaby.

"In all my life I have never heard anything so heartrending. Silently I stole away and left the mother rocking her dead baby in her arms.

"Next morning when I resumed my journey I came upon the two squaws, who were arranging the grass for the dead baby. Bending over the tightly-swathed bundle, they kissed it again and again, then sobbing, began to throw in clods of earth until the grave was filled; then leaving meat and berries for the child's nourishment, they kissed the ground and slowly turned their steps toward the darkened tepee, never again to hear the patter of the little restless feet, the baby voice or the clasp of the tiny hands. The baby tongue was stilled forever, and in that Indian mother's heart was an unutterable longing, a grief that could never be healed.

"The Indians always bury with their children the little playthings they have loved in life. Among the Flatheads especially, the toys and small belongings of the children are sure to be placed under the little tent which is placed over each dead body."—Helena, Mont., Herald.

The Last of Her Race.

Old Jennie, the last representative of the famous Rogue River Indians, now living in this country and quite advanced in years, is making a burial robe, after the custom of the distinguished members of the tribe, in which to be laid away when the summons shall come and she shall pass to the happy hunting-grounds, where the white man is not and fire-water is unknown. The ground-work is of fine buckskin and is superbly decorated with the various kinds of money used by the tribe for generations past, and richly ornamented in a pleasing and skillful manner, with jewels, pebbles, beads and other valuables used and admired by the tribe in the past. The robe when completed will weigh fully fifty pounds, and as a relic or reminder of the peculiar customs and practices of a nation of people now practically blotted from existence, is most valuable, and should be preserved. With this commendable purpose in view, Mrs. Rowena Nichols, who has been employed by the world's fair committee to paint the Table Rocks, has procured a number of sketches of this interesting subject, and will paint a life size picture of old Jennie, wrapped in her gorgeous cerements, and thus happily preserve a sacred custom about to pass forever into oblivion. Old Jennie was born and raised at the foot of Table Rocks, and during the wars was once captured by the whites, and later rescued by her people. She lives about a mile and a half from Jacksonville, up Jackson creek, and to hear her tell, in that peculiar and impressive Indian style, the grievous outrages and nameless wrongs perpetrated upon her people, and their consequent annihiliation from the face of the earth, would touch the stoutest heart with sympathy, and almost make one wish he could face again the brawny braves who fought and died for this fair heritage, and for which sad fate old Jennie's heart goes out in bitter wails. This painting will be a valuable object lesson as indicating the fast fleeting cycles of time, and the rapid mutations of human customs and usages, and will serve as a most fitting companion piece to the Table Rocks, where Jennie was born and grew up, chiefly on war-whoops and camas, clad only in the free raw material of innocence and a copper complexion, happy in her native simplicity and blissfully ignorant of modern civilization.—Jacksonville Times.

The Last Say of "Cashie."

Dear Bro. Bailey:—I have been from home, and the RECORDER of July 27th is just to hand, a week old. I considered myself as done with the attack that I made upon Rev. C. N. Donaldson's communication in your issue of June 15th. But it seems that I have stirred up a hornet's nest, as it were, in the person of Rev. C. W. Matthews. Therefore, I beg a little space just this once, and I am done.

So far, my criticism, made in love and for the sake of truth, remains unrefuted, and not only so, but untouched. I write this as a recapitulation. Brother Matthews wrote briefly, and, of course, his kind heart will accord me the same privilege. "It is a bad rule that will not work both ways." Ordinarily, I like frankness in speech.

In my communication of July 6th, I thought that I wrote plainly enough to be understood by any unbiased intellect. So now, I will try to write so that Bro. Matthews can understand me. He says: "Have I not as much right to smoke a cigar as any deacon or layman of my church if I wish to do so?" I have nothing to do with anybody's cigars, tobacco or money. Here is the point I made, which was understood by all with whom I have talked: We usually call our pastors at a stipulated salary. After their services are rendered and they have received their pay for such services, then, if they see fit to throw away their money, they have no right to expect the deacons to furnish more money to remove their care. These were my sentiments, and I have no acknowledgments to make.

Speaking of our members in the Baptist churches living in the poor house, Brother Matthews says that "Cashie" calls them "dear members," and then goes on to say: "No, they are not very dear," &c. If you will hunt up your paper and look up my communication, you will find immediately after the word "dear" a note of interrogation; if you do not know what it means, please make it a study until you get off to the Seminary.

He says: "I would suggest to Cashie that he and his church, too, if they have any of their 'dear members' in the poor-house," &c.—while I only conveyed the idea that it was absurd for the last "shadow of care" to be removed from any pastor's face while their dear (?) members of any church were cared for by the county.

Now, Bro. Matthews, you made a suggestion to me; now, let me make one to you: Magnify this Scripture, "And that ye study to be quiet, and to do your own business, and to work with your own hands, as we commanded you." 1 Thess. 4: 11. Paul was "harsh" and "inconsistent," was he not? He might have been if he had also advised us to not suffer ourselves to become a mouth-piece for some one else.

Where preachers have, or "receive no money" for their services, in many cases deserve as little as they get. I know of no such preachers or churches.

May the Lord give us the spirit of generosity, that we may do more for pastors where they deserve it; more for the evangelization of the world and for every other worthy object.

Now, Bro. Matthews, I expect to write no more upon this subject. If you see fit to trim up your "goose quill" again, please confine your remarks to the subject: That the duty of deacons is to place the pastor above temporal care, and not be flying around and catching at straws.

I shall now dismiss the subject as unworthy of further consideration.

As you were curious to know "who Cashie is," I will now assure you that I have written in a kind spirit, and only wrote at first to attack error, and cheerfully subscribe myself DAVID EDWARD MODLIN.

Baptist Representation at the University.

—What a gratifying change hath time wrought in this particular! Thirty years ago, when I was a student here, the Baptists had very little, if any, representation in the Board of Trustees, and none whatever in the Faculty. Now they are well represented in the Board of Trustees, and also in the Board of Visiters, and have five men—good men—in the Faculty. Our Brother Collier Cobb, who leaves the Hill this morning, informs me that he has accepted charge of the department of Geology to which he was recently appointed, and will remove here by Sept. 1st. With him in that department and Professors Hume in English, Gore in Natural Science, Toy in Modern Languages, and Dr. Whitehead in Medicine, our Baptist people could not well ask for more.

In respect of Faculty representation, we have as much as, if not more than, any other denomination. All ground of complaint in this particular being removed, it strikes me that a larger Baptist representation in the student body is now in order. Ought not the relative representation to approximate equality as nearly as possible?

J. L. CARROLL.

Chapel Hill, Aug. 4, 1892.

P. S. I would be glad to be informed by parents, or other friends, of the coming of Baptist students to the University, the time of probable arrival, &c., that I may be better able to give them proper attention.

To the Brethren Attending Associations and Centennial Meetings.

Dear Brethren:—As has been stated time and again, the great object of our Centennial of Missions will fail of being attained unless our people are lifted to a higher plane of knowing, thinking and doing in missions. I mention first the knowing because this lies at the basis of the thinking and doing. Unless people know something about a work to be done, they will neither think much about it nor do much for it. Hence, one of the most important things you can do is to induce the people to procure and read missionary literature. And especially should they be induced to read and inform themselves about our own work, to which they are asked to give and for which they are asked to pray.

May I not, then, earnestly urge upon you to see to it that every Association or Centennial Meeting you take part in or attend, the claims of the Foreign Mission Journal are presented and subscriptions taken? The Journal is a thirty-two page magazine, full of information not obtainable elsewhere about our own missionary operations, together with such accounts of the work of other missionary bodies as space allows. It is published at the following rates: Any number under ten, 50 cents each. From ten to twenty-five, 30 cents each, and for any number over twenty-five, 25 cents each. Every subscriber receives his paper in a separate wrapper, and in making up clubs the subscribers can be gotten at any number of postoffices. You can take subscriptions and forward names and money at our expense. Almost any one who tries can get up a club at each meeting at club rates.

I sincerely trust that many brethren will thus help me to swell the subscription lists of the Journal. Sample copies can be had by dropping a postal card of request to

South Fork S. S. Association

This Association met with Mt. Ruhama church, July 29, 30. Reports of ten Sunday schools were received and read.

Several of the appointed speakers were absent.

The following resolutions were offered and unanimously adopted:

WHEREAS, Our late Sunday-school and Colportage work has been greatly neglected by the Mission Board of the Baptist State Convention; and whereas, there is no more important work for Baptist churches in North Carolina than the Sunday-school and Colportage work; therefore Resolved 1. That it is the sense of the S. S. Convention of the South Fork Association, that our State Sunday-school work should have independent organization, with a separate Convention, separate Board and Corresponding Secretary.

2. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the BIBLICAL RECORDER and North Carolina Baptist for publication.

A. N. SETZER, Sec.

Southern Union of Eastern Association.

This body met with Long Creek church, Pender county, on Friday before the fifth Sunday in July, 1892. Rev. R. E. Peele preached the introductory sermon.

Much interest was manifested in the discussion of queries, especially No. 3—Missions as dependent upon pastors and churches.

The following contributions were made: Orphanage, $7.23; State Missions, $5.20; Foreign Missions, $3 52 Total, $15.94.

Our next session will be held with Jacksonville church in Onslow county, commencing on Friday before the fifth Sabbath in October, 1892. SECRETARY.

We are a patient people—the ox is nowhere in comparison.

We buy lamp-chimneys by the dozen; they go on snapping and popping and flying in pieces; and we go on buying the very same chimneys year after year.

Our dealer is willing to sell us a chimney a week for every lamp we burn—a hundred or more a year—and we plow for him, pay him for goading us.

Macbeth's "pearl top" and "pearl glass" do not break from heat; they are made of tough glass.

As likely as not our dealer would rather his chimneys would break; "it's good for the business," says he. He buys the brittlest ones he can get.

"What are you going to do about it?"

BARNHILL—Sister Martha A. Barnhill died with paralysis, on July 28th, 1892. She was a charter member of Hawbuff church, Bladen county, and was in her sixty-third year. Her funeral was preached by Rev. R. M. Hilburn. A FRIEND.

STONER—Little Mackie, infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Stoner. She was born Dec. 2d, 1890, and died July 31st, 1892, aged one year, seven months and twenty-nine days. Grieve not for the little babe, she has only joined the dear mother and little sister gone on before. God knew best, and heaven is the brighter for her presence to-day. R.

JOYNER—In Franklinton, N. C., July 29th, 1892, of Bright's disease, Capt. J. S. Joyner, son of W. H. and Julia T. Joyner, aged fifty-three years and nine days. Truly a good man and a useful man has fallen among us, and we greatly deplore his loss. He leaves a wife and three children (two sons and a daughter), two brothers and one sister, and a large circle of relatives and friends to mourn his departure.

He was a faithful husband, a kind and indulgent parent, and a true friend.

In the death of Capt. Joyner, Franklinton looses one of her most energetic and progressive and best citizens, and the poor a true friend and helper.

In the morning of life he gave his heart to the Saviour, and for nearly forty years had been an active member of the Baptist church, and for about twelve years held the office of deacon in his church. He loved his church, and was ever ready to help in every good word and work; and at the last was actively engaged in securing a new house of worship, and his death is a great loss to the church. But let us hope and pray that, though the workman is taken away, the good work will go on, and the house will soon be built. Our brother rests from his labors now. He sleepeth in Jesus.

"Asleep in Jesus, blessed sleep,
From which none ever wake to weep."

Tributes of Respect.

To the Wake Forest Lodge, No. 140, I. O. O. F.:

Your committee, appointed to prepare resolutions in memory of our beloved Bro. W. J. Simons, who died the 18th day of July, 1892, submit the following:

WHEREAS, Almighty God, in his infinite wisdom and justice, has called unto himself Bro. W. J. Simons. While deeply deploring the loss of such a noble and kind-hearted brother, we bow in humble submission to the will of him that doeth all things well.

Resolved, That, our order has lost one of its most faithful members, his family a dear husband and a beloved father, and the community a most highly esteemed citizen.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family of the deceased brother, that they be copied upon our minutes, and a copy sent to the BIBLICAL RECORDER with the request to publish.

W. W. HOLDING,
D. W. ALLEN,
Committee

Our brother, W. R. Jones, died at his home in Wake county, July 10th, 1892. He was forty-four years old, and leaves a devoted wife and a most interesting family of nine children.

Bro. Jones had been a consistent member of the Baptist church for twenty-four years and faithful in every relation.

His funeral was preached by his pastor, Rev. J. M. White, to a very large audience, from the text, "Comfort one another with these words," 1 Thess. 4: 18.

The community and the church at Swift Creek, of which he was a member, most heartily sympathize with the dear family so sadly bereaved.

Tender and affectionate in his family, kind and obliging to his neighbors, indulgent to the poor, liberal to his church and pastor, who can fill the vacancy made?

Cut down in the midst of his usefulness, we halt and wonder at the mysterious providence, yet we believe that God does all things well; therefore be it

Resolved 1. That Swift Creek church bow in humble submission to his divine will.

2. That we will hold in affectionate remembrance the good deeds and lovely character of our deceased brother.

3. That we extend to the bereaved family our condolence, and pray that the protecting arms of our sympathizing Lord may ever be around them, and that they may be cheered through this dark hour and life by the bright hope of a happy reunion in the sweet by-and-by.

4. That this memorial tribute be placed on our church record, a copy sent to the family, and also to the BIBLICAL RECORDER.

What the University Offers to Young Men.

CHAPEL HILL, N. C., July 28.—Within the past two months over a thousand letters have been received at Chapel Hill inquiring what the University offers to young men. Let us answer this question briefly, for the benefit of the thousands who have not written, and who do not know how easily they may secure within North Carolina the very best opportunities for broad and liberal culture.

THE UNIVERSITY OFFERS TO YOUNG MEN:

1. Five general courses of study; each differing from the other, and each furnishing a broad, liberal education. There is a Latin and Greek course, a Latin course, a Science course, a Literary course, and a Mathematics (or Engineering) course. Each of these courses secures a degree, and requires ordinarily four years of study. The variety of courses is intended to meet the needs of various young men who have different kinds of preparation and different purposes in life. In each course the studies of the first two years are fixed, but the studies of the last two years may be selected mainly by the student under the advice of the faculty. A student is thus enabled, not only to select a course of study carefully arranged to give him general culture, but also to shape that course by wise selection in the last two years so as to fit him for some special profession.

2. Six brief courses of study; each requiring two years of study and arranged for the benefit of young men who have not the time or the means to spend four years at college. These courses are intended to supply the briefest possible preparation for business, for law, for teaching, for farming, for medicine, for journalism; and each course includes only those studies essential to the profession selected.

3. Three professional courses; in Engineering, in Medicine and Pharmacy, and in Law. Each of these courses furnishes special technical training under accomplished and experienced teachers.

4. An unlimited number of special courses. These special courses are on any subject that the student desires. He may confine himself to one subject, if he prefers. A great many students have taken special courses in Chemistry, fitting themselves to be chemists; while others have taken special courses in drawing and draughting, or in English Literature, or in Greek, or in Philosophy, or in History. Any study taught in the University may be selected for a special course, and it may be pursued as long as the student desires.

5. Graduate courses. These are offered in all studies to graduates of colleges or universities who wish special advanced training to fit themselves better for professional life, or for literary careers, or for teaching in colleges. Five students pursued these courses last year, two ministers, two teachers and a journalist.

THE UNIVERSITY OFFERS HELP AS WELL AS INSTRUCTION.

1. It offers time to those whose property is not now available.

2. It offers sixty scholarships to needy young men of talent and character.

3. It offers loans of money to the very needy who show unusual talent.

4. It offers free tuition to young men afflicted with bodily infirmity, to bona fide public school teachers, to the sons of all preachers, and to young men intending to become preachers.

5. It offers advanced instruction free to the graduates of colleges.

THE UNIVERSITY OFFERS AN EQUIPMENT, which is a guaranty of good honest work. Its equipment includes:

1. A Faculty of twenty-two professors and instructors, who represent the culture of twenty of the foremost American and European Universities.

2. Five Scientific Laboratories, on which ten thousand dollars have been expended recently, supplied with modern apparatus for training as well as illustration. There are laboratories in Chemistry, Geology, Mineralogy and Physics.

3. A Library of thirty thousand volumes, open five hours daily to all students.

4. A Reading-room well supplied with magazines, papers and reviews.

5. A Gymnasium, large and well furnished, in charge of a trained instructor in gymnastics.

6. Buildings, nine in number, affording ample room for dormitories and lecture halls

7. Athletic Grounds for base ball, foot ball, running, tennis, and other athletic games, large, well graded and well kept.

8. Literary Societies comparable to any in the country. Their halls contain fine collections of oil portraits of members who have been eminent in all departments of life in the State and in the nation. There are sixty portraits.

9. Societies for special culture, the Elisha Mitchell Scientific Society and the Shakspere Club, which offer unusual facilities for original research and study.

10. A Young Men's Christian Association, which meets five times each week, is active, healthy and useful.

THE UNIVERSITY OFFERS A DISCIPLINE based upon manliness and self-reliance. There is no system of spying, nor of demerits, nor of unnecessary and petty interference with student life, nor of compulsory pledges. The discipline aims to develop character through the education of the conscience.

THE UNIVERSITY OFFERS A BROAD AND MANLY SPIRIT. It places citizenship, manliness and humanity above sectionalism, sectarianism, and political partisanship. It is a State institute, governed by the Legislature, and it invites to its opportunities of culture all the youth of the State, of whatever religious faith, political belief or geographical section. It is a little world in itself, a sort of miniature state, where young men of all classes, conditions, faiths, temperaments and talents mingle freely together on terms of equality, breathe the atmosphere of liberal culture, and learn the priceless lessons of self-reliance, of respect for the opinions of others and of love for truth. There is no place where a young man learns so quickly that he must stand on his own merits.

CHOWAN
Baptist Female Institute,
MURFREESBORO, N. C.

Parties having young ladies to educate will do well to consider the following facts:—
The Institute offers superior advantages in Literature, Science, Music and Art. Only the best talent is employed to give instruction in the different departments.
The situation is one of remarkable beauty. There are twenty-eight acres of land within the corporation, but so located as to give the school all the privacy of the country, while near enough to the town to secure any advantages it may offer.
The health record is unsurpassed. During the last ten years there have been two cases of pneumonia, one of typhoid fever (brought by the pupil with her) no case of diphtheria, scarlet fever or measles. Chills have been strangers, and bilious fever almost unknown. The average of medical bills since the organization of the school has been about twenty five cents per pupil for the scholastic year. The amount paid for medical bills by the entire boarding patronage the past session was ten dollars
This institution is the unencumbered property of the Baptists, and is the only property owned by them in the State used exclusively for the education of girls.
The dormitories have recently been refurnished, and only two pupils occupy the same room. Parties leaving points east of Charlotte, Danville, Richmond and Washington reach the school the same afternoon via Boykins, Va., and the Murfreesboro railroad. As the property is unencumbered, the charges can be made very moderate. Board, literary and music tuition, if paid in advance, are two hundred dollars for scholastic year. The fall session begins on Wednesday, Sept. 7th. For catalogue or additional information, address
JNO. B. BREWER, President.

POKINE.

I have used the within remedy (Pokine) with great success. JAMES H. LASSITER.

I have used the Pokine Remedy (prepared by W. T. Cheatham, Jr.) in case of Sciatica with the result of positive relief in a few hours, and believe if used as directed is will effect a permanent cure.
J. L. H. MISSILLIER.
MARCH 6, 1891.

For the benefit of the public, I unhesitatingly recommend Cheatham's wonderful remedy, "Pokine," to all sufferers of rheumatism. It has produced marvelous results in my case. I was a sufferer of the malady for five years, and after taking a few bottles was entirely cured.
Very respectfully,
W. W. DOWTIN.
HENDERSON, N. C., March 7, '91.

MR. W. T. CHEATHAM:
Dear Sir—My wife was down in bed with rheumatism, and the Pokine I bought of you gave her relief after taking four doses. She has not been troubled since. It is the best medicine she ever took for rheumatism. Respectfully,
ERNIE DAVIS.

MR. W. T. CHEATHAM, JR.:
Dear Sir—I have been afflicted with rheumatism time and again, for the past thirteen years. I have received more relief from Pokine than any medicine I ever took, and therefore take great pleasure in recommending it to all sufferers of rheumatism. Very respectfully,
F. G. MITCHELL.
JANUARY 19, 1891.

W. T. CHEATHAM, JR.:
Dear Sir—I desire to say that in January last I was down with rheumatism; my suffering was great, and I was completely prostrated. One bottle of your Pokine completely relieved me, and I have not had any rheumatism since. My son also was relieved of rheumatism by Pokine.
Yours truly,
CHARLES G. BURROUGHS.
HENDERSON, N. C., Sept. 16, '91.

MR. W. T. CHEATHAM, JR.:
Your rheumatic cure, Pokine, has completely cured me. I. M. GREEN.

MR. W. T. CHEATHAM, JR., Henderson, N. C.:
Dear Sir—Being asked my opinion of your rheumatic remedy, Pokine, will gladly state I deem it the only medicine of its kind on the market that will accomplish that which is exclusively claimed for it. Being a sufferer of rheumatism, I consequently tried many remedies, until finally relieved by Pokine. Very respectfully,

The Home Circle.

I Bide my Time.

I bide my time. Whenever shadows darken
Along my path, I do but lift my eyes,
And faith reveals fair shores beyond the skies,
And through earth's harsh, discordant sounds hearken
And hear divinest music from afar,
Sweet sounds from lands where half my loved ones are.
I bide—I bide my time.

I bide my time. Whatever woes assail me,
I know the strife is only for a day;
A Friend waits for me on the way,
A Friend too faithful and too true to fail me,
Who will bid all life's jarring turmoil cease,
And lead me on to realms of perfect peace.
I bide—I bide my time.

I bide my time. This conflict of resistance,
This drop of rapture in a cup of pain,
This wear and tear of body and of brain
But fits my spirit for the new existence
Which waits me in the happy by and by,
So, come what may, I'll lift my eyes, and cry:
I bide—I bide my time.
—Ella Wheeler Wilcox.

Dishonest Practice.

A few years ago a well-known financier died in New York. His family were overwhelmed with grief. He had been a faithful and tender husband and father. The servants of his household stood sobbing around the door of his chamber when he was dead. He had been always, they said, kind and just to them.

When the estate was settled there was not the claim of a penny against it from any tradesman. Butcher, baker, all persons whom he employed, had been paid cash day by day.

One of his maxims had been, "It is dishonest to owe a poor man for his labor. That is his capital. Pay him cash or allow him interest."

Yet this man, who in his individual dealings was scrupulously honest and kind, had gained his fortune by shrewd, remorseless management of a great corporation that controlled a monopoly, and fattened on the necessities of the people. The public was preyed upon by the monster as by some ravenous beast, and a whole community suffered that it might grow rich and powerful.

This man used to try to answer the reproaches of conscience by saying, with a laugh:

"I am not personally responsible. I keep my own hands clean. You must not look for a soul or conscience in a corporation."

His peculiar moral blindness is a common disease, and his method of reasoning a popular one.

Corporations, town councils, even school committees will be guilty of unjust, cruel and sometimes dishonest acts from which the individual members would turn with indignation in a private transaction. A merchant who would scorn to cheat a customer by adulterating his goods will join a corporation in watering stock, and thus, by enriching himself, will rob every ignorant purchaser who may afterward become a shareholder.

The corporation, it is true, has no soul of its own, but the soul of each member is responsible for its acts if he aids and approves them. He forgets, too, that there will come a day of reckoning when God will deal, not with rings, or clubs or firms, but with each man who has belonged to them.—Youth's Companion.

Boys that Succeed.

"A new boy came into our office to-day," said a wholesale grocery merchant to his wife at the supper table. "He was hired by the firm at the request of the senior member, who thought the boy gave promise of good things. But I feel sure that boy will be out of the office in less than a week."

"What makes you think so?"

Because the first thing he wanted to know was just exactly how much he was expected to do."

"Perhaps you will change your mind about him?"

"Perhaps I shall," replied the merchant; "but I don't think so."

Three days later the business man said to his wife: "About that boy you remember I mentioned two or three days ago. Well, he is the best boy that ever entered the store."

"How did you find that out?"

"In the easiest way in the world. The first morning after the boy began work he performed very faithfully and systematically the exact duties assigned which he had been so careful to have explained to him. When he had finished he came to me and said: 'Mr. H., I have finished all that work. Now what can I do?' I was a little surprised, but I gave him a little job of work, and forgot all about him until he came into my room with the question, 'What next?' That settled it for me. He was the first boy that ever entered our office who was willing and volunteered to do more than was assigned him. I predict a successful career for that boy as a business man."

Business men know capacity when they see it, and they make a note of it. Willingness to do more than the assigned task is the chief stepping-stones to commercial success.—Selected.

Failure and Success.

More than ninety per cent. of the men who go into business fail. This statement, while true, is misleading, because it seems to indicate that the men who are in business are the remaining ten per cent. This is not the case, for the reason that almost all of the successful men whom you may know have been, earlier in their careers, numbered among the more than ninety per cent. of failures. Young men are apt to be overconfident. They either think too highly of their own powers, or else they underestimate the difficulties which they presume to overcome. Hence they go into business without due preparation—and fail. The successful men are, as a rule, those who were big-brained enough to gather useful lessons from their experiences, but especially were they plucky and self confident enough to try again.

The founder of the Baltimore Sun, who died worth $20,000,000, was unable to make his first venture pay, and Charles A. Dana, the principal owner of the New York Sun, would probably now be a Chicago journalist instead of a famous New York one had his Chicago venture not proven a failure. The late Dr. Agnew, whose reputation as a surgeon was as wide as the world, and of whom you may have heard in connection with the illness of President Garfield, whose physician he was, tried the iron business, and failed so badly that for years his income as a surgeon went to pay his debts. Men, as well as boys and girls, have to "try, try again."—Harper's Young People.

Value of Even Teeth.

Speaking with distinctness and comfort depends much upon a full and even set of teeth. If they are crowded and irregular, or there is now and then one missing, it effects the voice at once, and is very annoying to others who are obliged to listen to it. Public speakers often fail to produce the effect they desire upon their hearers from this cause and are not conscious of it themselves. Nothing contributes more to the beauty of the features than a perfect, regular, clean set of teeth, while a neglected, diseased mouth disgusts every beholder. Such things are noticed nowadays much more than formerly and good teeth and a sweet breath are considered indispensable to every lady and gentleman.

Filling the teeth is the only means of preserving them when decay commences. The science of dentistry is now so far advanced that the skillful operator can save and restore the teeth even where they have been badly decayed and abscessed. Some wonderful cases have been presented in the last few years of teeth seemingly beyond the hope of saving, where the science and skill of modern dentistry has restored them again to usefulness, much to the joy and surprise of the patients. Fifty years ago the great study of the dentist was how to make artificial teeth; now, according to the Domestic Monthly, all the resources of science and art are brought to bear, and the whole force of dental education at the present day is centering upon the one great work of saving the natural teeth.—Exchange.

The Dude.

There are certain insects inhabiting the air which surrounds this mundane sphere whose existence has never been satisfactorily accounted for, so useless and pestiferous are they. In like manner it is beyond the ken of the average mortal to assign a good reason for the presence on this earth of that contemptible excrescence, the professional dude. Every one is familiar with his appearance, for he is omnipresent. Dudes throng our city streets. They carry their heads aloft and sniff the air. Their feeble mustaches are carefully waxed and curled. Their stiff standing collars reach unto their capacious ears. They swing huge gold-headed canes. They strut and amble with the air of kings. They pose in front of hotels and churches, and ogle every woman who chances to pass. What should be the attitude of the self respecting christian girl toward the silly, addle-pated creature we call a dude? What should be the reception accorded him by christian homes? Some dudes should be pitied, for they have not enough brains to be much else. Others have grown up in a social environment which gave them no opportunity to learn anything of a broader, more sensible, and more useful life. With others again it is but a boyish freak, out of which the victim will grow when a few more months have passed. Nevertheless, the dude should be persistently shunned by a sensible girl, and every attention from that source emphatically repelled until he learns to be a man. Better far the friendship of the young fellow who walks all day in the furrow. Better the companionship of the man whose hands have been made callous at the blacksmith's anvil or the carpenter's bench or with the miner's pick. A dude and a man are two different things.—Epworth Herald.

Webster was in college at fifteen, gave evidence of his great future before he was twenty five, and at thirty he was the peer of the ablest man in Congress.—Young Men's Era.

The Village Politician.

Sittin' on a cracker box, a barrel or a keg,
Chawin' on tobacker he has been obleeged to beg;
Whittlin' of a splinter while a workin' of his jaw,
Sayin' what a pity his opinions ain't the law;
Runnin' the hull country as 'twas never run before,
Turnin' out the rascals while he spits upon the floor;
Showin' of the President egzackly what to do,
Keepin' things in general from gittin' in a stew;
Grumblin' over Wall Street, monopoly, and work—
Wife at home a hoein' in the cornfield like a Turk;
Fig'rin' on the comin' nominations purty close,
Givin' to the other side a mighty sick'nin' dose;
Talkin' tariff and reform, McKinley and protection,
Swearin' that the earth won't move a peg before election;
Givin' lazy Congressmen a needed rakin' over,
Settin' there in Washington like well-fed pigs in clover;
Givin' Gould and Vanderbilt a pointer here and there,
Showin' just how surely one can be a millionaire;
Payin' off the nation's debt as easy as a wink,
Borrowin' a dime to get himself another drink.
Spankin' little Chile just to show her how it feels,
Sassin' back Great Britain for pesterin' our seals,
Tellin' of the Czar to let them Nihilists alone,
Helpin' Kaiser William to prop up his shaky throne,
Buildin' a great navy with an hour or two of guff,
Lettin' the hull world know that we're rabid, rude and rough;
Gettin' off his high horse, though, when home he goes to dinner,
Dodgin' of his creditors like an ordinary sinner;
Jumps to hear his first born yell, "You'd better watch out, dad!
Flour 'nd coffee's plum give out, 'nd mother's mighty mad."

To Kill Cockroaches.

A housekeeper who was recommended to try cucumber peeling as a remedy for cockroaches, strewed the floor with pieces of the peel cut not very thin, and watched the sequel. The pests covered the peel in a short time, so that it could not be seen, so voraciously were they engaged in sucking the poisonous moisture. The second night this was tried the number of cockroaches was reduced to a quarter, and none were left alive on the third night.—Rural Californian.

Christ at the Door.

A SERMON, PREACHED SUNDAY EVENING, JULY 10, 1892, AT UNION CHAPEL, MANCHESTER, BY THE REV. ALEXANDER MACLAREN, D. D.

"Behold! I stand at the door and knock: if any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with him, and he with me." —Rev. 3: 20.

Many of us are familiar, I dare say, with the devoutly imaginative rendering of the first part of these wonderful words which we owe to the genius of a living painter. In it we see the fast shut door, with rusted hinges, all overgrown with rank, poisonous weeds, which tell how long it has been closed. There stands, amid the night dews and the darkness, the patient Son of Man, one hand laid on the door, the other bearing a light, which may perchance flash through some of its chinks. In his face are love repelled, and pity all but wasted; in the touch of his hand are gentleness and authority.

But the picture pauses, of course, at the beginning of my text, and its sequel is quite as wonderful as its first part. "I will come in to him, and sup with him, and he with me." What can surpass such words as these? I venture to take this great text, and ask you to look with me at the three things that lie in it; the suppliant for admission; the door opened; the entrance and the feast.

1. Think, then, first of all, of that suppliant for admission.

I suppose that the briefest explanation of my text is sufficient. Who knocks? The exalted Christ. What is the door? This closed heart of man. What does he desire? Entrance. What are his knockings and his voice? All providences; all monitions of his Spirit in man's spirit and conscience; the direct invitations of his written or spoken word; in brief, whatsoever sways our hearts to yield to him and enthrone him. This is the meaning, in the fewest possible words, of the great utterance of my text.

Here is a revelation of a universal truth, applying to every man and woman on the face of the earth; but more especially and manifestly to those of us who live within the sound of Christ's gospel, and of the written revelations of his grace. True, my text was originally spoken in reference to the unworthy members of a little church of early believers in Asia Minor, but it passes far beyond the limits of the lukewarm Laodiceans to whom it was addressed. And the "any man" which follows is wide enough to warrant us in stretching out the representation as far as the bounds of humanity extend, and in believing that wherever there is a closed heart there is a knocking Christ, and that all men are lightened by that Light which came into the world.

Upon that I do not need to dwell, but I desire to enforce the individual bearing of the general truth upon our own consciences, and to come to each with this message—the saying is true about thee, and at the door of thy heart Jesus Christ stands, and there his gentle, mighty hand is laid, and on it the flashes of his light shine, and through the chinks of the unopened door of thy heart comes the beseeching voice, "Open! open unto me." A strange reversal of the attitudes of the great and of the lowly, of the giver and of the receiver, of the divine and of the human! Christ once said, "Knock and it shall be opened unto you." But he has taken the suppliant's place, and, standing by the side of each of us, he beseeches us that we let him bless us, and enter in for our rest.

So, then, there is here a revelation, not only of a universal truth, but a most tender and pathetic disclosure of Christ's yearning love to each of us. What do you call that emotion which more than anything else desires that a heart should open and let it enter? We call it love when we find it in one another. Surely it bears the same name when it is sublimed into all but infinitude, and yet is as individualising and specific as it is great and universal, as it is found in Jesus Christ. If it be true that he wants me, if it be true that in that great heart of his there are a thought and a wish about his relation to me, and mine to him, then, then, each of us is grasped by a love that is like our human love, only perfected and purified from all its weaknesses.

Now we sometimes feel, I am afraid, as if all that talk about the love which Jesus Christ has to each of us was scarcely a prose fact. There is a woeful lack of belief among us in the things that we profess to believe most. You are all ready to admit, when I preach it, that it is true that Jesus Christ loves us. Have you ever tried to realize it, and lay it upon your hearts, that the sweetness and astoundingness of it may soak into you, and change your whole being? Oh! listen, not to my poor, rough notes, but to his infinitely sweet and tender melody of voice, when he says to you, as if your eyes needed to be opened to perceive it, "Behold! I stand at the door and knock."

There is a revelation in the words, dear friends, of an infinite long-suffering and patience. The door has long been fastened; you and I have, like some lazy servant, thought that if we did not answer the knock the Knocker would go away when he was weary. But we have miscalculated the elasticity and the unfailingness of that patient Christ's love. Rejected, he abides; spurned, he returns. There are men and women in this chapel to-night who all their lives long have known that Jesus Christ coveted their love, and yearned for a place in their hearts, and have steeled themselves against the knowledge, or frittered it away by worldliness, or darkened it by sensuality and sin. And here they are again to night once more brought into the presence of that rejected, patient, wooing Lord, who courts them for their souls as if they were, which indeed they are, too precious to be lost, as long as there is a ghost of a chance that they may still listen to his voice. The patient Christ's wonderfulness of long-suffering may well bow us all in thankfulness and in penitence. How often has he tapped or thundered at the door of your heart, dear friends, and how often have you neglected to open? Is it not of the Lord's mercies that the rejected or neglected love is offered you once more, and the voice, so long deadened and deafened to your ears by the rush of passion, and the hurry of business, and the whispers of self, yet again appeals to you, as it does even through my poor translation of it?

And then, still further, in that thought of the suppliant waiting for admission there is the explanation for us all of a great many misunderstood facts in our experience. That sorrow that darkened your days and made your heart bleed, what was it but Christ's hand on the door? Those blessings which pour into your life day by day "beseech you, by the mercies of God, that ye yield yourselves living sacrifices." That unrest which dogs the steps of every man who has not found rest in Christ, what is it but the application of his hand to the obstinately-closed door? The stings of conscience, the movements of the Spirit, the definite proclamation of his word, even by such lips as mine, what are they all except his appeals to us? And this is the deepest meaning of joys and sorrows, of gifts and losses, of fulfilled and disappointed hopes. This is the meaning of the yearning of Christless hearts, of the stings of conscience which come to us all. "Behold! I stand at the door and knock!" If we understood better that all life was guided by Christ, and that Christ's guidance of life was guided by his desire that he should find a place in our hearts, we should less frequently wonder at sorrows, and should better understand our blessings.

The boy Samuel, lying sleeping before the light in the inner sanctuary, heard the voice of God and thought it was only the gray-bearded priest that spoke. We often make the same mistake, and confound the utterances of Christ himself with the speech of men. Recognize who it is that pleads with you; and do not fancy that when Christ speaks it is Eli that is calling; but say: "Speak, Lord! for thy servant heareth!" "Lift up your heads, O ye gates, even lift them up, ye everlasting doors, and the King of Glory shall come in."

2. And that leads me, secondly, to ask you to look at the door opened.

I need not enlarge upon what I have already suggested; the universality of the wide promise here—"If any man open the door;" but what I want rather to notice is that, according to this representation, "the door" has no handle outside, and is so hinged that it opens from within, outwards. Which, being taken out of metaphor and put into fact, means this; you are the only being that can open the door for Christ to come in. The whole responsibility, brother, of accepting or rejecting God's gracious word, which comes to you all in good faith, lies with yourself.

I am not going to plunge into theological puzzles, but I appeal to consciousness. You know as well as I do—better a great deal, for it is yourself that is in question—that at each time when your heart and conscience have been brought in contact with the offer of salvation through faith in Jesus Christ, if you had liked you could have opened the door and welcomed his entrance. And you know that nobody and nothing kept it fast except only yourself. "Ye will not come to me," said Christ, "that ye might have life." Men, indeed, do pile up such mountains of rubbish against the door that it cannot be opened, but it was they that put it there; and they are responsible if the hinges are so rusty that they will not move, or the doorway is so clogged that there is no room for it to keep open. Jesus Christ knocks, but Jesus Christ cannot break the door open. It lies in your hands to decide whether you will take or whether you will reject that which he brings.

The door is closed, and unless there be a definite act on your parts it will not be opened, and he will not enter. So we come to this, that to do nothing is to keep your Saviour outside; and that is the way in which most men that miss him do miss him.

I suppose there are very few of us who have ever been conscious of a definite act, by which, if I might adhere to the metaphor, we have laid hold of the door on the inside, and held it tight lest it should be opened. But, I fear me, there are many of my present hearers who have sat in the inner chamber, and heard the gracious hand on the outer panel, and have kept their hands folded and their feet still, and done nothing. Ah! brethren, to do nothing is to do the most dreadful of things, for it is to keep the shut door shut in the face of Christ. No passionate antagonism is needed, no vehement rejection, no intellectual denial of his truth and his promises. If you want to ruin yourselves, you have simply to do nothing! All the dismal consequences will necessarily follow.

"Well," you say, "but you are talking metaphors; let us come to plain facts. What do you want me to do?" I want you to listen to the message of an infinitely loving Christ who died on the cross to bear the sins of the whole world, including you and me; and who now lives, pleading with each of us from heaven that we will take by simple faith, and keep by holy obedience, the gift of eternal life which he offers, and he alone can give. The condition of his entrance is simple trust in him, as the Saviour of my soul. That is opening the door, and if you will do that, then, just as when you open the shutters, in comes the sunshine; just as when you lift the sluice in flows the crystal stream, into the slimy empty lock, so—I was going to say by gravitation, rather by the diffusive impulse that belongs to light, which is Christ—he will enter in wherever he is not shut out by unbelief and aversion of will.

3. And so that brings me to my last point—viz: the entrance and the feast.

My text is a metaphor, but the declaration that "if any man open the door" Jesus Christ "will come in to him," is not a metaphor, but is the very heart and centre of the gospel. "I will come in to him," dwell in him, be really incorporated in his being, or inspirited, if I may so say, in his spirit. Now you may think that that is far too recondite and lofty a thought to be easily grasped by ordinary people, but its very loftiness should recommend it to us. I, for my part, believe that there is no more prose fact in the whole world than the actual dwelling of Jesus Christ, the Son of God who is in heaven, in the spirits of the people that love him and trust him. And this is one great part of the gospel that I have to preach to you, that into our emptiness he will come with his fullness; that into our sinfulness he will come with his righteousness; that into our death he will come with his triumphant and immortal life; and he being in us and we in him, we shall be full and pure and live for ever, and be blessed with the blessedness of Jesus. So remember that embedded in the midst of the wonderful metaphor of my text lies the fact which is the very centre of the gospel hope, the dwelling of Jesus Christ in the hearts even of poor sinful creatures like you and me.

But it comes into view here only as the basis of the subsequent promises, and on these I can only touch very briefly, "I will come in to him and sup with him, and he with me." Well, that speaks to us in lovely, sympathetic language, of a close, familiar, happy communication between Christ and my poor self which shall make all life as a feast in company with him. We remember who is the mouthpiece of Jesus Christ here. It is the disciple who knew most of what quietness of blessedness, and serenity of adoring communion there were in leaning on Christ's breast at supper, casting back his head on that loving bosom; looking into those deep sad eyes, and asking questions which were sure of answer. And John, as he wrote down the words, "I will sup with him, and he with me," perhaps remembered that upper room where amidst all the bitter herbs, there was such strange joy and tranquility. But whether he did or no, may we not take the picture as suggesting to us the possibilities of loving fellowship, of quiet repose, of absolute satisfaction of all desires and needs, which will be ours if we open the door of our hearts by faith, and let Jesus Christ come in?

But, note, when he does come he comes as guest. "I will sup with him." "He shall have the honor of providing that of which I partake." Just as upon earth he said to the Samaritan woman, "Give me to drink," or sat at the table, at the modest village feast in Bethany, in honor of the miracle of a man raised from the dead, and smiled approval of Martha serving, as of Lazarus sitting at table, and of Mary anointing him, so the humble viands, the poor man's fare that our resources enable us to lay upon his table, are never too small or poor for him to delight in. This King feasts in the neatherd's cottage, and he will even condescend to turn the cakes. "I will sup with him." We cannot bring anything so coarse, so poor, so unworthy, if a drop or two of love has been sprinkled over it, but that it will be well-pleasing in his sight, and he himself will partake thereof. "He has gone to be a guest with a man that is a sinner."
